MARCH TELLS WHY WOOD MISSED A.E.F. SERVICE

Wilson Denies Army Hero Chance Go Overseas When Pershing Charges Disloyalty

Gen. March as Chief of the General Staff during the World War handled Gen. Leonard Wood's tempestuous and celebrated case. In the following article he relates for the first time the inside story of what happened to thwart Gen. Wood's high ambitions as to participation in the conflict—his aspiration to command the A.E.F. in France, and, when that was denied, his eagerness to lead a division at the front.

BY GEN. PEYTON C. MARCH, U.S.A. (Retired)

(Copyright, 1930, in all countries by the North American Newspaper Alliance. World rights reserved, including the Scandinavian. Reproduction in whole or in part prohibited.)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13 (Exclusive)—When the United States entered the war Maj.-Gen. Leonard Wood was, perhaps, the best-known officer of the American Army, internationally. The only other officer with any considerable international reputation was Maj.-Gen. George W. Goethals, and his reputation was as the builder of the Panama Canal and not solely as an army officer. Gen. Wood had been Chief of Staff of the Army and military Governor of Cuba, and had represented the United States at the grand maneuvers of foreign armies. Upon this background he had been drawn with large strokes by his friend, Theodore Roosevelt, as a great colonial administrator and as a man pre-eminently fitted by ability and training to be President of the United States.

Mr. Roosevelt had, in fact, suggested Gen. Wood's name for nomination by the Republican party in 1916, at the time of the nomination of Charles E. Hughes. And the personality of Roosevelt and his outspoken and vigorous language had carried his opinion of Gen. Wood around the world.

It was quite natural, therefore, for the Roosevelt following in America to expect that Gen. Wood would play a prominent part in America's war effort. In fact, he was their candidate to command the American forces in France. And this idea reached the Allies. Intimation that Gen. Wood was the man to command the American troops in France began to appear in British papers as well as in those of the United States.

As a matter of fact, Gen. Wood had done military work of great value during his career as Chief of Staff and afterward, and a great deal of it was due to the fact that he was not a trained soldier and had none of the inhibitions of that ilk.

The Regular Army man is trained, from the first, to keep his mouth shut, and play the game loyally for the best interests of the country, no matter what political party may be in power.

Gen. Wood traveled all over the country making speeches in favor

NEW ALIEN BAN GIVEN APPROVAL

House Committee Backs Bill Barring All Except Relatives for Two Years

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—A two-year suspension of all immigration except relatives who may enter until half of the existing quota is filled was tentatively approved today by the House Immigration Committee.

The final committee vote on the suspension bill sponsored by Chairman Johnson was set for Tuesday.

The bill devised by the committee applies to all immigration from the Philippines. Resident Commissioner Pedro Guevara today protested this exclusion but the committee voted to apply the restriction.

Where no quota applies as in the case of the Western Hemisphere and the Philippines, there would be no limit on the relatives allowed entry.

The 50 per cent quota limitation of relatives is designed to hold down immigration in countries where relatives now seeking entry equal the quota.

REVOLT DIES IN SPAIN

Rebels Killed in Sharp Battle

Revolutionists Pursued by Federal Troops Flee to Hill Region

Army Planes Sent to Crush Guerrillas Holding Out in Mountain Areas

MADRID, Dec. 13. (AP)—The Spanish government asserted tonight the insurrectionary movement in Northern Spain has been suppressed and declared twenty rebels were killed in a sharp battle today.

Loyal forces sweeping up from the Huesca garrison, backed by Federal troops from Saragossa met near Ayerbe the garrison which revolted yesterday at Jaca and bombarded them more than an hour with artillery shells.

PRISONERS TAKEN

The rebels were stated to have fled to the hills in disorder, abandoning numerous weapons and some motor trucks. About 100 were captured and others wounded.

"Public order everywhere else in Spain has not been impaired," the communique concluded.

While guerrilla warfare continued tonight through the rugged, snow-covered mountain passes of Aragon under the slopes of the Pyrenees, the government was taking additional steps to crush the rebellion.

Fourteen army planes took off from the army air field at Madrid for the north and new troops were being sent to strategic points.

NORMAL IN MADRID

Life in Madrid is normal tonight as it is in Barcelona, Valencia and other large cities of Spain. There was some street fighting in Lerida between police and groups of demonstrators and one suspected revolutionist was killed. Strong forces of civil guards were ordered out and all troops confined to their barracks.

Additional reports of the clashes at Saragossa indicated while the police were forced to charge crowds there and fire over their heads, there were no casualties.

Many Catholic students throughout Spain volunteered to do any sort of work to help break the sporadic strikes which have started.

COMMUNIQUE ISSUED

The Minister of the Interior tonight issued the following communique:

"The insurrectionary movement has been suppressed. The rebels, who were defeated by the Huesca garrison, supplemented by reinforcements from Saragossa, were forced to retire after some resistance, abandoning numerous weapons and some lorries. About 100 fugitives were captured. The rebels lost several casualties, which are estimated to include about twenty killed. Public order everywhere else in Spain has not been impaired."

FORCED TO FLEE

Another statement said when the defeated rebels turned back toward Jaca they were met by loyal troops, who had by this time taken over the city, and were forced to flee to the mountains and forests.

The Cabinet discussed the political situation at length tonight and said conditions are practically normal now in the Jaca-Huesca region, with the movement completely crushed and communications being rapidly re-established.

Government sources, while describing the rebel loss as heavy, said that only five Federals had been killed in the entire movement so far. These were civil guards, killed as the movement began yesterday. A statement issued as the Cabinet concluded its session said nothing about its losses in today's battle.

In the meantime, ambulances and surgeons are going over the region and still picking up wounded. Some of these have been placed in hospitals at Huesca and others at Saragossa.

Dispatches from Huesca say a

HINDENBURG MAIN FOE OF 'LIBEL FILM'

'All Quiet on the Western Front' Banned in Germany Due to President's Ire

(Copyright, 1930, by Press Publishing Company, New York World.)

BERLIN, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Paul Von Hindenburg, the venerable field marshal who was commander-in-chief of the German imperial armies during the World War and is now the beloved President of the twelve-year-old German republic, was the principal objector to the showing here of the American film, "All Quiet on the Western Front," it was learned tonight on good authority.

He threatened to resign if "this libel on the German soldier" was allowed to continue in motion-picture theaters here and as a result the government forbade further showings of the picture.

Knowledge of Hindenburg's opposition to the film leaked out today from the Center party, which unexpectedly favored suppression of the picture. Although it had at first been disposed to stand with the Socialists in support of it, the party reversed its decision when it learned how strongly Hindenburg felt on the subject.

Flyer Honored Posthumously

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—Mrs. Florence Shaw Page, widow of Capt. Arthur Page, U.S.M.C., today received the Distinguished Flying Cross awarded posthumously to her husband.

The medal was presented by Ernest Lee Jahncke, acting Secretary of the Navy, at a brief ceremony at the Navy Department. The citation said Page's pioneering and accomplishments in piloting a plane by instruments only contributed much toward the advancement of aeronautics.

Buddy Rogers, Screen Actor, Has Operation

TOLEDO (O.) Dec. 13. (AP)—Charles (Buddy) Rogers, motion-picture actor, is recovering in Toledo Hospital from an operation for acute appendicitis.

Physicians believe he will remain in the hospital until Christmas.

Nurses filled the corridor as the firm favorite was wheeled to the operating room today.

Telegraph and telephone wires brought messages of inquiry and wishes for a speedy recovery from Hollywood film figures.

Three Midwest Banks Closed

CHICAGO, Dec. 13. (AP) — Three more small Midwest banks closed their doors today.

In Iowa, the Ashta State Bank, with deposits of $125,000, was closed by its directors. This was the seventh bank failure in Iowa within a year.

In Illinois, the First National Bank of Sesser, capitalized at $25,000, failed to open for business; in Wisconsin, the State Bank of Elroy, with deposits of $460,000, was closed by the State Banking Department. Two other Wisconsin banks, closed for reorganization, were reopened.

Six banks in the Midwest failed yesterday.

Editor-Slayer Dies in Prison

OSSINING (N. Y.) Dec. 13. (AP) Charles Chapin, former newspaper editor, who was serving a life sentence in Sing Sing prison for killing his wife, died tonight.

Death occurred at 11:35 o'clock of pneumonia, following four years' illness with a complication of diseases. Mr. Chapin had remained in an upper room of the death house, refusing to go to the hospital.

RAIN TO END IN NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Respite Today Forecast With Signs Pointing to Drop in Temperature

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Cooler weather tomorrow will bring respite for approximately twenty-four hours from Northern California's most recent storm, the Weather Bureau predicted tonight. Rain was general throughout the territory from Central California north and snow fell in the mountains, Soda Springs measuring a net gain of two inches on the level for a mark of ten inches.

The drop in temperature will be accompanied by heavy frosts, Forecaster Bowie said. Rain is probable again Monday, but he does not expect any tomorrow.

Precipitation in inches reported by northern stations at 5 p.m. was:

Second Healy Jury Discharged

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (AP)—The second "silk stocking" jury to try Martin J. Healy, former Tammany leader, and Thomas T. Tommany, ex-Sheriff's clerk, on a charge of selling a city judgeship, failed to reach an agreement after more than thirteen hours' deliberation today and was discharged at 12:30 o'clock. A previous jury two weeks ago also failed to agree. Healy and Tommany are accused of accepting a $10,000 bribe for assisting George Ewald's appointment as city magistrate in 1927.

FRAUD QUIZ ENLARGED

Federal Inquiry Impending

Bankruptcy Action Aimed at Beesemyer Association in Crowded Day

State Examiner, Queried by Fitts, Says He Overlooked $8,000,000 Swindles

Federal investigation into the tangled affairs of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association, plundered of $8,000,000 by Gilbert H. Beesemyer, confessed embezzler, loomed last night as various State and county agencies continued to push their inquiry to determine where the money went and whether Beesemyer had accomplices.

Action by the United States court was automatically assured yesterday when creditors of the loan company filed against it an involuntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court. At the same time it was reported postal inspectors are investigating to determine whether Beesemyer was guilty of using the mails to defraud.

The petition in bankruptcy was filed after court had closed and the petitioners went to the home of United States District Judge Cosgrave to have a receiver appointed. Judge Cosgrave took the matter under submission until tomorrow morning.

CHIEF DEVELOPMENTS

The following developments were of paramount importance yesterday:

(1.) Dist.-Atty. Pitts questioned at length various employees of the State Building and Loan Commission as well as employees of Beesemyer to determine if possible how the defalcations could have gone on for five years undetected.

(2.) A score of subpoenas were drawn up for witnesses who will be taken before the grand jury Tuesday morning. These include Charles Whitmore, Commissioner of the State Building and Loan Department; directors of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association and executives of affiliated companies.

PERMITS SUSPENDED

(3.) Corporation Commission Garland announced that stock-selling permits to four companies which Beesemyer was interested have been suspended pending thorough investigation. These are United Underwriters, Investors of America, North American Bond and Mortgage Company and the Consolidated Supply Company. Garland also said a stock broker's license granted Beesemyer has been revoked.

(4.) The records of the Elmer Oil Company, in which Beesemyer supposedly lost $2,000,000, were obtained by Investigator Cline of the District Attorney's office yesterday under a subpoena duces tecum proceeding for examination by the grand jury. Bankruptcy proceedings also were filed against the oil company by the National Supply Company, Midwest, which asserts the oil company was liable for certain loans by Beesemyer.

(5.) A definite plan for reorganization of the Bank of Hollywood, which closed its doors last Monday and in the original organization of which Beesemyer was a central figure, will be presented to State Superintendent of Banks Wood tomorrow, it was announced last night by the bank's directors. Wood previously announced he would allow the bank a week to formulate a reorganization plan and, if acceptable, the bank might reopen.

MOORE FACES INQUIRY

With the books of the Elmer Oil Company in the hands of the authorities, detectives from the District Attorney's office began an investigation of Earl N. Moore, vice-president and manager of the oil company and close business associate of Beesemyer.

From what could be learned from Beesemyer's muddled accounts, more than $2,000,000 in cash went from the Guaranty Building and Loan Association to the oil company and the amount is thought to

PLAN DRAWN TO SAVE BANK

Directors of Hollywood Institution to Confer With Wood on Reorganization Scheme

Directors of the Bank of Hollywood, closed last Monday on the order of State Superintendent of Banks Wood, announced last night that a definite plan for the reorganization of the institution will be presented to Mr. Wood when he arrives from San Francisco tomorrow morning. Details of the proposed plan which the directors hope will result in the reopening of the bank will be made public within a few days, the officials said.

The bank's officers were in sessions made the suspension necessary in order to conserve the assets of the bank for the depositors. The special conditions were said to refer to a considerable amount of bank assets tied up in paper which, while good, could not be converted into cash rapidly enough to meet the sudden demand.

The officers of the Bank of Hollywood include G. R. Dexter, president; Samuel Kress, vice-president; Charles Lumpkin, vice-president; K. J. Koebig, vice-president; W. A. Tickle, cashier and secretary; Clifford Gillespie vice-president, and R. E. Horton, assistant cashier, together with Gilbert H. Beesemyer, now under indictment for the theft of funds fro mthe Guaranty association, who was chairman of the board.

The directors of the bank include John A. Avery, O. L. Bishop, C. B. Edington, Orville L. Routt, E. R. Smith, H. J. Strathearn and R. N. Stevenson.

DE LUXE PRISON PLANNED

New Federal Penitentiary to Have Inside Cell Blocks Only for Hardened Criminals

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—The Federal government is about to construct something new in the way of prisons, in which inside cell blocks will be only for the hardened criminal, while others may graduate into outside rooms lacking only a private bath.

Plans for this project, the new $3,500,000 Federal penitentiary to be located near Lewisburg, Pa., were made public today by the Department of Justice. Bids will be opened the 30th inst., the department said, and construction will be rushed to help relieve unemployment.

"The planners have not assumed," the department's statement said, "that every inmate is to be a wild beast who must be placed in a steel cage and removed entirely from any contact with his fellows, air and direct sunlight. They had concluded rather that there are different kinds of prisoners just as there are varying types of individuals."

The outside rooms will be for prisoners whose department indicates they will not "spend every hour planning how to escape." There will be barracks for those who can "live at peace with their fellows" and dormitories, subdivided into small wards, for those showing the greatest improvement of character.

"For the most advanced," the department added, "there are rooms which approximate the living quarters of normal persons."

One of the things the government intends to seek in its new project will be a conclusive answer to "statements frequently made that all criminals are mental defectives." As they enter, the 1200 prisoners will be examined by skilled Federal surgeons, and each inmate then sent either to a hospital or one of the stronger cells.

"He will be graduated through the various kinds of environments," the department said, "until he is at last sent out again into the community."

The project is to be the first on the prison program laid out by President Hoover. Before deciding upon its plans, Sanford Bates, Federal Director of Prisons, surveyed those both in the United States and Europe. He believes its cost will be saved in a few years through lower transportation charges than would be needed to penitentiaries at Leavenworth and Atlanta.

Why Maj.-Gen. Wood Was Made to Spend War Days at Home

POPULAR OFFICER CHAINED TO DESK BY PRESIDENT

Public Speeches Inflame Wrath of Regular Army Men and Bring Charges of Disloyalty

of preparedness, and he was about the first of the Army heads in our history who was capable of making a speech. Grant, who never did learn to speak readily, and who generally read four or five lines from a slip of paper, with great embarrassment in his oratorical utterances, seemed to be the model our Army officers followed.

Gen. Wood, having been educated at Harvard and trained to be a doctor and not a soldier, had none of this in him. He made speeches whenever he could find anyone to listen to him, and gradually built up a political following. Of course, the World War was to him his great opportunity. Every one of the big guns which the nation had participated had put the successful commander of the troops in the White House, and there was no likelihood, then, of the World War proving an exception. Furthermore, Gen. Wood was a man of ability and courage, and naturally would want to go to the front anyway.

In deciding upon the officer who was to command the American forces in France the choice was limited practically to the major-generals of the line, some half-dozen in number, and the choice, without going into details, immediately narrowed down to Maj.-Gen. Wood, the senior major-general before we entered the war, and Maj.-Gen. Pershing, who was then the junior major-general.

PERSHING SELECTED

Secretary Baker recommended Gen. Pershing over Gen. Wood to the President for this important duty, and his decision was largely affected by what he had seen personally of Gen. Wood's physical condition.

After the war with Spain, when Gen. Wood was in command of the district of Santiago in Cuba, in rising from his desk he struck his head against a sharp pointed spike which formed the lower part of a hanging lamp, and severely injured his skull. He had to have medical treatment, including operations, off and on for the rest of his life, due to this accident, and to the end he walked dragging one leg after him.

Secretary Baker, inspecting a camp commanded by General Wood, before the United States entered the war, was much impressed by Gen. Wood's physical condition during the inspection. Secretary Baker told me several times during our association in the War Department of his reaction to Gen. Wood's physical infirmities, and in a letter to me dated March 7, 1928, concerning his choice of Gen. Pershing over Gen. Wood to command the American Expeditionary Forces, he stated:

WOOD KEPT AT HOME

"I had never seen Pershing but I had seen Wood several times. The last time I saw Wood before I made the selection he had a sham battle for my benefit and walked with me up a little mountain to get a place to view the battle. While walking up there he panted and labored so obviously that I came to the conclusion that his health was bad, and when I later came to make the decision between Pershing and Wood, that recollection influenced the choice."

Gen. Pershing was accordingly chosen by the President, on Secretary Baker's recommendation, to command the troops in France, and Gen. Wood was assigned to command and train a division of troops at Fort Riley, Kan., for service in France, and, of course, expected to command the division when it was sent there.

When I received orders in France to return to the United States to take over the duties of Chief of Staff of the Army, I went from my headquarters at Valdahon to Paris, and there went over the whole situation from the American standpoint with Gen. Bliss at Versailles, and with Gen. Pershing, who came in from his headquarters at Chaumont to confer with me.

At one of these conferences Gen. Pershing brought up the matter of Gen. Wood. He told me at some length of Gen. Wood's lack of loyalty, which he illustrated by Wood's conduct on several occasions, and wound up by saying that the War Department had authorized him to return to the United States any officer or officers who for any cause did not fit into the military machine in France, and that if Gen. Wood was sent to France he would order him home, under the general authority given him.

My own attitude toward the matter was simply this: As long as we kept Gen. Pershing in command in France I proposed to back him with all the power of the office of Chief of Staff. After I had reached America and had taken over my new duties I received from Gen. Pershing the following memorandum on the subject of Gen. Wood, attached to a letter to me of February 24, 1918. In his letter Gen. Pershing referred to the memorandum as follows:

"Please find special confidential memorandum for you and the Secretary only."

PERSHING'S PRIVATE LETTER

The memorandum was as follows:

"With reference to a certain general, he is the same insubordinate man he has always been. His attitude toward the President is implied in his remarks in ordinary conversation, though always in an intangible way. His criticisms of the Secretary of War and the War Department administration are along the same line.

"While here, he has done a lot of talking around Paris and has had several discontented officers call on him. He has had his picture in the Paris Mail as 'America's Greatest Fighter,' and has been mentioned at different times as one who could reorganize the War Department as Chief of Staff or sit as American representative on the Supreme War Council. You already know of his talk in London, where he is said to have discredited the Army and the administration in the eyes of our Allies, as has already been reported to Washington.

"A prominent American widow, well known in Washington, recently visiting various camps as Y.M.C.A. representative, showed a prepared 'memorandum' which she said was given her by a general officer of high rank. It carried various criticisms, nearly all of which were touched upon by the general of high rank in conversation with various officers. The lady also suggested him as corps commander.

"He has posed as wanting to help by taking back word of our needs. He was promptly and very pointedly told that he was not to take any such action, nor would it be wise for him to go about talking to politicians. Also, that the present Chief of Staff at Washington was thoroughly familiar with the situation here.

"It seems high time that meddling political generals be put where they can do no harm. The physical condition of this one is sufficient warrant for action, and any honest board like the Arthur Board would declare him incapacitated at a glance. He drags his left leg worse than ever, and the sight of a lame man like this going about our Allied armies posing as 'America's Greatest' must have been anything but inspiring to our Allies.

"If the present is not oppertune for drastic action, on account of politics, it will come later no doubt, after the country gets over its excitement over what agitators seem to have stirred up."

UNFIT WEEDED OUT

The Arthur Board, to which Gen. Pershing referred, was a permanent board of medical officers of high rank, headed by Gen. Arthur of the Medical Corps, before whom were ordered for physical examination all the general officers of the Army to determine their fitness for field service in France.

General officers found unfit were either retired or placed on duty at training camps at home, where their experience could be utilized, depending on the degree of disability reported by the board. Gen. Wood had been ordered, like the rest, to be examined by the Arthur Board, and had been reported by that board as fit for service in France.

When Secretary Baker returned from France I took up the Wood case with him, telling him of my conversation with Pershing in Paris, and giving him Pershing's memorandum of February 24, 1918, quoted in the foregoing, to read.

I then said to the Secretary that in the ordinary case I would decide this question as a military matter, but that I believed it had a political side which made it desirable that the President should know about the case.

It was inevitable, in my opinion, that Mr. Roosevelt and his followers would attack President Wilson bitterly if I took the action I proposed, namely to support Pershing and use Gen. Wood only at home. Neither would it be possible to allay their ire by saying the Chief of Staff did it, or by saying nothing.

It was certain that the Democratic administration would be accused of disposing of a possible Republican candidate for the Presidency, and it might be that the President would wish under those circumstances to send Gen. Wood to France, in spite of the recommendation of his military advisers.

Secretary Baker agreed to all this and undertook to put the whole story up to President Wilson at an early date.

WOOD FORBIDDEN TO SAIL

I thereupon advised my chief of operations, Gen. Jervey, of the status of the matter, and told him to give me warning when Gen. Wood's division, which was being trained at Fort Riley, neared its turn on our schedule to be sent to France, in case the President had not sent over his decision before that time.

In due course, the division was reached, and Gen. Jervey notified me. I went into Secretary Baker's office and asked him what the President's conclusions were on the Wood case, telling him that in the absence of any instructions I proposed to wire Gen. Wood at once to remain on duty at his training camp when his division was directed to proceed to New York to sail to France.

Secretary Baker went over to the White House and in due time returned with a decision by the President supporting the military recommendation and retaining Gen. Wood for duty at home. I immediately gave orders for the necessary instructions to be wired to Gen. Wood at Fort Riley. Gen. Wood, however, preceded the division to New York, and proceeded from New York to Washington to contest the order.

He came to my office and sought an interview, which I accorded him. When he entered my room he was accompanied by an aide, whom I permitted to remain throughout the interview.

Gen. Wood acknowledged the receipt of the order keeping him in the United States, and asked if I had any objection to telling him whether it was based on physical disability. I told him that the Arthur Board had passed him physically.

I was standing, facing him, and I closed my fist and rapped him sharply on his chest and said: "There is nothing the matter with you physically."

He was a powerful, deep-chested man, an ex-football player and all-round athlete. It was a great pity about his leg, but that defect was not prohibitive in an officer of his rank, in the opinion of the Arthur Board.

Gen. Wood then asked me if I would tell him why he was not permitted to go to France. "I think you are entitled to know why," I replied. "Gen. Pershing has asked specifically that you be not sent to France, and the War Department is going to back him."

WOOD IN TEARS

Gen. Wood was taken completely aback at this revelation. It was clear to me that he had thought the decision was merely political, and my answer cut the ground from under him.

At first, he did not know what to say, but finally he asked me whether I would object to his telling some of his political friends on the Hill what I had said. I replied sharply, "What friends? You understand clearly that no back-fire on Gen. Pershing will be permitted, and you should understand, as a military officer of high rank and experience, that we must either support Gen. Pershing or relieve him, and we don't propose to relieve him." As I went on, Gen. Wood became more and more disturbed. Finally he asked:

"Is there any objection to my telling this to Senator Warren?"

As Senator Warren was Gen. Pershing's father-in-law, and a man of great common sense, I knew he would not be a party to any attack on Gen. Pershing, so I told Gen. Wood at once that he could quote what I had said to Senator Warren.

He then asked if he could see the President about the matter. I went into Secretary Baker's office, where there was a private wire to the White House, and the President fixed an hour that afternoon to see Gen. Wood.

The interview with the President was very painful. Gen. Wood found him courteous but firm in his conclusions and quite frank as to his reasons. Finding he could not move the President General Wood broke down and wept. Mr. Wilson, in telling afterward of the interview and Gen. Wood's emotion, said: "I never felt so sorry for anyone in my life."

As was inevitable an attempt was made to take this action into politics, but it got nowhere. The great adventure in which we were all engaged was so much greater than any individual that no one could make much political capital out of a personal grievance.

I have given the facts in this case in some detail, partly because there has been some controversy as to the facts and partly because in a book by George Creel he says of this incident:

"As I remember it the trouble arose from the fact that Gen. March treated the circumstance as one of military routine entirely, utterly failing to realize its political importance."

Nothing could be more ludicrously untrue than that statement.

WOOD'S STATUS TOLD

President Wilson himself put the capstone on the history of this episode in a letter to the editor of the Springfield Republican, which was not released until after Mr. Wilson's death. The letter follows:

The White House, Washington,
June 5, 1918

To the Editor of the Republican:

I hope you will not be surprised to know that I subscribed almost in its entirety to the inclosed editorial from the Republican.

I am keenly aware of and keenly sensitive to the implications which will be drawn out of the fact that I am not sending Gen. Wood to the other side, and I want personal friends like yourself upon whose approval I depend for my encouragement to know why I am not sending him.

In the first place I am not sending him because Gen. Pershing has said that he does not want him, and in the second place, Gen. Pershing's disinclination to have Gen. Wood is only too well founded. Wherever Gen. Wood goes there is controversy and conflict of judgment. On this side of the water we can take care of things of that sort because the fighting is not being done here, but it would be fatal to let it go on at or anywhere near the front.

I have had a great deal of experience with Gen. Wood. He is a man of unusual ability, but apparently absolutely unable to submit his judgment to those who are superior to him in command. I am sorry that his great ability cannot be made use of in France, but, at the same time, I am glad to say that it is being made very much use of in the training of soldiers on this side of the water, a task for which he is eminently fitted and which he is performing with diligence and success.

With sincere regard,
Faithfully,
(signed) WOODROW WILSON.

BILLINGS QUITS TEAM DEFENSE

and so-called martyrdom of Mooney. A direct indication of this was given at the recent Marysville union convention.

Disintegration of Mooney's long-standing czaristic direction of the unsuccessful effort to escape the penalty of the 1916 Preparedness Day parade bombing has been steady, but it has been held carefully under control lest it damage the cases after years of maneuvering had brought about the recent Supreme Court hearing through the medium of John MacDonald.

Unquestionably the adverse decision of the Supreme Court a second time brought the strained situation between the two to the breaking point and it has been expected the split would come at almost any time. Billings is known to have considered Mooney the stone in his path and to be convinced he, individually, never will have a chance as long as Mooney is tied to him.

Direct evidence of the split was forecast by the recent disagreement between Mooney and Mary Gallagher, secretary of the Mooney defense league. An attempt was made to cover that, but the resignation of the secretary several days later served only to verify it. Miss Gallagher and Mooney came to the parting of the ways because they could not agree on the manner of the "freedom fight" of the future. Billings and Mooney have broken for the same reason.

There have been persistent reports for some time that Billings would be willing to accept commutation of sentence, even with its implication of guilt, if he could get out of Folsom. Report has it that Billings might agree to clear some of the points surrounding the Preparedness Day parade bombing that are cloaked with an element of mystery in return for a commutation. Others argue Billings would not dare in fear of retaliation, but those closest to the situation feel that reprisals would not come from the source anticipated and Billings's determination to go it alone indicates a similar reaction on his part.

Governor-elect Rolph takes office in January and it would not be surprising if Billings makes overtures to the new Governor immediately after Rolph's accession to the executive chair.

A Test Every Man Past 40 Should Make

Medical authorities agree that 65 per cent of all men past middle age (many much younger) are afflicted with a disorder of the prostate gland. Aches in feet, legs and back, frequent nightly risings, sciatic pains are some of the signs—and now a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science has written a remarkably interesting free book that tells of other symptoms and just what they mean. No longer should a man approaching or past the prime of life be content to regard these pains and conditions as inevitable signs of approaching age. Already more than 50,000 men have used the amazing method described in this book, to restore their health and strength—and to restore the prostate gland to its proper functioning. Arrange immediately for this book. Call in person if possible, otherwise mail your request to the Electro Thermal Company, Dept. B-203, 303 Van Nuys Bldg., 210 West Seventh St., Los Angeles—the concern that is distributing this book for the author—it will be sent to you absolutely free without obligation. Entire North Dakota Farm Family Slaughtered

Killings Followed Row Over Chores

Father, Suspected of Share in Crime, Seized

WILLISTON (N. D.) Dec. 13. (AP)—Confessing to importunities of his brother and a minister, Charles Hagen, 20-year-old farmer, confessed today, his attorneys said, that he slew an entire family of seven February after a quarrel over farm chores.

Hagen's asserted admissions to his attorney, A. J. Knox, came after two days of almost continual questioning by authorities investigating the disappearance of the Albert B. Haven family from their farm near here and the insistence of his mother, the attorney and a soldier, that he "tell the truth."

Hagen, according to Knox, declared he shot Daniel Haven, 19 years of age, after a quarrel over chores about the barn on the Haven

The 3-year-old child was the next victim and finally a 3-months-old girl was clubbed to death with a rifle butt.

State's Attorney J. S. Taylor and other officials planned to file charges of first-degree murder against the youth whose story revealed one of the most brutal crimes in the State's history.

Meanwhile officials were checking Bannon's latest story.

The story said Bannon buried the bodies in the barn on the Haven farm, but later exhumed those of Mrs. Haven and the 3-year-old child. Mrs. Haven's body, he said, was hauled to a cave on his mother's farm near by, where searchers found parts of it late today. The bodies of the elder Haven, his two sons and the infant were recovered Thursday, but only parts of the 3-year-old child's body were found.

The Haven family had been missing since February 10, last, when young Bannon, with his father, James F. Bannon, took possession of the farm and represented themselves as tenants. The Havens, Bannon said, had moved to Oregon, but close friends of the family became apprehensive through failure to receive any word from them and started an inquiry.

TAKES ALL BLAME

Arrested on a charge of illegally disposing of property from the Haven farm, Bannon made conflicting statements and changed his story repeatedly, but was firm in declaring he knew nothing of the family's whereabouts. Later, however, he declared Mrs. Haven had slain the family in a fit of insanity and that he helped to bury the bodies.

Although young Bannon in his alleged confession declared he alone was responsible for the slayings, authorities maintained their search for the father of the youth, who disappeared six weeks ago.

AIRSHIPS TO CARRY CANNON

Great Britain Experiments With Recoil Device That Reduces Strain of Shock on Plane

LONDON, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Aerial artillery has arrived, declared the most sensational development ever made in airplane arms. Great Britain completed extended experiments on a heavy all-metal dreadnaught capable of carrying cannon firing shells.

At least one invention, particulars of which are as yet unrevealed, has enabled an experiment to be made in a new craft at the Napier airplane works. An announcement indicates it is an impact arrangement in the recoil which reduces the strain on the plane.

"Experiments are now being made in Great Britain with airplanes specially constructed for carrying guns and firing shells," a sparsely worded announcement reads. "Machine guns firing bullets are used at present as standard fighting armament in airplanes, but the advance in all-metal constructed planes and the invention of a special damping device to absorb the recoil in large cannon has led to the construction of a special Westland Napier gun plane which will be armed with a small shell-firing cannon."

STEEG ASSUMES TARDIEU'S POST

French Cabinet of Doubtful Strength Organized

Downfall Predicted on Its First Major Test

Ex-Premier's Backers Open Warfare Immediately

PARIS, Dec. 13. (AP)—Frenchmen of every shade of political belief were asking themselves tonight how long the Steeg government, completed today, will last.

After struggling with great difficulties, Senator Theodore Steeg presented the country with a Ministry to succeed the defeated one headed by Andre Tardieu. But there were plenty of political observers who doubted if the real trouble confronting the country had been solved by Steeg's success.

The new government rests solely on the Left and is in nowise a "concentration" or Republican government which most politicians say would be the only kind with a chance of long life.

Friends of former Premier Tardieu lost little time in declaring war on the new Cabinet and tonight two demands for interpolation on its policies had already been addressed to the President of the Chamber of Deputies.

Premier and Minister of Colonies—Theodore Steeg; Interior—Georges Leygues; Justice—Henri Cheron; Foreign Affairs—Aristide Briand; Finance—Louis Germain-Martin; Budget—Maurice Palmade; War—Louis Barthou; Marine—Albert Sarraut; Education—Camille Chautemps; Public Works—Edouard Daladier; Commerce—Louis Loucheur; Agriculture—Victor Boret; Labor—Edouard Grinda; Pensions—Robert Thoumyre; Air—Paul Painleve; Merchant Marine—Charles Danielou; Posts and Telegraph—Charles Georges Bonnet; Public Health—Correz Queuille.

The press of the Center and Right appeared almost unanimously opposed to Steeg. Leon Bailby, director of the newspaper Intransigeant, wrote this afternoon: "The government will fall on its first important debate in the Chamber as a castle of cards falls from a breeze. The crisis continues."

This opinion was accorded importance in Parliamentary circles as in such matters Bailby is considered independent.

The most favorable opinion was Senator Steeg might raise a feeble majority in the Chamber. In all events the country will have a government until Thursday, the date of the new ministry's first appearance before Parliament.

KELLOGG EXPLAINS WORLD UNCERTAINTY

BERLIN, Dec. 13. (AP)—World economic depression is the cause of prevailing political uncertainty in some countries, Frank B. Kellogg, former American Secretary of State, told press correspondents here today. He came here en route from Oslo, Norway, to New York. "Germany," he said, "has no monopoly of an economic crisis. Such a crisis is to be seen elsewhere but it will disappear and with it the factor of uncertainty in many countries."

Checks Declared Spurious; Hotel Asks Warrant

Air Transport Line Seeks Payment for Journey

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—To the odd and eventful life of Winifred Sackville Stone, former child prodigy, there was added today charges of issuing spurious checks amounting to about $1000, jumping her hotel bill and failing to pay for an airplane trip from San Francisco to Chicago.

The Fairmont Hotel Company asked for a warrant. It also is reported the Boeing Air Transport is seeking her because her $300 check for transportation was worthless.

Once famous for beauty and brains—she could speak eight languages and work differential calculus at 6 years of age, and as a young woman pronounced a perfect Grecian beauty—Mrs. Stoner was unfortunate in affairs of the heart. She married a self-styled count who turned out to be a confidence man and a second venture in matrimony ended in the divorce courts. She is the author of a number of books.

INDICTMENTS MADE IN BOMB MAILING

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13. (AP)—Indictments charging Henry Ilse and Thomas Boyle with malicious reckless possession and use of explosives were returned by the county grand jury today. The two men are held for an asserted attempt to bomb a Spokane building housing the Associated Press office and the Cowles Publishing Company. Bail was fixed at $10,000 bond or $5000 cash.

NEW YORK PAYS EINSTEIN HONOR

Walker and Butler Join to Extend Welcome

Tribute Accepted in Name of World's Scientists

Guard Displays Wonder at America's Greeting

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (AP)—Albert Einstein, monarch of the infinite realm of the mind, received today the highest honor the metropolis of the western world can pay.

He accepted the tribute, not for himself, but humbly, as the incomprehensibly popular symbol of hundreds of men of science — the illustrious and the obscure, the great and the lonely—working in laboratories and classrooms all around the earth.

THANKS VOICED

In a brief speech in his native German, after he had been eulogized by Mayor Walker and Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, he thanked New York for its formal welcome and said:

"I feel this reception is not for me personally, not as man to man, but as a recognition of all the scientific work that is being done the world over, not only by me, but others."

To a crowded Aldermanic reception chamber came the little gray-haired professor, who cannot understand why great masses of people to whom his theories are incomprehensible, insist on making him a popular idol.

"KEYS TO HEARTS"

Mayor Walker tried to explain it to him, while Einstein gazed at him shyly out of round, wondering eyes. The Mayor assured him New Yorkers "have a very profound appreciation of the contributions you have made to science, even if we don't understand them."

"You have the keys to our hearts," the Mayor said, "and to our imaginations. You have paid New York great distinction and a great honor, and we appreciate it the more because we know you dislike receptions."

As a "monarch of the mind, who rules over a territory not bounded by widespread seas, by high mountains, or by a conventional line, which separates peoples and divides languages," Prof. Einstein was introduced to the Mayor by Dr. Butler.

"I thought I'd be frightened," Prof. Einstein told newspaper men afterward, "but I was not. There was so much sincerity in it all, I felt perfectly at home."

APPEAL BROADCAST

An appeal to Jews of America not to be discouraged by "the difficulties which seem to face us at present in Palestine," was broadcast by Prof. Einstein today.

"Such experiences," he said, "are the tests of the Jewish people's will to live."

Asserting that "undoubtedly certain statements and measures, taken and pronounced by British officials, have been subject for just criticism," he added, however, "we must learn the lesson of what has recently happened."

He urged the Jews to cultivate relations with the Arab people to avoid for the future "those dangerous tensions which can be exploited for the purpose of provoking hostile action against us."

The address was under the auspices of Avukah, the American student Zionist Federation, and was carried over a National Broadcasting Company hook-up.

APPOINTED SENATOR FOR NORTH CAROLINA

Cameron Morrison

MORRISON GIVEN OVERMAN SEAT

North Carolina Governor Names Predecessor

Appointee Favored Smith and Fought Simmons

New Senator Supporter of Prohibition

SALISBURY (N. C.) Dec. 13. (AP) Gov. Gardiner late today appointed Cameron Morrison of Charlotte as United States Senator from North Carolina to succeed Senator Overman, who died yesterday.

Morrison was Governor of North Carolina from 1920 to 1924. It was during his term that the State's $150,000,000 good roads program was launched. He has never held other political office.

In 1928, after the Democratic convention nominated Alfred E. Smith for the Presidency, he vigorously supported the nominee, and clashed with Senator Simmons, whose colleague he will be for the remainder of this Congress.

When he was nominated for Governor, Morrison defeated the man who today made him Senator, in the Democratic primary.

Morrison had announced several weeks ago he intended to be a candidate for Senator Overman's seat in 1932.

By virtue of the circumstances, the newly appointed Senator will become senior Senator from North Carolina March 4, when Senator-elect Bailey of Raleigh, takes the seat now held by Senator Simmons, whom Bailey defeated in the June primary.

Bailey and Morrison fought shoulder to shoulder in the 1928 campaign in support of Gov. Smith. Both are supporters of prohibition. Morrison was a heavy contributor to Bailey's campaign fund in the Bailey-Simmons contest.

Morrison is 61 years of age and is an attorney with offices in Charlotte.

SIMPLICITY FEATURES OVERMAN FUNERAL

SALISBURY (N. C.) Dec. 13. (AP) Senator Overman's body was brought back to his native Salisbury today and interred in a flower-heaped grave in Chestnut Hill Cemetery.

Ten of his colleagues in the Senate, as many members of the House of Representatives, the great of North Carolina, and the humble who called him neighbor looked on in sorrow at his burial. There was no pomp, no outpouring of eulogies.

The body arrived this morning on a special train from Washington where last night the Senate gathered to do him final honor. The ducted at the grave.

SINCLAIR LEWIS BARS BABBITTRY

Author Refuses to Pose for News Photographers

Bounces Invader of Bedroom in Bowery Style

Cameraman Anxious to Snap Old Swedish Custom

STOCKHOLM, Dec. 13. (AP)—The red-headed ire of Sinclair Lewis was aroused twice by press photographers today—so much so that he threw one camera-snapper out of his hotel room.

This occurred this morning when the American winner of the Nobel prize for literature and his wife were offered their coffee in bed by two young girls. The girls wore crowns of lighted candles on their heads in compliance with an old Swedish custom of December 13, being called Luccia brides.

With the girls, however, a photographer slipped into the room. When Mr. Lewis detected this he jumped out of bed and threw the man out as if it were regular routine.

The program started with a concert and while two leading Swedish artists were performing a press photographer repeatedly set off flashes and aimed his camera at Lewis.

Throughout the affair the novelist had looked worn and moody, sitting at the table silently. At last he appeared to lose his temper because of the photographer's actions and sharply requested that the man be ejected.

WETHERBY-KAYSER SHOE COMPANY

715 So. Flower Street — 6334 Hollywood Blvd. — 727 South Broadway
Wilshire Shop, Ambassador Hotel — 476 E. Colorado, Pasadena

A GREAT MANY people are buying radio sets for Christmas and are at this time shopping in order that they may make an intelligent selection.

My purpose for making the following statement is to lay before you facts in a simple, straightforward, frank manner, and if possible to assist you in making a wise selection.

1. There is no better radio obtainable anywhere at any price than a Sparton Radio.

2. You have a selection in a price range from $77.50 for the Junior Model, up to $595.00 for the Ensemble, and regardless of which of the many models you may select you will obtain the unequalled Sparton quality and perfection of tone.

3. Back of all Sparton merchandise is the guarantee not alone of the dealer from whom it is purchased and this company, but also the Sparks-Withington Company with thirty years of sound manufacturing and merchandising success.

4. When you buy a Sparton Radio, whether it be a gift or for your own use, you have the feeling of pride and the knowledge that you have received full value for the dollars invested, and you do so with the positive assurance that the company manufacturing Sparton does not, and will not, depreciate it with price reductions next week or next month.

These statements are unvarnished, truthful facts, and remember, that only by comparison can you judge standard quality so "don't you buy a radio until you have seen and heard a Sparton."

SLUMP IN CHINA TRADE FEARED

Washington Looks for Loss With Increased Duties

Scope of Nationalist Tariff Program Undisclosed

Tobacco and Auto Exports Likely to Be Hard Hit

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—Seriously diminished American exports to China were feared here today as a result of expected heavy increases in duties on imports into China.

Little information has reached the State Department from American diplomatic and consular missions in China on the scope of the proposed increases adopted secretly by the Nationalist government. The increases will become effective either January 1 or February 1, next.

On the basis of reports so far received in Washington the impression among officials is the prices of American imports into China will be so increased that sales will fall, with a gradual lessening in the amounts of goods exported.

Tobacco, automobiles and accessories, which the United States exports to China in large quantities, are expected to be among the hardest-hit articles.

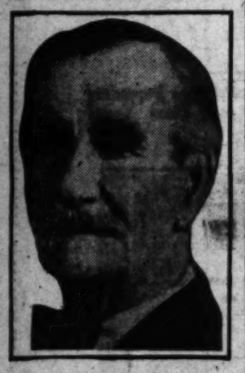
The United States in a treaty concluded in 1836 granted China complete tariff autonomy and the accompanying right to impose whatever duties the Nationalist government saw fit. The Chinese in return gave a tacit understanding they would endeavor to abolish the so-called "liken," or provincial tax, which for many years has constituted a virtual tribute by commerce to the military and civil leaders of the provinces. The Chinese then increased customs duties. The "liken" remained, however.

Some exporters have claimed a higher duty will make prices prohibitive. They predict a steady diminishing of American-Chinese trade.

State Department officials are doubtful any protest can be made against the duties, since they probably will not be found to be discriminatory against the United States.

LIFE WAS MISERY

J. S. SADLER says his life was "just one pill after another."



"My nights were misery on account of sleeplessness and as far as constipation goes, it seemed to me that my life for the past few years has just been 'one pill after another,' to say nothing of other medicines that gave me no lasting relief.

"I wouldn't take anything in the world for the good this wonderful new Sargon did for me! I now eat with a keen, hearty appetite; enjoy sound, restful sleep and have abundant strength and energy—just like I had twenty years ago.

"The Soft Mass Pills are simply wonderful for toning up the liver. They not only ended my constipation but they rid my system of poisons and seemed to be different from any other laxative I have ever taken."—J. S. Sadler, 1127 Ross St., St. Paul.

Trouble Looms, However, on Drought Aid Amount

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—Harmony is in prospect today for speedy completion of the emergency employment appropriation by Congress, but trouble is brewing over the insistence of the administration that drought relief be limited to $30,000,000.

Conferees of the Senate and House reached an agreement today in their difference over the public-improvements fund, deciding on $116,000,000.

The Senate proposed $118,000,000 and the house, $110,000,000.

POWER RESTORED

The conferees at a hurried and informal meeting also agreed to restore the provision in the House bill giving the President a free hand in spending the money. Senator Robinson, Arkansas, Democratic leader, who obtained elimination of this authority, said he will not fight it further at the cost of delay in getting the appropriation into the hands of unemployed workers.

While this offer of co-operation came from the ranks of the Senate, over in the House the Democrats were preparing to insist on the $60,000,000 voted by the Senate for drought relief.

Republican leaders in the House determined to seek on Monday adoption of the $30,000,000 bill reported by their Agriculture Committee, under a procedure permitting no amendments.

LEADERS WORRIED

The worried Senate leaders are looking ahead to the prospective contest Monday over the resolution of Senator Lafollette, Republican, Wisconsin, declaring the Senate in favor of relief even at the cost of increased taxes for the "wealthy."

The Republican leadership is uneasy lest another statement come from President Hoover on this question. The leaders have asked the President to consult on matters of tactics, pointing to their inability to defend his accusation early in the week that some Congressional relief advocates were "playing politics at the expense of human misery." They are trying to reshape a co-operation movement from the wreckage of the harmony program which followed that statement.

Enactment of the $116,000,000 appropriation, which will become available immediately for public improvements in all sections of the land, is expected early in the week.

DECISION EXPLAINED

In saying he will not press further against the provision giving the President freedom of action in spending the money, Senator Robinson said he still considers it "bad legislation." However, he said he had been informed House Democrats had been consulted and had agreed to it in view of the emergency nature of the bill.

The amendment of Senator Oddie, Republican, Nevada, adding $5,000,000 to the bill for construction of roads on unpreserved public domain and the Indian reservations was trimmed to $3,000,000 and that of Senator Hayden, Democrat, Arizona, providing $3,000,000 for highway construction in national forests was retained.

...other woman, whose only ...testimony is deafness, re-plied to questioning in a steady voice. As she left the stand Mrs. Curtis asked defense counsel, "Did I make you a good witness?" and Harry S. Glass of Denver replied, "Fine."

The grandmother related Mrs. Shepard had lived, with her prior to Mrs. Shepard's first marriage, and after her divorce, and she drank a great deal. Asked how much liquor Mrs. Shepard used she replied:

NUMEROUS FLASKS

"I could only judge by the number of flasks she hid in the cellar; they were numerous."

Mrs. Curtis testified Mrs. Shepard liked "hard liquor;" she desired to break the habit, but found it overwhelming and once wrote her she wished she were dead.

While the grandmother testified, Miss Grace Brandon, the San Antonio stenographer for love of whom the government contends Maj. Shepard poisoned his wife, sat in the District Attorney's office. She testified yesterday.

"I am glad that terrible ordeal is behind me," she said. "I cannot understand how people can swarm into a courtroom and listen to the lives of others being torn to pieces."

Mrs. Curtis was one of two defense witnesses who testified before adjournment of the trial until Monday following resting of the government's case. The other was Mrs. Joseph J. Fraser of Denver, wife of an army officer, who testified Mrs. Shepard was "a woman of moods."

TRIAL COSTLY

Judge Hopkins overruled a defense motion for a directed verdict of acquittal. The motion contended the government had not produced sufficient evidence to convict.

Continuation of the reading of a statement Maj. Shepard is asserted to have made to government agents at Denver March 17, 1930, was the major portion of the closing evidence of the government. Mrs. Jane Leader, stenographer, who took the statement, read from her stenographic notes many asserted assertions of the army officer which conflicted with prosecution testimony.

Court attaches estimated the government had spent approximately $100,000 preparing the case and between $50,000 and $75,000 since the trial began.

REDS RIOT ON FIFTH AVENUE

Police Reserves Called Out to Quell New York Demonstration Over Soviet Treason Trials

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (AP)—Uptown Fifth avenue with its Christmas shoppers and elite traffic was the scene of riot and struggle, jeers and cheers, for nearly an hour today as several hundred Communists attempted to carry banners of denunciation past the French Consulate in East Fortieth street.

Fights between bystanders and Communists broke out.

Augmented squads of police charged again and split the Communists into two groups. But the Communists united again and were attacked again. Each time they fell back into the crowd, only to emerge holding their tattered banners aloft.

Reserve police swung into the avenue and for the next twenty minutes the Reds were driven back and forth across the street. Here and there a woman attacked a policeman. Somebody threw an egg, which splattered against the wall of a department store.

Locating the main body of the Communists in the large crowd, the officers changed their tactics and drove them to Forty-first street by forming a line and using no violence. Gradually the Radicals melted into the shopping crowd and the riot was over. Several arrests were made.

The demonstration was an outgrowth of the recent treason trials in soviet Russia at which it was charged other powers were plotting against Russia. The call, printed in the Daily Worker, Communist organ, declared it would be "the workers' answer to the imperialists of France in the United States."

Banners, pulled from beneath coats as the Communists began their march into Fortieth street, denounced asserted imperialism of France, Great Britain and the United States.

The Red column reached a point between Fifth avenue and the Consulate when a handful of police charged, using clubs and fists and tearing down the signs.

Driven back to Fifth avenue, Reds again lifted their banners and broke into song. Traffic clogged as the street filled with crowds of curious.

ITALY'S SKYMEN ALL SET TO GO

Twelve Planes Tomorrow to Head for Brazil

Il Duce Wishes Best of Luck to Flight Leader

Trip of 6470 Miles Will Be Made by Stages

ORBETELLO (Italy) Dec. 13. (AP)—Twelve Italian seaplanes were tuned up tonight for the "pronto" (ready) that on Monday morning will send them off on the first stage of a 6470-mile flight to Rio de Janeiro.

Air Minister Italo Balbo, who will lead the adventurous journey, flew to Rome today to say good-by to Premier Mussolini, received the Duce's best wishes and returned to Orbetello to be with his colleagues, among whom are numbered some of Italy's most noted flyers.

FORTY-EIGHT MEN

Forty-eight men will participate, four to each plane.

The cruisers are Savoia-Marchetti two-pontoon monoplanes, each with tandem Fiat motors developing a total of 1120 horsepower. Propellers of the forward motors are two bladed, those in the rear, four-bladed.

The first stage of the flight, Orbetello to Cartagena, Spain, will cover 750 miles; the second, to Kunitra, Morocco, 437; the third, Kunitra, to Villa de Cisneros, Rio de Oro, 1000, and the fourth, to Bolama, Portuguese Guinea, 938.

LONGEST HOP

From Bolama the aviators will have their longest hop to Port Natal, Brazil, 1875 miles of ocean crossing. Port Natal to Bahia is 625 miles, and from Bahia to Rio de Janeiro, the final destination, is another 844.

It is estimated the flight will require about sixty-five flying hours, with the planes averaging about 100 miles an hour.

NEW PIANO DOUBLES SCALE

Exotic Effects Produced in Recital Given With Quarter-Tone Instrument

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (AP)—There were twenty-four notes in the scale as Hans Barth played the piano in a triple-header recital at Carnegie Hall today, featuring the new quarter-tone piano.

Barth opened with the harpsichord playing compositions dating back to 1653, moved then to the pianoforte with a conventional program topped with Chopin and finished with an ultramodern exhibition of versatility on the quarter-tone piano.

The new instrument, which divides the regular scale of twelve notes into twenty-four, resembles an ordinary concert grand except that a second keyboard and a second set of strings are set above the others.

Barth used two numbers of his own and a prelude by George Gershwin to demonstrate the new type of music. The Gershwin number which was the only one apparently familiar to the audience in its conventional half-note form, sounded strangely and with more than a suggestion of dissonance as played in quarter-tones. The Barth numbers which, unlike the Gershwin prelude, were composed with the new instrument definitely in mind, had an exotic, sometimes weird, entity, but quarter-tone runs had a tinkling, pleasant quality, and the audience was unwilling to permit the demonstration to end.

As the program notes explained, the musical ear, attuned by generations to the half-tone division of the scale, had difficulty in adjusting itself to the still further cleaving of tone.

No attempt was made at experiments in tempo, the pianist placing all his emphasis upon tonal structures and leaving to his audience a contemplation of the compositional possibilities of a scale that doubles the number of pianoforte notes.

M'NINCH FACES ROBINSON'S FIRE

Arkansan Against Selection for Power Board

Choice Declared Violation of Spirit of Law

Democrats, However, Not United on Issue

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—Opposition to the confirmation of Frank R. McNinch of North Carolina to the Power Commission was voiced today by Senator Robinson, Arkansas, Democratic leader.

Robinson indicated it is his position the appointment of McNinch, who voted for President Hoover in 1928, violates the spirit of the law requiring not more than three of the five members shall be from the same party.

McNinch is one of the first Hoover-Democrats to become involved in a controversy over appointment. However, the Democrats are not united on the issue. Senator Wheeler, Democrat, Montana, a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, announced he is inclined to support the nominee.

OIL POLICY REHEARING PLEA FAILS

Way Left Open, However, for Supreme Court Rule on Wilbur's Program

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—The application of Roy G. Barton of Las Cruces, N. M., for a rehearing of his petition involving President Hoover's oil conservation policy was denied today by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. The court made provision, however, for counsel to apply to the Supreme Court for a writ of review.

A majority opinion of the Appellate Court had sustained the action of Secretary Wilbur in rejecting 5000 pending applications for permit to prospect for oil and gas on government domain.

Justice Orsdel filed a dissenting opinion, contending a statement of a proposed policy in a press interview was not such a proclamation as would form the basis of a withdrawal of public lands from exploration.

Two justices of the lower court had granted the mandamus against Secretary Wilbur but the Appellate Court reversed that action.

Chinese Wins Point in Killing

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Persistent efforts of friends of Lui Fook, aged Chinese houseboy charged with the murder of Mrs. Rosetta Baker, wealthy patron of the drama, to convince police Lui is the victim of a planted evidence plot, gained a point today when Autopsy Surgeon Moody expressed the opinion Mrs. Baker's chest was crushed and she was strangled to death by a man with far greater strength than is possessed by the diminutive 63-year-old Chinese, and additionally by undenied reports police are searching for another person, either as an accomplice or the actual principal.

RUSSIA FACING CHOICE OF SLAVERY OR REVOLT

Stalin Sets Out to Put His People Under Rigid Labor Militarism to Save Five-Year Plan

BY EUGENE J. YOUNG

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Once more the Russian debate is attracting the attention of the civilized world. The Communist dictatorship has opened the country to survey by outside eyes in a most unexpected manner and to a large extent has freed the outside observers from censorship. British, American, German and other journalists and travelers have flocked into the country and have told what they have seen. Stalin has given interviews for almost the first time in his career and other Communist officials have been presenting their case for world inspection, including the remarkable treason trial at Moscow.

There is a purpose behind all this. The Red dictatorship, whatever may be its errors in practice, always carefully considers and takes judgment on any matter of policy. It has chosen in this case to try to guide the public mind in Russia and the mind of the world outside toward some conclusion. In the debate which has ensued anyone is entitled to take an individual view of what the intent of Moscow is. But there are certain factors which may be analyzed in cold blood that may help in clarifying the situation.

COMPETITION LOOMS

From the mass of observations printed in this country and abroad and taken from all the various viewspoints this balance can be fairly struck:

In the primary fields of industry the five-year plan is making undoubted progress and is working toward real success. In farming, lumbering, mining, oil production and electricity dependent on water power the world is to be confronted with some real and dangerous competition.

In the conduct of manufacturing calling for skilled labor and direction there is the utmost confusion and inefficiency, which even the help of American and other experts has not overcome; and there is now admission that the five-year plan must be extended into a ten-year plan and then into a twenty-five-year plan.

In transport, the railroads, already badly worn out, are rapidly breaking down under attempts to overload them; and it will take many years to put them in shape.

In finance the paper rouble is fast dropping in value despite decrees to keep it stable; and foreign credits have dried up so that the dictatorship can get foreign goods only at the sacrifice of exports of primary things like wheat, oil and minerals.

CONDITIONS TERRIBLE

Most important of all, living conditions are terrible. That is the testimony of the Moscow press as well as the outside observers. Maxim Nada, sent to America by the soviets in their trade delegation, admits that "In soviet provincial industrial centers two and three families live in one room. At the best it will take the soviet government twenty-five years to house its workers."

Black bread, which even friendly inquirers call "horrible," cabbage or barley soup and salt fish form the main diet of even the favored workers in some of the best factory districts; and these are served in community eating places which are dirty and fly-ridden. Other food is scarce, seldom to be had at the government shops and then only by waiting in line long hours. What can be bought from bootleggers costs extravagant sums, such as butter at $4.50 a pound.

In a cold country new shoes are a luxury seldom to be purchased and old ones can be repaired only after waits of weeks. Textiles are almost as scarce and so badly made that they soon fall apart. Fuel for heating comes in small quantities and often not at all.

These are conditions under which even the favored workers have to suffer. The masses who are outside the Communist party—and it contains less than one-twentieth of the population—are even worse off.

DUMPING QUESTION

It was the design of the authors of the five-year plan to hasten production of the primary products and with them to pay for the machinery and expert help so necessary in putting together the great industrial machine which was first to supply the needs of the country and then to invade the capitalistic world. This scheme has both succeeded and failed.

No doubt the co-operative farms have brought up hugely the supply of wheat and other grains. That was to be expected when modern methods were applied, with the help of modern machinery, in a fertile country which theretofore had farmed in a primitive fashion. But the surplus wheat found a world surplus which will continue indefinitely and had to be dumped at prices far below what the soviet expected. Still higher production along these lines will only beat down prices further.

In oil there is the same condition. The surplus has been thrown on a glutted market at low prices for forced sales and has not brought the expected returns.

Lumber and minerals are now reaching the world market and for them there is a demand which might bring the expected returns except for one factor. The dumping of wheat and oil has frightened other nations and embargoes are going up which are compelling the soviets to dump in limited markets and take low prices. America is following the embargo lead of France by decreeing an embargo on convict-produced imports; and the importer must prove that the Russian lumber and minerals are not produced by forced labor.

So even where there is success the return is far below expectations.

INDUSTRIES TOTTER

In the matter of the great industries, which were to be pushed to heavy production within the space of two-three-four and five years, the record is tragic. The soviet press, the treason trial, the outside observers all give details which fully back up this statement.

The great tractor plant near Stalingrad, prize exhibit of the new industry, is turning out less than fifteen tractors a day instead of the sixty now called for because of lack of steel for construction and production; and is in such confusion that Americans say it must be completely reorganized and have a stronger management. The motor works in Leningrad are so badly off that Americans suggest they be shut down to cure the confusion. The tractor plant in the Urals is held up for lack of construction materials.

The vast steel works at Magnitogorsk in the Urals are held back for lack of materials. They are distant from ore and coal supplies and no proper rail facilities have been provided.

Similar troubles are found in almost all the great projects. Where they have been running, managements and workers have been inefficient, costly high-power machinery has been used unwisely and without proper care and has been ruined. In many cases the workers have been too careless even to supply oil to these machines and have burnt them up. This latter factor extends to the use of tractors and automobiles. The farm tractors are used so hard they are expected to have a life of only two years instead of five or six or more.

GRIDIRON CLUB FROLIC GIVEN

Satire Marks Portrayals of Political Notables

Hoover, Raskob, Fess and Others "Toasted"

Prohibition Also Comes in for Attention

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—Broad humor joined song and satire at the annual December dinner of the Gridiron Club tonight as newspaper men painted prominent persons and big events on the canvas of caricature.

President Hoover and the club's other distinguished guests were called upon to banish the cares of state and look lightly upon the foibles of public affairs.

The fun making was launched with a terrific crash of falling crockery sobbing through the banquet hall. A member rushed forward and explained to President Charles G. Groves of the Boston Globe the crash was "only the American voter registering Mr. Hoover at the polls November 4."

PRESIDENT SPEAKS

The President had his opportunity to speak his mind freely before the evening was over, but those present knew what he meant. An old established rule is: "Funerals never are present at Gridiron Club dinners." Senator Robinson, Democratic floor leader, was the only other speaker.

Senator Watson, chairman of the Republican National Committee, was lampooned on the field of Waterloo in the guise of Napoleon Bonaparte, astride a restive horse, "Volstead," riding to the front just in time to receive returns of the November elections. With a farewell to his army, he promised to get what were termed his beaten followers jobs as ambassadors and consuls. He assured them the "old flag" was not dead, but never surrenders—only pay roll."

RASKOB PORTRAYED

Chairman Raskob of the Democratic National Committee, portrayed as a fairy godmother, touched the disheveled Cinderella with a magic wand to have her doff her rags and step forth royally clad as a symbol of "rejuvenated Democracy." The wand was topped with a huge dollar sign.

Prohibition drew attention in a song entitled, "Out Where the West Begins," and in a travesty, "Oh, Susan, Save Me Che-Ild." "Dr. Izzy Gluam" and Mrs. Mabel Willebrandt with her grape concentrate were represented as offering to save the "Che-Ild," but the Anti-Saloon League and the W.C.T.U. quickly suspected their intentions.

An offer by Miss Prosperity to sing for a benefit performance for the "Unemployed Lameducks" of Congress was rejected when it was learned the young lady had a song which caused her to pronounce the name "Myth Prosperity."

BARNUM OUTDONE

Charles Michaelson, publicity director of the Democratic National Committee, in a brilliant coronation ceremonies, was crowned "King Log, the Bombardier of Blah, Originator and Grand Deviser of the Democratic Interview and the Mahatma of Mimeographs."

A musical spectacle delineated the revolutionary activity in many parts of the world. The chief spokesman of the "Revolutionists" who assembled from Latin-America, Germany, Russia, China and the United States, warmly thanked the member portraying Representative Hamilton Fish, chairman of the congressional committee investigating Communist activities, for his services "in behalf of the cause."

COOLIDGE AT LABORS

Former President Coolidge, in his famous workshop, was represented as adding three more words to his already terse to make his column "an open book."

However, the columnist soon was recognized as Mark Poote, Washington correspondent of the Grand Rapids and other Michigan newspapers. He was formally welcomed into the club as a new member.

Major G. Hayden of the Detroit Press was elected president of the club for the coming year; Walker L. Reed of the Cleveland Plain-Dealer, vice-president; J. Hardy Cunningham of Washington, D. C., secretary, and J. Fred Essary of the Baltimore Sun, treasurer.

Honesty Helps Needy Family

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (AP)—Mrs. Robin Marshall Field has $7500 in cash, little Mary Donoghue has a dirty cheek and the world looks brighter.

Mary is the 8-year-old daughter of an unemployed laborer.

Her father, Thomas Donoghue, returned to Mrs. Field a bag of money which she lost as she stepped from her car in front of her East Eighty-sixth-street residence. Mary found them in a stroll to Central Park. An advertisement located the owner.

The insurance company sent the child in Mary with a compliment for her honesty and a wish for a merry Christmas.

EDUCATED CZECHS BID FOR HANG MAN POST

PRAGUE (Czecho-Slovakia) Dec. 13. (AP)—Several men of university education were found today to be among a hundred applicants for the post of state hangman, made vacant through dismissal of the former executioner, Broumarsky. The latter was discharged for divulging secrets to the press.

PACIFIC PARLEY WILL SEEK UNIFORM LAWS

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13. (AP)—The object of launching a movement to obtain uniformity of state legislation a conference of representatives of five far western states will be held here Friday and Saturday. The meeting was called by Percy E. Quinn, chairman of the motor vehicle conference of California.

CAPITAL'S "DEB" HAS GAY DEBUT

Katrina McCormick Scores at Dazzling Party

Hour of Hand-Shaking Fails to Dampen Spirit

Mrs. Gann and Others Show Fashion's Latest

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—Katrina McCormick came out today—came out with an individualism strong enough to shine through her own dazzling debut party.

She had announced aforetime, with characteristic frankness, she expected to be bored. Horseshows were to be preferred to fashionable teas, she said.

But Katrina McCormick is too full of life to be bored. After more than an hour of handshaking she stretched tired muscles like an athlete, teased her arm bouquet of gardenias clear across the room, and danced with as much dash as she ever displayed when winning a riding prize.

Newest notes of fashion put in their initial appearance. Mrs. Dolly Gann appeared at her statuesque best in a hat swept by an ostrich plume. Its tip touched her cheek, and she wore a fetching nose veil.

Ostrich feathers also made picturesque the smart brown broad-brimmed hat worn by Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, cousin of Mrs. McCormick, countess by marriage and newspaper editor by choice.

In Parisian toque, pure white, with scarf to match, contrasting with a gown of black, Representative Ruth Bryan Owen appeared. Mrs. James J. Davis also was white-hatted.

The debs wore very long dresses with very short and tight sleeves, fur-edged—or the smart new Russian blouses.

HER COMING-OUT PROVES TRIUMPH

ROLPH BUDGET TO SET RECORD

Will Exceed $249,000,000 Young Expenditure

Humanitarian Agencies Will Be Liberally Supplied

Vandegrift to Complete Work by Christmas

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Gov.-elect Rolph's first State budget to cover the biennium, 1931 to 1933, will exceed the $249,000,000 Young budget of 1929, Rolland A. Vandegrift, budget maker for the new Governor, announced today.

However, Vandegrift said the percentage of increase in Rolph's budget will be no greater than the average increase of past years made necessary by the growth of the State.

Rolph has instructed Vandegrift, the latter said, to provide liberally for all humanitarian agencies of the government and to give the other departments appropriations that will be adequate to meet their growing needs without adding to the burden of the taxpayers.

Vandegrift has had several conferences with Rolph on the budget and he hopes to have it in shape for the new executive before Christmas. Hearings are still being held by Vandegrift at the Capitol.

WESTERN UNION 'GIRL' NO BEAUTY

Robot Message Receiver's Smart, Though

Calls Idle Operator, if Any, or Notifies Chief

Red, Green and White Eyes Wink Out Signals

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (AP)—The new supervisor of phoned telegrams in the Western Union office is an odd-looking sort, with one green and one red eye and a white light where the nose ought to be.

But when it comes to thinking fast, company officials said tonight, the brightest telephone operator isn't in it.

Robot's the name. "She" is a small cabinet connected with a roomful of tangled wires, switches and paraphernalia.

It took engineers two years to build the thing and would take a layman as long to describe it. Its purpose is to speed up the telephoning of telegrams. It does it by taking calls from prospective customers and passing them on to a selected receiving operator in a large roomful of girls.

The robot looks the room over for a girl who isn't busy and holds the line if all are occupied. But if the wait gets too lengthy it signals to the personnel chief, "For goodness sake send down more operators," or signs to that effect. The average call now takes only a second, company officials said.

DAUGHTER OF RAIL CHIEF SUES MATE

Mrs. Margaret Budd Osborne

MINNEAPOLIS, Dec. 13. (AP)—A petition for divorce was filed in District Court today by Mrs. Margaret Budd Osborne, daughter of Rolph Budd, of St. Paul, president of the Great Northern Railway.

The action is against Willis W. Osborne, Minneapolis securities investment broker, to whom she was married January 2, last, in New York. The petition listing the complaints was removed after being recorded.

Mrs. Osborne's first marriage, to John Campbell, Cloquet, Minn., was dissolved by divorce in 1928, a year after the wedding.

Prisoner Burns in Padded Cell

FRAMINGHAM (Mass.) Dec. 13. (AP)—A prisoner burned to death tonight in the padded cell of the police station. He was Charles Despeaux, 23 years of age, arrested earlier in the night on a charge of drunkenness.

His cries attracted the attention to his blazing cell and Capt. Thomas Barnicle and Special Officer Thomas Goyne were badly burned trying to reach him. Police expressed the belief Despeaux had a hidden match on his person.

Nearly $2,000,000,000 to Be Involved in Financing

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—Nearly $2,000,000,000 will travel the financial roads through the Treasury next week and when the dust has settled $359,000,000 of the amount will be locked in government coffers.

In three days the various payments into the treasury will total $1,031,000,000 while expenditures will amount to $672,000,000.

The immense business of those days, December 15, 16 and 17, is due to the December financing, collection of the third quarter's payment of income taxes, payment of maturing obligations, receipt of war-debt payments from foreign governments, and payment of interest on the public debt.

Government experts hope the final income-tax payments on 1929 income, which were reduced 1 per cent, will total $580,000,000.

This would bring the total collection of this sort of revenue for the fiscal year to approximately $1,217,000,000 and for the calendar year on 1929 incomes to approximately $2,105,000,000. The collections for the fiscal year to date have dropped off $61,000,000 as compared with the same period last year to a total of $657,000,000.

Money coming into the Treasury in addition to that from the income taxes will be $428,000,000 from the sale of two issues of Treasury certificates of indebtedness and $123,000,000 from foreign nations in payment on the principal and interest on their war debts. Of the war-debt payments, $31,000,000 is on principal and must be devoted to reduction of the public debt while $92,000,000 of interest can be used for general expenditures.

On the outgoing side of the ledger the government has to meet $480,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness, $90,000,000 interest on the public debt and $102,000,00.

FEDERAL ACTION IN FRAUD LOOMS

Bankruptcy Action Aimed at Beesemyer Concern

Use of Mails Possibly May Play Part in Case

State Examiner Quizzed on Overlooking Swindle

have been expended by Moore in a drilling program.

According to the authorities, Moore will be asked to explain for what the sum was spent and how much of it he received. Certain matters disclosed in the books of the oil company will also have to be explained by Moore, according to Dist.-Atty. Fitts.

EXAMINER QUIZZED

That he must have overlooked the entries if there was any written record of the $8,000,000 misappropriated by Beesemyer was the statement made at the District Attorney's office yesterday by C. C. Barnes, who for the past several years has examined the files of the plundered company for the State Building and Loan Commission.

Barnes's statement was made after he was brought face to face with Miss Ethel Flanigan, head bookkeeper of the institution, and Mary Wilmer, Beesemyer's private secretary. Miss Flanigan made the point-blank assertion that figures of the overdraft appeared plainly on the "tape" of investors' deposits which was regularly provided to the examiner from the Building and Loan Commission.

"If the figures were there it must have been an oversight on my part," declared Barnes, when he talked to newspaper men after emerging from Fitts's office. "We simply didn't notice them."

"Would you say that you gave the company's books a thorough examination?"

"No, I didn't say that; I said we just examined them."

Barnes has had the Guaranty Building and Loan Company under his jurisdiction since May, 1928. He made his last examination about eight months ago. Last June, State officers said, he asked to be transferred to the State Department of Finance. Milton O. Shaw, brought here from San Francisco to take Barnes's place, discovered the huge deficit almost immediately after he began work on the loan company's books last Monday.

Questioning of Barnes, C. W. Vaught, Miss Flanigan and Miss Wilmer occupied the District Attorney's staff the larger part of yesterday morning, after which Dist.-Atty. Fitts announced that probably no more arrests will be made over the week-end.

GIRL RELEASED

From outside the District Attorney's office, however, came reports of additional action. S. S. Hahn, attorney, announced he has been retained by a group of forty investors who proposed to proceed against State officials as being technically responsible for allowing Beesemyer's defalcation. Hahn said a meeting of investors will be held in his office tomorrow.

Whether Rupert L. Fleury, vice-president of the defunct company, who was arrested Friday night after admitting he knew of Beesemyer's activities, is to be held permanently probably will be determined Tuesday when the grand jury meets.

"Fleury and all these other witnesses will be taken before the grand jury for whatever action that body may see fit," stated Fitts yesterday.

The Flanigan girl, taken into technical custody Friday, was released yesterday on assurance that she will be ready to go before the grand jury Tuesday.

The bankruptcy petition was filed against the loan association by Arnold H. Lane, who listed claims of $22,000; Pauline Pahl, $2467, and Hannah T. Lande and Elizabeth Lande, $1400. They ask that the company be adjudged in bankruptcy on the following grounds:

(1.) On the 12th inst., Charles A. Whitmore, State Building and Loan Commissioner, took charge as trustee.

(2.) That for the last four months, prior to the filing of petition, money has been paid by the association to favorite creditors.

(3.) That Gilbert H. Beesemyer is believed to have embezzled thousands of dollars from stockholders.

In the bankruptcy petition filed by the National Supply Company against the Elmer Oil Company, the former asserts that the defendant company is liable for certain loans advanced by Beesemyer, listing claims aggregating $4000 and setting forth that the oil company had interest in five Venice oil fields, four at Santa Fe Springs and 1700 acres in the Belridge oil field in Kern county.

The petition having been filed after the United States District Court had closed, the petitioners went to the home of United States District Judge Cosgrave. He took the matter under submission until tomorrow.

While the authorities continued their investigations two questions stood out in the case: Did Beesemyer have any accomplices in the mulcting of the company and what happened to all the missing $8,000,000?

Beesemyer had an answer for both questions, but authorities are dissatisfied with his explanation. Beesemyer still insisted that he alone is responsible for the theft and that his private book—the little black book that listed the seven red-figure debit—shows where every dollar went.

MANY ENTRIES

A sheet from the little book was taken from the records of the grand jury to the District Attorney's office yesterday. It contained entries from October 1, last, and showed that Beesemyer had drawn more than $500,000 from the loan company's funds in two months. Some of the sums were listed to the Elmer Oil Company, in which Beesemyer supposedly sank $2,000,000, but there were other numerous entries listed only to "G. H. B." Beesemyer's initials.

Outstanding is the last entry in the book. Under date of the 5th inst., appears this notation: "cr. bk. Holly...$238,343.65." Whether this was an attempt to save the Bank of Hollywood, which closed its doors last week, could not be definitely determined yesterday because it could not be ascertained whether the funds were actually delivered to the bank. This matter may be cleared up by State Superintendent of Banks Wood tomorrow.

"Every dollar is accounted for in that book," asserted Beesemyer, when interviewed by newspaper men in the County Jail.

"But how about these entries to 'G. H. B.;' where did that money go?" he was asked.

"Oh, different places."

"What places, specifically?"

"I don't want to discuss it with the newspapers."

HE WONT TELL

"Only about half of that $8,000,000 has been accounted for. Where did the remainder go?"

"They can check back on it. I don't want to discuss it. For the benefit of the community, this matter should not be given too much attention."

The conversation was typical of the confessed embezzler's attitude yesterday. He evaded every direct question. He would not say whether he will retain counsel or plead guilty. He was not sure whether he will try to obtain his freedom on the $250,000 bail set. These things are being handled by his brother, Clarence Beesemyer, he said.

He admitted that there had been a shipment of gold bullion from his office in the Guaranty Building and Loan Company recently.

"It was from a mine I owned in Nevada and was on its way to the smelter," he said. "It was only a small amount—$9000 worth. We always handled it that way."

"Where is the mine and why ship bullion to a smelter?" he was questioned.

Where the mine is, how much it is worth, how much gold has been taken from it and other questions along the same line, Beesemyer saw fit to evade.

He was vociferous, however, in his repeated assertions that no one else was implicated in the plundering of the loan company and said he cannot see why any criticism should be aimed at Building and Loan Commissioner Whitmore.

"Whitmore is a fine man and a competent commissioner," was Beesemyer's statement. "He should not be blamed if one of his agents was deceived, should he?"

Beesemyer recalled that Whitmore a few months ago rented with an option to buy an expensive house at 2789 Westshire Drive, which belonged to the Guaranty Building and Loan Company.

"The house was acquired by the company through the foreclosure of a $17,000 mortgage," said Beesemyer. "There was nothing irregular about the transaction. I think the house rented for about $100 per month."

EXPLANATION OFFERED

Commissioner Whitmore said yesterday he already has taken possession of the property as a tenant before he learned the title was held by the Guaranty company.

"We moved in during September," he said. Most of our belongings were transferred to the house before I learned the Guaranty Building and Loan Association held the title. We had looked at several other houses in the neighborhood with no thought as to who owned them.

"It is preposterous to think I would have been influenced in such a deal no matter who owned the property. It was priced fair and the rental was fair and it went through as a matter of regular business. Beesemyer personally had nothing to do with it. There are thousands of other homes owned by the same company and other building-and-loan companies in that district but it just happened to be my luck to pick this one, and I think that any inference that I was favored in the deal is extremely unjust and unfair."

From other sources it was learned that the house was originally constructed about three years ago by a Hollywood holding company at a cost of approximately $35,000. After the foreclosure it remained vacant until Whitmore took possession in September.

Beesemyer spent his first night in the County Jail in a tank with thirty-six other prisoners, mostly men charged with burglary and robbery. He declared, however, that he had nothing of which to complain and that he had spent a comparatively restful night.

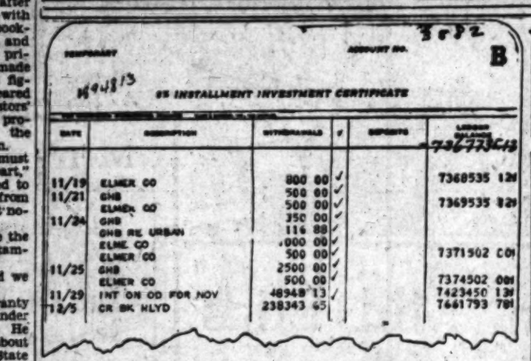
Beesemyer will be arraigned tomorrow before Superior Judge Wood.

NAMES' SIMILARITY BRINGS PUBLIC NOTICE

Fear that similarity in names may cause it to suffer unwarranted hardship caused the management of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association of San Jose to ask yesterday that public attention be called to the fact it is a separate organization from the Guaranty Building and Loan Association of Los Angeles.

The Guaranty Building and Loan Association of San Jose recently opened a branch at 913 South Hill street. It also has offices in San Francisco and Oakland. It is described as a well-established, conservative organization with an experienced, capable management.

Beesemyer Aide and State Examiner Quizzed



They Figure in Inquiry on $8,000,000 Swindle

Mary Wilmer, private secretary to Gilbert H. Beesemyer, questioned yesterday by Dist.-Atty. Fitts in connection with Beesemyer's little black ledger book, was ordered to return Tuesday before the grand jury. C. C. Barnes, State Building and Loan Commission examiner, made the last examination of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association. Below is the last sheet under date of the 5th inst., of the little black ledger bopk in which Beesemyer kept his own accounts. The ledger bore account No. 3883 and shows a grand total of $7,661,793.78 as the amount of the Beesemyer embezzlement.

ROLPH WILL DEMAND RIGHT TO MAKE OWN ADMINISTRATIVE APPOINTMENTS

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 13. (AP)—The Governor should have complete control of appointments in all administrative branches of the State government, Governor-elect Rolph declared here today. He said he will undertake legislation to that end as soon as he takes office January 6.

Rolph's statement was made in reiterating his charges of yesterday that Charles A. Whitmore, State Building and Loan Commissioner, was at fault in the $8,000,000 defalcation of Gilbert H. Beesemyer, secretary of the Hollywood Guaranty Building and Loan Association.

"It is a strange thing that $8,000,000 of the people's money has been permitted to be stolen when we have State supervision of building and loan companies," Rolph said.

Rolph said he will seek legislation to insure proper safeguarding and regulation of building and loan companies to strengthen the idea of their safety in the minds of the people.

JAZZ PENETRATES WILDERNESS

Radio Causes Natives of Colombia to Discard Their Guitars

CUCUTA (Colombia) Dec. 13. (AP)—Out here in the heart of the Andes, four days' journey from Bogota, the natives don't strum their guitars any more. They'd rather hear New York jazz.

Radio is the answer. Not that any individual would go to the expense of buying a set, but the town has one and there is a big loud-speaker at each of the public squares.

TAFT EULOGIZED BY COLLEAGUES

Ceremony Conducted in Hall Where He Presided

Wickersham Chairman and Root Delivers Speech

Memory of Justice Sanford Also Given Praise

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—In the historic room where for nine years he presided as Chief Justice of the United States, a distinguished audience gathered today to honor the memory of William Howard Taft.

The meeting, called by the bar of the court and presided over by George W. Wickersham, Attorney-General, under President Taft, was addressed by Elihu Root, who was Secretary of State in the Taft Cabinet; Circuit Judge Arthur C. Denison of Grand Rapids, Mich., who had been closely associated with the late Chief Justice in cleaning up the dockets of the Federal courts; former Senator W. Cabell Bruce of Maryland, Andrew Squire of Cleveland, O., and William Marshall Bullitt of Louisville, Ky.

Following the ceremonies, Associate Justice Edward Terry Sanford, who died a few hours before his distinguished chief, was eulogized by Chauncey G. Parker of the United States Shipping Board, William L. Frierson of Chattanooga, Tenn., formerly Solicitor-General, and Charles N. Burch of Memphis, Tenn.

Mrs. Taft was present, as were members of the family of the late Justice Sanford. In the audience were Secretary Stimson, Atty.-Gen. Mitchell, Solicitor-General Thatcher, a number of Federal judges and many members of the bar.

audience he will vote for American adherence because he believes it will be another step toward world peace.

"Let it be understood," he said in an address in the radio forum of the Washington Star and Columbia Broadcasting System, "that under no circumstances do we bind ourselves to send an army or navy to foreign shores; that we make no political alliance nor assume any obligations to protect Europe's territorial boundaries; that on no account shall this government's war loans to Europe be canceled."

GERMANS BALK ON SUGAR QUOTA

All Other European Nations Sign Agreement

Industry Bewitched, Declares American Commissioner

Conferees Agree on Export Totals Without Teutons

BRUSSELS, Dec. 13. (AP) — An agreement on a plan to stabilize what Thomas L. Chadbourne called "a bewitched industry" — the world's sugar business — was reached today by all continental European nations except Germany, attending the international sugar conference.

Because Germany refused the proposed radical reduction in her sugar exports the other European delegations conferred without them today and decided on the reduction each is willing to make to fit in with the plan of Mr. Chadbourne, head of the Cuban-American Sugar Commission. Germany had been allotted an export quota of 200,000 tons, but insisted on 420,000 and the demand was flatly rejected.

BUILDING-LOANS AWARD BONUSES

Score of Institutions Join Santa Claus Roll

Associations in Los Angeles Reward Employees

Banner Year of Distributions Forecast by League

Indications that building-loan associations will bring to a close a successful period of operation this year was revealed in a survey yesterday disclosing that some twenty associations in Los Angeles have voted or signified their intention of awarding Christmas bonuses to employees which in the aggregate will amount to many thousands of dollars.

"As far as we can ascertain the distribution of Christmas bonuses this year will mark the highest payment on record," the California Building-Loan League stated through its secretary, Neill Davis. This is made possible by the increasing popularity of the bonus policy instituted many years ago; a growing desire on the part of executives to reward faithful service, and the growth of the institutions themselves which in the current year have progressed steadily as in other years."

BONUSES VARY

Various methods of basing the amount of distribution has been taken by the numerous associations. Bonuses which are based on a graduated scale according to length of service have been voted by the Fidelity, the Los Angeles Mutual, Mercantile, and Pacific Coast. Officials of the North American stated they have been assured directors would take action this week and that in former years the bonus was based on length of service. The Los Angeles Mutual is continuing its policy of awarding $1 for every month of service.

Bonuses on a flat rate have either been voted upon or planned to be voted this week by Golden State, Great Western, Insurance Plan, Lincoln and California National. While some of these associations have not worked out details of the award officials in each case stated the bonus would compare favorably with other years.

OTHERS PREDICTED

Other Christmas distributions already declared to date include, State Mutual, one-half month's salary; Armor, a flat amount; Beverly Hills, a per cent of the annual salary, German-American, one month's salary, and Southern California, a per cent of the annual salary.

Pacific States, the headquarters of which is in San Francisco, is expected to announce details of its Christmas bonus tomorrow following a meeting of the board. Other associations here, which have headquarters outside of Los Angeles and of which officials expect bonus action to be taken this week are the Italian Building and Loan Association and the Mutual of Pomona.

MART HIT BY HEAVY DEFLATION

Stocks Penetrate Low Level of Last Fall in Week of Recession

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (AP)—The investment and speculative markets were under the spell of blind and relentless deflation this week.

The slump was orderly, but price resistance slowly gave way under the steady hammering of selling. Stocks broke through the low level of November 10 to the lowest since July, 1927. Silver bullion tumbled to the lowest price in history.

The sag in stock prices had little basis in any new developments in corporate news. The market reacted, however, in sympathy with the sag in bonds and commodities. The breaks in cotton and silver were discouraging, at a time when it was felt some measure of stability had been achieved. Furthermore, as expected in many quarters, the advance in copper prices from 9½ to 12 cents proved to have been too rapid, and copper exporters finally reduced their price to the basis of 11 cents, domestic.

The price index of ninety representative shares dropped 9 9-10 points to the lowest level since July, 1927. The index of fifty industrials alone lost 9 8-10 points, touching a level not seen since May, 1927. The index of twenty rails sold off 7.3 points. This index was started in 1926, and it reached a level never before recorded. Other indices, however, indicated rail share prices averaged around those of the summer of 1925. The price index of twenty utilities dropped 11.9 points, to the lowest level since August, 1928.

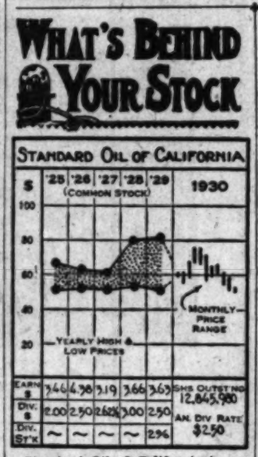
The suspension of a local uptown bank was not regarded in Wall street as an important factor in the general situation, although naturally it did not help sentiment among smaller investors.

INDUSTRY STUDY BEST KEY

Rail, Steel, Gas, Electric Equipment, Chain Store, Telephone and Others Should Move First

BY EARLE E. CROWE

Finding themselves wrong temporarily, at least, many recent buyers of stocks for the long pull are giving more study to the broad trend of industries rather than the comparative price levels and investment returns on particular stocks.



Standard Oil of California is one of the largest producers of crude petroleum in the United States, and is rated as third in size among the great refining groups of the world. In addition to a large domestic acreage of oil lands in California and Texas, the company owns large foreign reserves in Venezuela, Colombia, and Mexico. Supplementing extensive producing and refining operations are pipe line, transportation and marketing facilities which make the corporation an important distributor of petroleum products on the Pacific Coast. To exploit the large output of natural gas, a gas pipe line has been constructed jointly with the Pacific Gas and Electric Company.

The steady earning power of this organization has not been materially affected by the present depression, as indicated by the nine months per share figure of $2.38, only slightly down from the $2.68 earned in the same period of 1929. At the close of 1929 financial condition was notably strong with current assets ten times the current liability total.

CAPITALIZATION

Funded debt ..... None
Capital stock (no par) ..... 12,845,980 shares

Current data: Plans are under way for the formation of a corporation which would operate the Kettleman Hills field, about half of which is controlled by this company, as a single unit. Production would be allotted to owners according to the acreage held.

(All rights reserved, Cambridge Associates, Boston.)

Favorite stocks bought in the last few months merely because the price looked cheap in comparison with the 1929 low, or because the yield on the purchase price was high, have too frequently been disappointing to investors. What looked like bargains on one day may turn out in the light of the following day as drab and shoddy purchases.

ADVANCE IN GROUPS

Studies of industries as a whole may afford a different slant on the proposition of long-pull buying of stocks. A little thought and research will indicate some industries ought to recover first, another group second, and the remainder should follow some time in the rear.

Long-pull commitments confined to the first group should, in the normal course of events, show the investor a profit in the early months of business recovery, after which the process of elimination would be in order. The stronger stocks, the ones with best promise of further improvement, would be retained and proceeds from the sale of the weaker issues placed in the second-grade group.

Railroad shares, while in disrepute now, fall in the first category. When business picks up the steam carriers will reflect the movement of raw materials to factories, of crops to market, and of finished materials back to the consumers. Increased travel also runs along with business recovery.

Steel and gas companies, power and light, and electrical equipment manufacturers play important parts in the early stages of economic improvement. The steel mills reflect the demand from new buildings, from railroad expenditures for betterments to handle increasing traffic, and from the automobile industry.

Electrical equipment manufacturers are direct beneficiaries from the revived demand from industrial consumers and from new extensions by the light and power companies. The gas companies reap new business from the increased rate of operation in industrial plants.

TIRES INCLUDED

Automobile tire manufacturers ought to be among the first to feel the release of new purchasing power flowing out of revived confidence. Tire statistics show motorists have postponed replacements for considerably longer than the normal time, and after the wear and tear of the winter months the purchase of new equipment should be necessary in large volume.

Automobile manufacturers are planning for a renewal of demand some time next year. People who normally would have traded in old cars for new during the last year hesitated because of business sentiment, although they may have been financially able to make the purchase.

Chain stores, having taken large inventory losses and restocked at the current low level of commodity prices, are in a position to capitalize heavily when consumer demand picks up. Power and light, and telephone companies ought also to share in the fruits of an early business upturn.

CLEARINGS REPORT

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (AP)—The weekly statement of the New York Clearinghouse shows:

Total surplus and undivided profits, $37,682,500, increase.
Total net demand deposits (average), $165,384,000, increase.
Time deposits (average), $178,501,000, increase.
Clearings week ending today, $5,606,925,760.
Clearings week ending December 6, $6,082,998,320.
Clearings this day, $1,195,134,328.

TECHNICAL RALLY LOOMS

Brokers Predict Upturn by Middle of Week After Forced Selling Dries Up

What Spring-street brokers think of the current condition of the stock market and the probable future course of prices is summarized in the following representative opinions:

Think liquidation will slow up next few days and create possibility of at least technical recovery—Norman B. Courtney, E. A. Pierce & Co.

Sharp drives on the majority of isms. We cannot help but feel that a turn in business, the market and public psychology is a logical development for the early part of 1931. Accordingly, we believe that sound securities should be accumulated on a scale-down.—F. F. Hargear, Sutro & Co.

Influenced by adverse news of serious character the market wound up the past week with all of the Dow Jones averages in new low territory for several years. We would expect the current decline to reach a culmination in the early sessions of next week, and look for a rally of some proportions by the middle of the week. The stage of the market is being reached where hysteria replaces reason. This is the opportunity for conservative, long-term speculative investment purchases.—Walter V. Dobbs, Banks, Huntley & Co.

Chief causes of the present unsettlement are a feeling of uncertainty regarding certain aspects of the financial situation, knowledge that year-end adjustments will result in earnings statements for 1930 that in many instances will prove a shock to the financial community, further dividend readjustments that have not as yet been made but which are inevitable as the final wind-up of a long period of receding earnings, and some selling for tax loss purposes. When these factors become a matter of history in the early part of next year, it might well turn out that the market will embark upon a gradual reconstruction period."—John S. Young, Young, Clarke & Co.

The market has been unable to withstand the unusual amount of unfavorable news which has been made public during the past ten days, together with the sale of stocks for tax purposes. With the Dow-Jones industrial averages off some twenty-three points this month and a large short interest growing daily, a substantial rally could develop at any time.—Phelps Witter, Dean Witter & Co.

Although the week was marked by news of a depressing nature, nevertheless a number of sore spots and uncertainties were eliminated in the clean-up preparatory to the new year. Likewise, there was more than usual selling for tax purposes by large investors whose buying power may prove to be strong stimulant during coming weeks.—J. B. Edwards, Howard G. Rath Company.

HUGE POOL FORMED TO BUY STOCK

Shareholders' Syndicate Asks Aid in Acquiring Transamerica

Invitations are being sent out to all Transamerica Corporation stockholders offering them an opportunity to share in a pool of huge proportions to purchase Transamerica stock, it was authoritively reported late last night.

It is understood that the syndicate has already $20,000,000 at its disposal and will be managed by A. P. Giannini, founder of the large bank holding company, Elisha Walker, chairman of the board, L. M. Giannini, its president, P. C. Hale, James A. Bacigalupi, directors, and possibly other executives of the institution.

It was pointed out, however, that the formation of the syndicate is not an action of the corporation but of a group of individuals who "believe that the present market price of Transamerica shares is substantially out of line with the true worth of the corporation and its various subsidiaries, apart from any allowance for good will or going concern value, and that at current levels the stock offers an exceptional opportunity for investment and profit."

The letter being sent out to stockholders by the syndicate invites them to participate in the pool on terms identical with those applying to the original sponsors of the syndicate. The stock, which sold up to a high last year at 67, hit bottom yesterday at 10 and finished at 10 1-4 having declined 4 points during the week.

Venezuela Oil Output Drops

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. — Reflecting curtailment measures put into effect by Royal Dutch Shell interests, crude-oil production in Venezuela during November showed a decline from October with production amounting to 10,910,051 barrels or a daily average of 363,683 barrels. This compares with 11,784,591 barrels in October, or 373,897 daily, and 11,251,973 barrels in November, 1929, or 375,066 daily.

The combined output of Royal Dutch Shell companies in November totaled 5,133,223 barrels, with a daily average of 171,107 barrels, against 5,831,221 in October, or 188,104 daily.

Marts Suspend Member House

G. F. Wolcott & Co. has been suspended temporarily from membership on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange for violation of Article 16 of the constitution and by-laws of the exchange, it was reported on the floor yesterday. The house was also suspended from membership on the Los Angeles Curb Exchange.

While no official statement was issued for publication by either of the exchanges, it was stated in authoritive quarters that no losses would be entailed by customers of the house. It was also stated that Article 16 relates to insolvency of members.

Sears, Roebuck Reduces Notes

CHICAGO, Dec. 13. — Officials of Sears, Roebuck & Co. today stated that by the end of the year notes payable are expected to show a reduction of $7,000,000 to $10,000,000 from the figure of $30,798,000 at the end of 1929. The notes payable mature at different times and each note is being paid as it comes due.

The company is not using 35 per cent of its lines of bank credit and is constantly being asked whether it could not use more, according to the officials.

R. F. MacDONALD IN NEW AFFILIATION

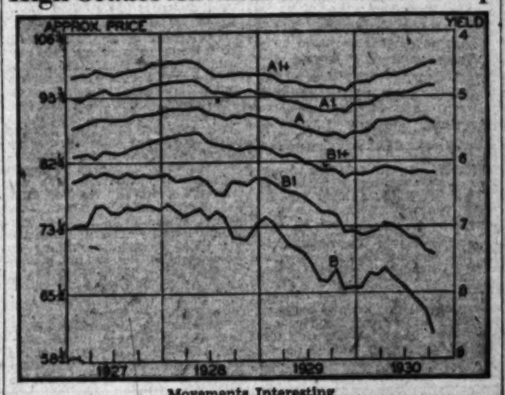
Russell F. MacDonald has resigned as vice-president of the American Trust Company to become the Pacific Coast representative at San Francisco of Wood, Struthers & Co., it was announced yesterday. Mr. MacDonald was formerly with the San Francisco headquarters of the American Trust Company but for the past several years has been stationed in Europe and New York during which time he made only short though frequent trips back to the San Francisco office.

PRUDENTIAL LIFE IN DIVIDEND INCREASE

NEWARK (N. J.) Dec. 13. (AP)—Dividends totaling $86,299,000, an increase of $15,268,000 over 1929 and a new high, were announced today by the Prudential Insurance Company of America. Of this amount, $53,566,000 was apportioned for owners of industrial policies, dividends of $32,733,000 were paid to holders of other policies.

DRIFT OF BOND VALUES SHOWN

High Grades Advance as 'Seconds' Drop



Movements Interesting

IN RECENT months we have been witnessing a simultaneous advance in bonds of the very highest gilt-edged class and a decline in descriptions not wholly seasoned. The above diagram presents an interesting study of these contradictory movements that was prepared by the Irving Trust Company and later published by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. Bonds given the very high rating of Aa-plus by the Standard Statistics Company actually have been rising all year. As we go to the lower ratings the advance becomes less pronounced and bonds in the "secondary" group have been falling sharply.

Supply of Long Staple Cotton in Delta Short

MEMPHIS (Tenn.) Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—With 75 per cent of the long-staple cotton crop of the alluvial delta of the Mississippi estimated already to have been sold, either directly by the producer or through the co-operative marketing associations, the market for staples has flattened out.

Little or no interest is being shown in high grades, low grades or intermediate grades, according to W. M. Garrard, general manager of the Staple Cotton Co-operative Association which handles a large part of the delta crop.

"There is nothing serious so far as the average grower is concerned in the lack of buying interest on the part of the mills," he said today.

"The yield in the delta is much below early estimates. The drought seriously affected the length as well as the quantity of the staple.

"It is our opinion, and this is borne out by statistics, that even with fine goods mills continuing on short time schedule there will not be a sufficient staple cotton of quality to supply the needs of the trade without considerable switching and substituting of qualities. This applies to both grade and staple."

Brokerage Unit to Pay Bonus

Employees of Young, Clarke & Co., members of the Los Angeles Stock and Curb Exchanges, will receive the annual bonus the company is accustomed to paying on the basis of salaries and the length of service, John S. Young announced yesterday.

The bonus will be paid the 18th inst.

YOUNGSTOWN, Dec. 13.—Steel plants in the Youngstown district during the coming week will operate at an average of 40 per cent of capacity against 43 per cent during the past week.

Sharon Steel Hoop Company's operations next week will be approximately 57 per cent of capacity, against 55 per cent this week and 60 per cent in the like week of 1929. Republic Steel Corporation reports a 5 per cent reduction in operations of local plants. Carnegie Steel Company will continue at 50 per cent of capacity in its McDonald (O.) works and the upper Union plant is continuing production at a level substantially higher than the leading independent companies in the district.

Operations of Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company will be at 35 per cent, against 40 per cent this week, and 45 per cent in the like week of 1929. Falcon plant of Empire Steel Corporation will suspend operations Monday after one week's production and the corporation's other plants in this area will remain idle. Mahoning Valley Steel Company reports operations next week at 75 per cent of capacity, a slight decrease from this week.

Extra Payments Authorized by Three Concerns

BUFFALO, Dec. 13.—Directors of Liberty Bank today declared a regular quarterly dividend of $1.25 and an extra of $2, increasing the dividend rate from $4 to $5 annually. The extra dividend is the same amount as last year and makes the total dividends paid this year $6.25 a share.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—Home Title Insurance Company declared an extra dividend of 75 cents, payable the 31st inst. to stock of record the 24th inst.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 13. — Union Metal Manufacturing Company today declared the usual extra of 25 cents and the regular quarterly dividend of 50 cents on the common and the regular quarterly of $2 on the preferred, all payable January 1 to stock of record the 19th inst.

DIVIDEND CUT

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—Art Metal Construction Company declared today a quarterly dividend of 40 cents a share. Heretofore the company paid 50 cents quarterly.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (AP)—A continuation of the recent selling movement which was believed to include somewhat increased southern offerings and further old long liquidation, sent prices off another 20 to 25 points in the cotton market today.

Now December contracts sold down to 9.45 and May to 10.10 under the pressure and while offerings were absorbed by covering and trade buying on scale-down orders, closing quotations were at the lowest of the day and movement with the market barely steady at net declines of 18 to 25 points.

ANGELES EXCHANGE

Liquidation Again Sweeps Local Stock Prices Downward on Brisk Session

A week of steadily falling prices shares were tossed ruthlessly on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange yesterday on one of the heaviest trading sessions witnesses this year for a half-day period in the week's operations. Sales exceeded the turnover of the full day and prices tumbled in a wholesale fashion with a score of issues to new low records for all time.

Losses ranged from fractions to 1¼ points. One of the most notable recoveries was staged by Pacific Finance. This issue, after hitting 13½, rallied to end unchanged at 15 after a turnover of 3000 shares. The stock has been held at this price for more than two weeks.

Others to record a fractional recovery from the low included Union Oil, Standard of California, Rio Grande, Security-First National and Claude Neon. Transamerica turned up 1-4 to 10 1-4, where it finished for a net loss of 1 3-8.

Pacific Lighting, at 50, registered a drop of more than 12 points from the last previous sale on this board which was several days ago.

Sales aggregated 69,561 shares, valued at $1,180,792; previous day, 65,804 shares, valued at $1,391,358.

CATTLE—Moderate receipts the past week, combined with an unusually brisk demand for all classes of killing cattle made it an easy matter for salesmen to get the highest prices paid in some time. Steers with a 25@50c advance showed the most gain, but all stock and bulls were easily 15@25c higher with some sales up considerably more. Better grades of steers and she stock were more in evidence, but plainer kinds shared the demand. California and intermountain sections were big contributors to the past week, with several loads of good stock from Colorado and sizable shipments from Arizona, New Mexico and Texas. Stock cattle met with a ready sale.

A load of 780-pound fed yearling steers topped at 10.00, with two lots of 924 to 1,000-pound California steers at 9.60 and 9.75. Bulk of the desirable steers were going up to 9.50 pounds and including loads from all sections, brought 9.00@9.50 with plainer Arizona, Texas and northern steers at 8.10@8.75. Part loads were taken at 7.25@7.75 with 832-pound Arizona Mexicans down to 7.25 and common Mexicans down to 6.50. Steers and yearlings for feeding purposes bulked at 7.25@7.75, the latter price taking weights up to 1000 pounds. Several loads of plainer steers went to this outlet at 5.25@6.50.

A load of local fed 680-pound heifers topped at 9.00, with bulk of the range offerings at 7.50 down. Odd head of fed cows brought 6.25@6.75 with most of the bypass offerings going at 6.00@6.50. Bulk of common to medium cows turned at 4.75@5.25 with some bits sales up to 6.00. Cutter grades were not so plentiful at 2.75@4.50, including several loads of outstanding weighty bulls brought 6.40@6.75 with bulk of medium to good kinds at 5.50@6.25 and plainer kinds down to 4.50.

CALVES—Decreased supply of calves were in good demand and sold readily at steady to strong rates. Native vealers were confined to odd lots, medium to good kinds bringing 9.00@13.00, some selected kinds up to 14.50. Southwestern calves went to fillers at 7.00@9.00, with common kinds down to 6.00 and lower.

HOGS—Killers were well supplied with direct hogs and the moderate marketings moved slowly, prices, however, holding up fairly well until Friday's session, when a severe break was effected. Compared with last week's close the market is 50c to 60c lower. Bulk of packers gravitated to 8.00@8.65, with two loads of 228-pound weights on the close at 9.00. In the opinion of the trade, quotable closing top for good light butchers is around 8.25. Good 200 to 250-pound kinds ranged from 8.00 for heavies to 8.50 for lightweights. Packing sows brought 7.00@8.00 and a few light stock pigs sold at 10.00.

SHEEP—Somewhat lighter receipts met with a ready outlet and fully steady prices, quality and weight considered. Choice light lambs are quotable around 11.75@12.00, two decks of 82-pound kind bringing 12.00, with around light decks of 77 to 88-pound Utah lambs at 11.75. Four decks of 104-pound Utah lambs brought 11.50 and a deck of 84-pound trucked in lambs made 11.75. Two decks of Colorado lambs and a few lots of 79 to 95-pound lambs made 7.60@8.00. Bulk of 97-pound Utah packer lambs scored 6.00. Two decks of 134-pound Utah ewes brought 4.00.

WEEKLY CITRUS REVIEW

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS]

California oranges hit the price toboggan at eastern and middle western auction centers during the past week, each day's averages falling below the previous day. Lemons were higher, especially during the middle of the week. Orange carlot sales increased from 217 last week to 444 cars this week, while lemons totaled one car more than last week's seventy-nine cars. Arizona shipped thirty-six cars of citrus fruits during the week.

Figures compiled yesterday revealed oranges dropped 30 cents this week to $3.64. A year ago today the fruit sold for $5.27 per box and two years ago for $4.18.

Lemons sold for an average of $4.26 this week, 5 cents more than last week. A year ago today they sold for $6.81 and two years ago for $4.81.

Wheat Futures Decline to New Long-Time Low

CHICAGO, Dec. 13. (AP)—Skidding with cotton and stocks, July wheat today reached the lowest prices registered in twenty-seven years. Other future deliveries were upheld by Federal Farm Board sales. July wheat dropped into the "sixties," and finished at virtually the day's bottom figures.

Closing quotations on all cereals were heavy, with wheat unchanged from yesterday to 2¼ cents low, corn, 1@1¼ cents off, oats, 1¼@1½ cents down, and provisions unchanged to 10 cents decline.

The maximum fall of wheat was 3¼ cents, taking July wheat down to 69¾ cents a bushel, exactly the same price at which December corn closed. This was but 1 cent above the all-time low record for this century, established in March, 1903.

Provisions seesawed with gain, despite upturns in the value of hogs.

NEED OF HARBOR FEE BOOST TOLD

Reason for Annual Increase of $600,000 Given

Department Executive Gives Figures on Status

Says Board Willing to Meet Objectors Half Way

BY WALDO DRAKE

Necessity of an annual increase of $600,000 in port revenues, requested of the shipping industry by the harbor department as a means of meeting increased disbursements for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, were graphically explained in official figures released yesterday. Necessary revenue increases are shown by these figures to be $912,500, based on total disbursements of $2,846,000.

"We have told the shipping men that we are willing to meet them half way and absorb in some way this additional $312,500, said a harbor department executive. "We are just as anxious as the operators to keep our port charges at the minimum, but the Council tells us we must this year pay nearly $2,000,000 on sinking fund principal and interest, while we lose $107,000 on interest from harbor department funds through the new charter amendment No. 2-A, which diverts all interest from inactive funds to the city general fund.

"We feel that the trucking interests, which now handle half of the port's traffic and for which we have just expended $300,000 on facilities, should help support the harbor. The ship operators use our storage, transit and office facilities without extra charge, while most of the stevedoring companies derive their profits almost entirely from city-owned facilities."

Following are the harbor department's official estimates on disbursements and revenues for the current fiscal year:

Interest and principal on sinking fund, $1,891,000; maintenance of the port, $449,500; operating expenses, $397,000; replacements from revenue, $108,500. Total estimated disbursements, $2,846,000; estimated revenue, $1,933,500; necessary increase in revenue $912,500.

The harbor rate revision committee, shipping leaders recently appointed by the Board of Harbor Commissioners, will hold its third meeting either next Tuesday or Wednesday to discuss means of securing the necessary revenue increase.

CHRISTIE RENAMED AS YACHT CLUB CHIEF

Re-election of Commodore Al Christie to lead the Los Angeles Yacht Club through the 1931 season was announced last night by Assistant Secretary Fred Bosbyshell, following the club's annual dinner at the Jonathan Club. Rear-Commodore Morgan Adams was elevated to Vice-Commodore and his former berth occupied by W. W. Pedder. New members of the club's board of directors include Dan H. Laubersheimer, Eugene Overton, Donald W. Douglas and Donald B. Ayers.

The time-honored fraternal spirit of the club's annual meeting was flavored by several sailty songs by Nick Ball, among them being "Down Along the Coast of the High Barbar-ee!" together with some original readings by Loughlin (Skip) Charles. Presentation of trophies for the past season's sailing events was featured by initial presentation of the new club boat trophy, offered as a perpetual trophy in the six-meter class. Al Rogers won it last October 4, with the sloop Synnove.

The British tramp steamer General Smuts, of the Reardon Smith cargo fleet, returned to port yesterday morning with her main engines disabled following her departure for Dublin and Avonmouth on Friday. She is undergoing repairs at the Bethlehem shipyards.

The port experienced another light week in arrivals last week, only 142 incoming ships being reported by the Marine Exchange. The same number arrived the previous seven-day period.

Oil shipments last week totaled 2,178,445 barrels, an increase of 582,515 barrels. Lumber receipts were 8,509,000 feet, as against 17,986,000 feet for the precious week. By trades, last week's arrivals included forty-nine passenger carriers, fifty-six freighters, thirty tankers and seven lumber vessels.

Miss Louise Oesterreich, new secretary of the American Legation at Bogota, Colombia, will be among the seventy cabin passengers departing the port Monday for New York and Latin American ports aboard the Panama Mail liner Colombia.

The thickest fog experienced by Los Angeles Harbor in months delayed shipping hours yesterday and caused one minor collision in the main channel. The passenger ferry GW, without passengers and en route to take fuel oil, collided with the Dorothy Wintermote, sustaining $750 damage, and will be replaced for two weeks for repairs. The freighter was undamaged. It was regarded as a fortunate accident, as a big freighter lay across the channel, hidden by the fog but directly in the path of the Dorothy Wintermote, which checked its momentum after the ferry crash. Captains bringing ships in from the north report heavy fog all the way up the coast.

The Lasco flagship City of Los Angeles carried out 235 passengers yesterday for Hawaii, among them being Charlie Paddock, dash 'star and scribe, of Pasadena, and his bride; David T. Fullaway, chief plant inspector at Honolulu, and Frederick M. Davies, New York banker. Prior to sailing the run of the ship was given more than 800 visitors.

The Dollar liner President Pierce is due from the Orient at noon today with several dozen passengers. Included are Mrs. Ildefonsa C. Osias, wife of the Philippine resident commissioner, returning to Washington; Truman R. Johnson, Shanghai banker, returning to Pasadena, and Lieut. John C. McCutchen, U.S.N.

Holland America's new motorship Delftdyk, Capt. A. Filippo, sailed for Liverpool last night on her third voyage with 10,350 tons of Pacific cargo and eight passengers. Only 350 tons of grapefruit and lemons went aboard here, several hundred tons being shut out for lack of space.

G. J. Fiorentine, Grace Line claim agent at San Francisco, returned north last night after attending the repairs and dispatch of the freighter Charcas for South America.

"Public Enemy" Capture Made

CHICAGO, Dec. 13. (AP)—Joe (Pepe) Genaro, "public enemy," was arrested today in Calumet City by Pat Roche, chief investigator for the State District Attorney's office.

The South Side alcohol peddler surrendered peaceably and was taken to the detective bureau for booking on a vagrancy charge. He was lounging in a Calumet City gambling house when accosted by Roche.

Genaro's arrest leaves only ten of the original twenty-six "public enemies" who have not been arrested on vagrancy warrants issued by Judge Lyle.

BIG GAME HUNTER AND WIFE FOUND SLAIN

UMTALI (Southern Rhodesia) Dec. 13. (AP)—Dr. R. L. Magoon, noted American big-game hunter, and his wife, Aubrey, were found dead in their bedroom today. Police offered the theory that Dr. Magoon attacked his wife with some heavy instrument and then killed himself.

LAW-MAKING BODY MAY VISIT HERE

Plans Formed to Bring Entire Legislature to U.C.L.A. in February

CARPINTERIA, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—A movement to raise funds to bring the entire State Legislature to Los Angeles in February to obtain first-hand knowledge on the University of California at Los Angeles and other matters in the southern part of the State was started here tonight when the Tuesday Evening Club met at the home of Assemblyman George R. Bliss. Sixty-two State Senators, Assemblymen and political leaders were present.

On motion made by Harry Lyons of Los Angeles, a committee of fifteen will be created to raise these funds. Senator McKinley of Los Angeles was appointed chairman, the body to consist of nine legislators and six citizens. Three Assemblymen did not vote on the motion, Dempster of Los Angeles, Emmett of Santa Paula and Craig of Orange.

The gathering also indorsed Walter Little of Santa Monica for speaker of the Assembly. Assemblyman Meeker of Fresno, speaking for the San Joaquin Valley, pledged support for Little and co-operation in legislation affecting Southern California.

Frank Merriam of Long Beach, Lieutenant-Governor-elect, urged legislative action to combat unemployment and discussed the need of additional water supply for Southern California.

The same group will meet for breakfast at the State College in Santa Barbara in the morning.

Victoria de las Tropas Gobiernistas en España

MADRID, Diciembre 13.—Por entre las neveras de los pasos de la sierra del norte, la caballería del reino persiguió y hostilizó hoy a las fuerzas rebeldes, que huían en desorden tras reñidísima batalla que hubo en las cercanías de Placencia.

El primer ministro Berenguer, con partes procedentes del frente a la vista, ha declarado que la revuelta que comenzó ayer con el levantamiento de la guarnición de Jaca, ha terminado con un triunfo del gobierno; pero siguen llegando noticias de que no ha cesado aún el movimiento.

Se están concentrando tropas en la región levantada del norte, cerca de la frontera francesa, y esta tarde, a última hora, fueron despachados más de tres mil hombres de la guarnición de Madrid al sector de Huesca. El gobierno está dispuesto a proclamar la ley marcial en todo el reino; pero las autoridades dicen creer que no será necesaria esa medida extrema.

No hubo datos oficiales acerca de las bajas habidas en la batalla de hoy, que comenzó a la madrugada entre Jaca y Huesca; pero se cree que llegaron a centenares los muertos y heridos. El único informe definido es que resultaron muertos cino leales y dos rebeldes, y que hubo como una docena de heridos. Cayeron más de cien prisioneros, según noticias recibidas por el primer ministro; entre ellos varios oficiales rebeldes, que van a ser juzgados en consejo de guerra.

Suben en Méjico los Derechos a los Textiles

CIUDAD DE MEJICO, Diciembre 13.—El gobierno ha decretado hoy cuotas más elevadas para los productos de lana, algodón y lino, incluso camisas, corbatas y enaguas, a fin de dar mayor protección a las industrias mejicanos de tejidos.

Méjico Rechaza a los Médicos Extranjeros

CIUDAD DE MEJICO, Diciembre 13.—El ministerio de lo Interior ha expedido hoy la orden de que se prohiba en Méjico el ejercicio de la medicina a los médicos de los Estados Unidos y de otras naciones. Tal disposición tiende a proteger contra la competencia a los médicos mejicanos.

Hindenburg es el Principal Enemigo de la Cinta Yanqui Prohibida

BERLIN, Diciembre 13.—Paul von Hindenburg, el venerable mariscal de campo que mandó en jefe los ejércitos imperiales alemanes durante la guerra mundial, y que es hoy el muy querido presidente de la república alemana, es quien principalmente se ha opuesto a que exhiban aquí la película yanqui, "No hay novedad en el frente occidental". Tal se ha sabido de buena fuente esta noche.

Hasta amenazó con dimitir al "este libelo contra el soldado germano" continuaba proyectándose en los cines del país. De allí que el gobierno haya prohibido que se siga exhibiendo dicha película.

Del partido del Centro, que, cosa inesperada, ha abogado por la supresión de la cinta, se filtró la información de que Hindenburg la condena. Aunque dicho partido, en un principio, estaba dispuesto a adherirse a los socialistas y defender la vista en cuestión, cambió de parecer cuando supo con qué calor se había declarado el presidente en contra de ella.

ARTIST COMPLETING MURALS

Canvases for Library Due Next Year

DEAN CORNWALL, artist who was selected as the winner of an open competition sponsored by the Los Angeles Public Library board to execute the paintings for the walls of the rotunda of the library, works long hours in his London studio in an effort to have the painting completed by the end of next year.

According to the latest word received at the library, it is expected that by the latter part of 1931 Cornwall will come here with them to supervise their installation personally. His first contract allowed a three-year period in which to carry out the commission, but recently he was granted an extension which expires at about that time.

There will be four canvases forty by nineteen feet, said to be among the largest in the United States. These will be placed on the main wall spaces and will depict epochs in the history of the development of California, including the discovery, the building of the missions, the coming of the first white women, the first overland train and the first clipper ship and finally the founding of Los Angeles.

In addition there will be eight smaller canvases, twelve by nineteen feet, which will be placed on panels in the rotunda. Most of the work on the enormous canvases is being done by Cornwall, although he has called in student artists to assist with some phases of the painting.

JOBS OF WOMEN ASSURED

Married Ones Whose Husbands Also Work Won't Lose County Places for Two Years, Anyway

Married women employed by Los Angeles county, whose husbands have employment, need have no fear of losing their jobs because of the present economic depression, at least for two years, the time it would take to amend the County Charter relative to civil service regulations.

Such is the opinion of Sam J. Chappel, secretary of the County Civil Service Commission, in a letter to Ross Grant, executive secretary of the Building Owners' and Managers' Association.

Some counties where civil service is not in effect have already discharged women whose husbands also were employed.

Amendments to the charter are obtained as follows:

A petition must be signed by 10 per cent of the qualified electors based on the number of votes cast at the last election for Governor. This is filed with the County Clerk whereupon the Board of Supervisors must submit the proposed amendment to the voters at a general or special election.

A majority vote is all that is necessary to carry the amendment, but it then must be submitted for ratification by the Legislature at its next session.

A general election has just been held and the next meeting of the Legislature is in January. After the 1931 session, however, that body will not meet again for two years.

ABOLITION DUE FOR GRAND JURY

All-Year System Slated to Be Scrapped in 1931

Superior Judges Confer on Substitute Proposal

Courts May Handle All of Preliminary Cases

The continuous grand jury system, which has functioned in Los Angeles county since the administration of Dist.-Atty. Woolwine, will be discontinued in 1931, according to plans of judges who are organizing the Superior Court under the new presiding jurist, Superior Judge Fleming, who takes office January 5.

According to California laws, grand juries are not necessary in the prosecution of crimes, preliminary hearings before magistrates after filing of "information and belief" by the District Attorney being legally adequate to bind over defendants for trial in Superior Court.

OPINIONS VOICED

Los Angeles county is said to be the only county in the State where the grand jury has been in continuous session during any one year. In many counties, the grand jury is never empaneled except for the investigation of a crime involving a large number of persons, such as a riot, or for the investigation of irregularities in public affairs.

It is the opinion of Superior Court judges, expressed at a meeting yesterday, that defendants can obtain just as fair and impartial a preliminary hearing before a committing magistrate as they can at a secret grand jury investigation. And in many instances, it was stated, grand juries have indicted persons without sufficient evidence for conviction, merely on the word of the prosecutor appearing in the grand jury room, who promised the evidence would be produced later. When it was not produced, the defendants were acquitted, some after long and costly trials, the judges said.

POLITICS CHARGED

One judge who declined to be quoted, however, charged that the grand jury in recent years has become a "political football," and declared that its sessions were occupied with discussions concerning the political future of officials rather than with the guilt or innocence of persons under investigation. It was said in this connection also that political campaigns have been waged on the strength of a candidate's activities as a member of the grand jury.

"I know of no essential reason why a grand jury is necessary in Los Angeles county," said Superior Judge Schauer, sitting as presiding judge pro-tem, in the absence of Superior Judge Doran. "The State Constitution originally provided that all prosecutions should be made after a grand jury indictment. Later this was amended to permit preliminary hearings before justices of the peace, and still later, before municipal judges.

EXAMPLE GIVEN

"It has been contended that defendants receive fairer treatment before magistrates than they do before a grand jury, where it is customary to present only one side of the case. For instance, the Julian cases had to be dismissed for lack of evidence, after a grand jury indictment. It is doubtful whether a magistrate would have held the defendants to answer. Several other important cases have recently resulted in acquittals, or worse, in reversals of the trial judge in whose court the defendant was convicted.

"It has been contented that grand jury indictments are necessary in extradition proceedings. This may be so in the case of fugitives in foreign countries, but many other communities than Los Angeles are successful in bringing back for trial defendants accused without an indictment. I have no doubt this procedure would be successful here.

"The grand jury is the creature of the Superior Court, and if the court decides a grand jury is unnecessary, it need not empanel one."

Dist.-Atty. Fitts declined to discuss the proposed action of the judges except to state that under

Club Leaders Ask Mayor to Keep Mrs. Johnson or Name Feminine Successor

Resignation of Mrs. Amelia F. Johnson, head of the domestic relations department of his office, was accepted by City Prosecutor Johnson yesterday.

AMELIA F. JOHNSON

Mrs. Johnson said her resignation followed two written demands for it made by Johnson and that she was "being fired so Hinds can have my job." Johnson stated that Mrs. Johnson's resignation was voluntary and that he has not yet considered anyone for appointment as her successor.

Following announcement of the resignation a delegation of club women, headed by Rosalind Bates of the Women's Lawyers' Association, protested to Mayor Porter regarding the removal of Mrs. Johnson, who has been head of her department for more than seven years, and asked that another woman be appointed to her position in case she could not be reinstated. The Mayor called Johnson to his office and both, according to Mrs. Bates, promised that another woman would be appointed.

M. K. Hinds, appointed a deputy prosecutor about three weeks ago, admitted that he "had heard" that he is to be named in Mrs. Johnson's place, and that he is to take the position tomorrow, although the City Prosecutor said that he wants to appoint a woman if he can find one qualified and that Charles Young, chief deputy, will take the department over tomorrow until a permanent appointment is made.

AFRICAN PROFESSOR TO SPEAK AT LIBRARY

"New Idealism" will be the subject of a free lecture at the Central Library tomorrow at 8 p.m. Dr. R. F. Alfred Hoernle will be the speaker. Dr. Hoernle is visiting professor in the philosophy department at the University of Southern California this year. He is head of the department of philosophy of the University of Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa.

MOTHER SEES DAUGHTER BURN

Helpless in her wheel chair in their Venice home, a crippled mother watched in horror and agony yesterday while her 9-year-old daughter, nightgown ablaze, suffered burns that may prove fatal.

The child, Alice Price, 711 Sixth avenue, was taken first to Georgia-street Receiving Hospital and then to General Hospital, where physicians doubt she can recover.

Desire to be of help in the household deprived of the mother's care by the latter's crippled condition was responsible for the burning of little Alice. Being the oldest of three children she assumed responsibility for the others, so far as it was possible for her to do so.

Soon after arising yesterday morning she observed that her two sisters, 3 and 5 years of age, respectively, had ventured in their play dangerously near the gas heater. The mother of the small brood sat near by in her chair, not aware of the peril of the little girls.

Alice rushed impetuously toward the children, thinking to remove them to a safer place, and her own nightgown became ignited. She tore frantically at the garment, but could not rid herself of it entirely until she had suffered third-degree burns.

MILLIONS WILL COMPETE IN ORATORICAL CONTEST

Los Angeles to Get Pacific Zone Finals of National and International Event

BY CHARLES S. SPRAGUE

From Olympia to Olympus.

From stadium to forum.

From the arena of athletic contest to the platform of intellectual and forensic rivalry.

This is the transition now going on among the schools of the country since the recent announcement from headquarters at Washington, of the inauguration of the Eighth National and Sixth International Oratorical Contest for secondary schools, with the Constitution of the United States as its compelling theme; enlisting the friendly though spirited rivalry of the budding patriots, statesmen and orators of practically all the high schools of this country, and, in its international phase, of the schools of many foreign countries.

MORE WILL COMPETE

The original object of the National Oratorical Contest was to increase interest in and respect for the Constitution of the United States with the view of raising the standard of citizenship and patriotic devotion among the rising generation. As the contest was taken up by the schools throughout the country with instant avidity, it was conceived that a great purpose might be achieved in making the contest international and thus promote a better understanding among nations by means of a frank and friendly exchange of national viewpoint; so, two years after the founding of the national contest, a half-dozen foreign nations sent representatives to compete in the International contest at Washington. Every year since the number has increased and in the contests of 1931 more than a score have already signified their intention of participating, with the full number probably reaching thirty.

BORN IN SOUTHLAND

In 1923, The Times sponsored the first oratorical contest among the schools of Southern California, with Randolph Leigh of The Times staff as director. The one subject of the contest was the Constitution of the United States, or some subject dealing therewith. Wide latitude was given in the selection of the subject so long as it treated of some phase of the Constitution or its making and makers. The results of the contest were so substantial as to attract the attention of the leading newspapers of the country, and at a meeting of the Newspaper Publishers' Association in New York, many papers of the various sections of the United States joined with The Times in making the contest national, and it now covers the country like a map. Out of this came the first national contest in 1924.

At the request of the American Bar Association, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Sons of the American Revolution and other like national organizations, as well as many nationally known educators, the newspapers decided to continue the contest, which by 1925 was participated in by almost 1,500,000 high-school pupils.

ANNUAL CONTEST

Since then the contest has been held annually and the number of school children writing speeches on the Constitution has increased to more than 2,000,000. In President Coolidge's address of welcome on the occasion of the 1925 contest, he said: "It is certainly a splendid demonstration of the efficiency of our educational system, of the interest that has been inspired in the study of our country's institutions, and of the zealous effort that has been put forth by those who have organized and directed the contests."

The National Oratorical Contest on the Constitution is sustained financially by upward of eighty of the foremost newspapers of the country, one or more newspapers sponsoring the contest in the territory in which they are published and which they serve. The governing committee is composed of persons well known throughout the newspaper-reading world. Frank B. Noyes, publisher of the Washington (D. C.) Star, is chairman; Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the New York Times, is a member of the committee; so is Harry Chandler of the Los Angeles Times; Walter A. Strong, Chicago Daily News; George B. Longan, Kansas City Star, and Clark Howell, Atlanta Constitution.

MORE THAN ORATORY

While this contest is called an oratorical contest, it does not exactly portray its character, for these contests are not held so much for promoting the arts of oratory, as for interesting young people in the study of the science of government, especially as exemplified in the institutions of this country. The mere development of youthful orators in the country's schools, as desirable as that might be, would not have induced the great newspapers of the country to give so largely of their means and influence in its support; the mere display of oratorical talent, brilliant as it might be, would not have elicited the interest and public approval of, for instance, the American Bar Association, the Supreme Court of the United States, and even the President of the United States.

ATTENTION RIVETED

It was the subject of the contest—the theme, the American Constitution—which riveted their attention and invited their interest and support. To these newspapers and to these leaders of national political life, this contest means that hundreds of thousands of American youth will be led to study the Constitution and fundamental law of their country more intensively than possible in the limited time necessarily devoted to the subject in the school curriculum; delving into the background of the Constitution; studying the lives of the men who framed it and their various viewpoints as expressed in the constitutional convention; analyzing, comparing and contrasting the American form of government with others. It was with the full belief that with the more perfect understanding that would come from such study and preparation, there would be manifest in the rising generation increased interest and respect for the basic principles of government as represented by the great American republic, the United States of America.

NO SACRIFICE MADE

Under the plan for international expansion, there was no sacrifice of the American characteristics. On the contrary, the same subjects, all having to do with the Constitution of the United States, were adhered to for the contest in this country. In the international phase of the contest, the contestants in each participating nation are invited to discuss their own governmental institutions and problems, expressing their own national viewpoints and ideals.

At the final international contest held in Washington every year, each speaker uses his native tongue and the judges are, of course, competent multilinguists. The high honors the first year in the international contest, went to the United States—a Hollywood boy; the second year, to Mexico; the third year to France; the fourth to Canada, and the fifth year, to the United States again.

PLAN SIMILAR

The working plan of the contest for the year 1931 will remain much the same as last year. Randolph Leigh, who, as a member of the Los Angeles Times staff, conducted the first local contest and then developed it in its national and international scope, remains director-general. The country is again divided into seven zones; each zone into districts and so on down to the unit or individual school, the basis of the entire structure. The administrative unit is the territory of each newspaper sponsoring the contest. The territory in some sections, as the Pacific Southwest, covers parts of several States, and in other territory, only a part of a single State-dependent upon school population.

JOHN McGROARTY'S little chit-chat with the King of Spain was a thoroughly charming incident.

I can imagine them sitting there, smoking His Majesty's cigarettes, while John told him the story of the California missions—as not even Father Junipero Serra could have told the story.

A GRACEFUL GESTURE

If President Hoover comes out here to ask me, I am going to tell him that John should be Ambassador to Spain.

Now—and for all time to come—the American Ambassador to Spain should be a Californian. And Mr. McGroarty is our prize Californian.

THE OLD MANSION

When Miss Fannie Wills moved away from the old mansion at the top of the hill the last valiant defender of the historic Fort Moore threw up the sponge. She had a lot to do with preserving and marking this historic spot.

NOT HEROIC

Fort Moore was historic but not heroic.

Capt. Gillespie, its eminent commander, surrendered and scooted out of town with his army—scared blue by some town rowdies.

In fact, the American occupation of Los Angeles will tax the politeness of the authors of our coming city pageant. Gen. Kearny had the tar licked out of his army by a smaller number of Mexican cowboys at San Pasqual. Fremont staged a farce comedy by negotiating the "surrender" of the town when it was already garrisoned by American troops.

ENOUGH OF OUR OWN

We can lustily second Col. Arthur Woods's warning to the unemployed not to migrate.

This is one of the bitterest problems of Los Angeles. Half of these people who come begging for work of any kind do not belong here. They are pouring in from the East, complicating our already too-heavy burden. We have plenty to do looking after our own.

THE CHEMISTS

From crude oil the chemists have extracted something that tastes like rotten eggs to spoil the taste of industrial alcohol.

And that is not the end of the story. The most important discoveries of the next ten years will be in the by-products of oil. Fu-

DRIVE ON TO END "SLUSH" DUMPING

Venice Oil Drillers Accused of Polluting Lagoon

State and Local Authorities Seeking Offenders

Police Announce Constant Patrol of Section

By a "Times" Staff Representative

VENICE, Dec. 13.—A vigorous campaign against the practice of certain oil drillers in the Venice field, who assertedly employ trucks to clean excess mud from sump holes under cover of night and dump it in the near-by lagoon, thus saving the cost of longer hauls for legitimate disposal of the "slush" brought up by drilling, has been launched here, Venice police declared today.

Inspectors from the State Fish and Game Commission, Los Angeles City Engineer's office and the Los Angeles Health Department are cooperating with the police.

FIELD UNDER PATROL

A constant patrol of the field has been started, with the hope of apprehending the offenders, it was declared at police headquarters. The state is interested because the lagoon comes under tidewater restrictions against pollution, and the practice of dumping the slimy mud into the lagoon is said to endanger clam fishing operations at Del Rey. A clam barge now is operating off the mouth of the lagoon under license from the State Fish and Game Commission.

The health department declares the dumping practice creates pools of stagnant water, backed up behind the dumped truckloads of mud. This is said to breed mosquitoes.

UNSUITABLE MATERIAL

For a time the city engineer's department considered permitting dumping in the lagoon, but this was discontinued when it was found the "slush" was unsuitable filling material. When it dries, officials declare, it cracks to depths of fifteen and twenty feet.

Assistant Chief Atwell, in charge of the Venice fire division, declares the dumping has little bearing on the fire hazard at the field because it is mud, not oil, which is thrown into the lagoon. He states his department will enforce rigidly the restrictions against dumping any inflammable material.

CHILD STARS TO AID VETERANS

Youthful Players Will Sell Flowers

Ready for Drive

WHEN the forget-me-not sale for the benefit of the Disabled War Veterans' Association is in progress from Thursday to next Sunday, there will be a division of small folk, stars of the stage and screen, who will work just as hard as their elders toward making the sale a success.

Under the supervision of Mother Ida Baker, past president of the American War Mothers of Los Angeles, about forty of these children have been organized into a division sponsored by Miss Gay Seabrook, stage actress, and during the sale they will be stationed at various points throughout the city to make their appeal to the public not to forget the men who were wounded or disabled during the World War.

This division will be assisted by Boy Scouts, who will do patrol duty and keep the girls supplied with flowers to sell.

The forget-me-not sale will be conducted largely by a group of women and girls who are members of a committee named by the Mayor.

Proceeds from the sale of the flowers will be used to aid the employment, relief, welfare, rehabilitation and nospitalization of disabled and wounded veterans of this community.

BILKING OF LAWYERS CHARGED TO SUSPECT

Accused of having bilked several attorneys by retaining them to represent him in handling a $70,000 estate, Rex Price, a chauffeur, of 1738 North Whitley avenue, was arrested yesterday by Detective Lieutenant Hogue on a charge of suspicion of grand theft by bunko. After engaging the attorneys, Price is said to have obtained advances ranging from $50 to $300 by pleading that he was in dire financial need.

fore, sponsors the Pacific Southwest group, comprising Southern California, Nevada and Arizona. This year, Prof. C. P. Tanquary of the school of speech, University of Southern California, will be contest director of The Times, substituting for Prof. Alan Nichols who has been director for the past few years. Prof. Nichols, who also is of the school of speech, University of Southern California, is enjoying sabbatical leave from his duties. He went abroad early last summer and is now at the University of Berlin. Prof. Tanquary has wide acquaintence among the educators of the Southwest. Before joining the faculty of the University of Southern California, he was connected with the public schools of Los Angeles.

PRIZES OFFERED

The prizes offered by The Times for the winners in the contest in its various stages, are most alluring.

Last year, for the first time, prizes were given to the two highest contestants in the local high-school event—$10 to the first and $5 to the second. These prizes will be duplicated this year, upon the same conditions, namely, that twenty or more pupils write speeches upon the Constitution and that at least six deliver their speeches before an audience.

In the district contests, the prizes will be $15 to the first and $10 to the second.

CASH AND FREE TRIPS

In The Times Grand Finals, the first prize will be $500. In case the winner of this contest proves to be the winner of the Pacific Coast contest, The Times will give an additional award of a free trip to Washington, D. C., to the national finals, all expenses paid. If the winner is a young lady, a chaperone will be furnished, expenses paid. The second prize in The Times Grand Finals will be $250; third, $100; fourth, $50, and to all other contestants, $25 each.

The winner of the Times Grand Finals will contest with the winners of other districts in the Pacific Coast zone, one of the seven zones into which the country is divided. The winners of these seven zones will be the contestants to meet in Washington, D. C., for the National Grand Finals. These seven winners will receive as a prize (irrespective of who wins in the national contest) a free trip to Europe, covering the summer months, all expenses paid. In case the winner is a young lady she will be furnished a chaperon, whose expenses, likewise, will be paid.

OTHER AWARDS

In the local school contests, often there are other prizes awarded in addition to The Times cash prizes. These prizes are given by local organizations, such as service clubs, American Legion, women's clubs, etc. In most communities, the local newspapers, co-operating with The Times, are spirited supporters of the contest and not only give liberally of their space in promoting the contest, but in many instances offering prizes. Just as The Times sponsors the contest in a general way for the entire district, so do these local newspapers sponsor their local contests; for in this district of Southern California, Arizona and Nevada, as in all other sections of the United States, this contest is in reality a movement sustained by a combined press.

UNSELFISH GESTURE

It is solely an unselfish gesture on the part of the press for patriotic education, to increase interest in and respect for the basic principles of government as represented by the great North American republic and thus combat destructive influences that are being insidiously injected into the body politic.

An announcement of much interest to the Pacific Southwest zone comes out of Washington, to the effect that this year the Pacific zone contest will be held in Los Angeles. Last year the contest for the Pacific Coast zone was held at Seattle This arrangement will bring to Los Angeles the winners of all the major contests held west of the Rocky Mountains and will be a notable affair in that it will designate the orator who will win the high honor of representing the Far West in the national meet in Washington and the coveted prize of a trip to Europe.

WOMEN'S JOBS HELD ASSURED

seen that county employees are to be selected as the result of civil service examinations to test the relative fitness of applicants for positions, and not because of their race, religious opinions or marital status. Indeed, the whole theory and object of the civil service system is that employees shall be selected solely upon merit. As the charter reads at present the Civil Service Commission could not legally bar married women from their examinations since a married woman may be just as efficient and as satisfactory an employee as a single person.

"A further legal obstacle is contained in Section 45 of the charter which reads:

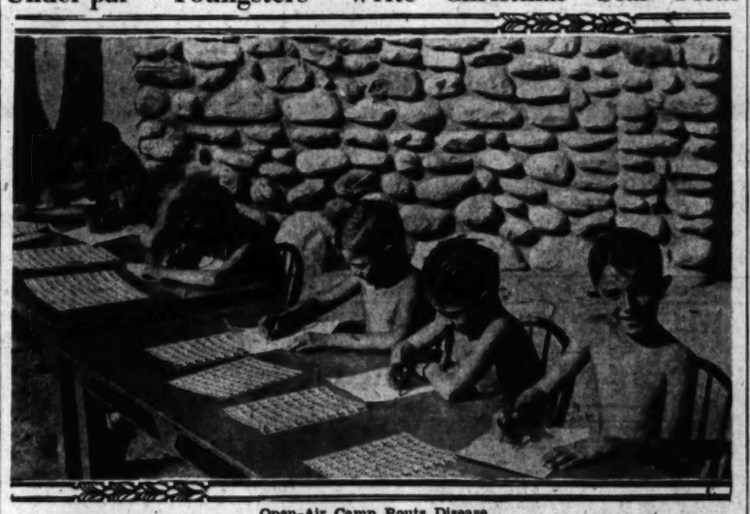
"'In the employment of persons in the service of the county where sex does not actually disqualify and where the quality and the quantity of service is equal, there shall be no discrimination in selection or compensation, on account of sex.'

"It is apparent that barring married women would be discriminating against them because of their sex since married men would not be barred. This is clearly a violation of Section 45.

"It is quite evident then, that these provisions of the charter would have to be amended if married women are to be barred from the county service. Even if this were accomplished there would still be some question as to the constitutionality of such amendments, though there is some reason to believe they would be upheld."

CHANCE FOR HEALTH ASKED BY BOYS

Under-par Youngsters Write Christmas Seal Pleas



Open-Air Camp Routs Disease

ONE HUNDRED under-par youngsters at the San Gabriel Preventorium, who are being carefully nursed back to health, are urging their friends to buy Christmas Seals, so that the Los Angeles Tuberculosis Association, which maintains this camp with funds raised through the seal sale, can continue its work.

The Preventorium, an open-air health camp for under-par boys, has been conducted by the Los Angeles Tuberculosis Association during 1930 with continued success. This institution, representing an investment in excess of $50,000, was established as a permanent factor in preventive work in 1924 and was an outgrowth of the association's experience with summer camps inaugurated in 1916.

The camp consists of approximately fifteen acres, located at an altitude of 1100 feet above sea level, and is accessible by a good mountain road.

HATE OF WOMEN CHARGED

Her husband hated all women, Mrs. Ida E. Claiborne yesterday testified in winning a divorce from Cabell C. Claiborne. She said that after they had separated September 25, last, her husband returned to her apartment and struck her. "Then he snatched photographs of my girl friends from my dresser and tore them into little bits," Mrs. Claiborne testified.

PLANE TO HARNESS VACUUM

Helicopter Principle Also Employed

Inventor and His Machine

Vacuum helicopter plane model with Charles Bowser, inventor, holding model.

COMBINING the force of vacuum and principle of a helicopter airplane, Charles Bowser has placed on display a five-foot model of a unique craft which he believes will become a new type giant of the air.

The model ship is equipped with two propellers extending from the top of the dirigible-like fuselage which he said will help support the ship in the air in a manner similar to that employed now on helicopter planes.

The ship is expected to be controlled by a tube system, open at one end and closed at the other with a supporting vacuum developed in the tubes by nine propellers. The latter will be driven by two Liberty motors, while a third Liberty is expected to be used to operate a nose propeller to give the ship a forward estimated speed of 100 miles an hour. All motors are inside the closed fuselage.

Four short wings attached to the side of the fuselage will carry 1600 gallons of gasoline, Bowser declared. He believes that in an emergency any engine in the plane could fail and the craft would descend safely. It is designed to rise vertically from the ground and land on any designated spot through the use of the helicopter paddles.

Plans are under way for production of the first ship, it was declared by representatives of the Dragon Fly Aero Corporation, 1207 West Thirty-ninth street.

social science teachers, such as "The Creative Genius of Russia."

The meetings at California Institute of Technology are expected to be especially interesting, inasmuch as most of the speakers will be distinguished members of the staff of that institution. On Monday evening Prof. Franklin Thomas will speak on "The Colorado River Aqueduct." On Tuesday afternoon Dr. John R. Macarthur will deliver a talk entitled "A Layman Looks at the Huntington Pictures" and it will be followed by a visit to the Huntington Library and Art Gallery.

In connection with the convention there will be separate meetings of the various sections of the Teachers' Association, most of them being luncheon or dinner meetings. A great number of social affairs have been arranged in conjunction with the convention and on the calender now there are nine breakfasts, twenty-eight luncheons, one tea and eleven dinners.

Damages Given Mother and Son

Loss of memory in a traffic accident yesterday won $11,000 damages for Mrs. Alice Hall, cafe owner, that sum being awarded her by a jury in Superior Judge Craig's court, which also rendered a judgment for $2500 in favor of her son Frank. The judgments were directed against Bill Williams, truck driver, and Leo Honek, contractor. Hall is employed in the casting department of M.-G.-M. studios.

The Halls testified that on March 24, last, the mother was riding with her son when his car was struck by a truck driven by Williams at West Adams street and Moynier Lane. Hall was bruised and shocked, while his elderly mother received concussion of the brain and skull fracture, and also complained of complete loss of memory. Attorney John J. Dillon represented them.

SUICIDE AVERTED

Stephen Constancy, 47 years of age, 4321 Verona street, swallowed a quantity of poison yesterday afternoon at his home, according to deputy sheriffs at the Belvedere substation. He was rushed to the Receiving Hospital, where it was said he will recover.

LAST RITES OF POWELL TOMORROW

Pioneer Citrus Grower and Banker to Be Buried in Oakdale Cemetery

Funeral services for William R. Powell, 78-year-old San Gabriel Valley pioneer, who died Friday at his home after a long illness, will be conducted at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow at the family residence, Alosta avenue, Azusa. Interment will follow at Oakdale Cemetery.

Mr. Powell, the founder of the First National Bank of Azusa and the Valley Savings Bank, was born in Defiance county, Ohio. He obtained his education in Missouri and graduated from the Kansas City Commercial College.

In 1887 he came to California and at Azusa took charge of a thirty-acre tract known as the Spalding-Powell place. Oranges were grown on the land, which became one of the first producing groves in the section. Until the time of his death Powell continued as active manager of the grove which had grown more extensive and had added much additional acreage.

Mr. Powell continued his association with the two banks he founded until he became ill three years ago. For a time he served as manager of the Azusa-Covina-Glendora section of the California Fruit Growers' Association.

Mr. Powell leaves his widow, Mrs. Allie Cole Powell, and four children by a previous marriage, Arthur and Oliver of Azusa, Mrs. Edith Johnson of Long Beach and W. Lester of Corvallis, Or. His first wife died nearly twenty years ago.

Gas Explosion Damages Asked

A gas explosion attributed to a leaky refrigerator is the basis of two suits for $20,950 combined damages brought in Superior Court by Mrs. Ora Doyle and her daughter, Thelma, 6 years of age, of 1614 South Curzon street, against the Copeland California Sales Company, the Copeland Refrigerator Company, George Campe and R. B. Stevens. Mrs. Doyle exhibited to the jury the scars on her legs said to have been caused by the explosion.

The explosion occurred at the Doyle home July 13, 1929. The mother asks $10,650 damages, and Thelma, suing through her father, W. E. Doyle, $10,300. Attorney Burton B. Crane represents them. The defendants assert the explosion was caused by Mrs. Doyle's negligence. The case will go to the jury tomorrow.

ALUMNI TO BREAKFAST

Dr. Rockwell D. Hunt of the University of Southern California will be the speaker at a College of the Pacific alumni reunion breakfast, which will be held at the City Club next Wednesday at 7:30 a.m. This is the second annual reunion held for Pacific alumni in Los Angeles county during teachers' institute. Reservations can be made by telephoning Mrs. L. Elliott Thompson, 8319 Towne avenue, telephone TW. 9008.

DECISION ON WATER PROPOSED

Goodcell Says Riparian Rights on Colorado River Should Be Determined

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

LONG BEACH, Dec. 13.—Rex B. Goodcell, former Collector of Internal Revenue for this district, declared at a meeting here today of the Southwest Water League that dangerous complications are involved in the riparian rights affected by the proposed Colorado River aqueduct.

"Before the aqueduct is built a ruling on these complications should be obtained from the United States Supreme Court," he said.

Goodcell added that the international situation is responsible for these complications. The rights of persons now using water from the Colorado River, in Mexico and the United States, take precedence over any rights sought to be obtained for cities or States.

When the Boulder Dam is finished the American government will not own any water behind the dam, Goodcell contended, and the entire situation should be gone over carefully before the expenditure for constructing the aqueduct is definitely undertaken.

The meeting of the Southwest Water League was the fifth it has held but the first in this city. Fifty delegates attended as representatives of many cities in the Southwest.

Andrea Nordskog, Los Angeles engineer, another delegate and speaker, denied the Southwest League is endeavoring to change the location of Boulder Dam. He said the aims of the league are to legalize the situation as affecting the distribution of water in the Metropolitan District and to check the actions of officials. He estimated the cost of the Colorado River Aqueduct as $372,000,000.

Ruel L. Olson, Los Angeles attorney, a third speaker, advised careful study of the watershed problem along with the other problems.

Councilman B. B. Stakemiller of Long Beach welcomed the delegates to the meeting, which was held in the City Council chamber.

JURY FAILS VERDICT IN GIRL DEATH

Deliberators Discharged in Trial of Doctor Over Operation Charge

Unable to agree upon a verdict after more than twenty-four hours of deliberation, the jury which heard the trial of Dr. William C. Fiske, charged with the murder of Vera Nelson, was discharged by Superior Judge Hardy yesterday. Judge Hardy ordered the case placed upon Superior Judge Wood's calendar tomorrow to be set for retrial.

After the jury was discharged it was disclosed that eight ballots were taken and that the vote of the jurors was eight to four for conviction.

Dr. Fiske was accused of having performed an illegal operation upon Miss Nelson in his Hermosa Beach office which resulted in her death. Philip Gibson, defense attorney, however, brought out testimony during the trial intended to prove that the girl already had attempted such an operation upon herself and then came to Dr. Fiske for aid.

Russion Course Scheduled Here

The Russian language will be taught for the first time at university college, University of Southern California, in the winter quarter which opens January 5, 1931, for late afternoon and evening college instruction at the Transportation Building.

MME. JULIETTE GREBIN.

Mme. Juliette Grebin, a native of Russia and formerly instructor in modern languages at the University of Melbourne, Australia, will head the course, to be given every Wednesday from 7 to 9:30 p.m. She also will be in charge of a beginning class in Italian on Tuesday from 7 to 9:30 p.m.

Other languages to be offered at university college during the winter quarter are: Beginning Chinese, in charge of Baron Hans Nordwein Von Koerber, on Wednesday from 7 to 9:20 p.m.; beginning and intermediate French, as well as and four courses in German. French literature of the seventeenth century, seven courses in Spanish

Statuary Viewed by Lorado Taft

Eighteen new statuary groups added to the collection at Forest Lawn Memorial Park during the last year were inspected yesterday by Lorado Taft, American sculptor, who is in Los Angeles for a brief stay. Mr. Taft inspected the new statuary as the guest of Hubert Eaton, chairman of the board of Forest Lawn.

Four of the groups are replicas of Michelangelo masterpieces, "Day and Night," "Twilight and Dawn," "Pieta" and "Moses," all of which are installed in the new memorial court of honor at Forest Lawn. The other new pieces are all originals.

TOYS GATHERED FOR POOR

Toys for the Christmas tree, which subsequently will be distributed among the needy children of the city, will be the price of admission to the annual Christmas party of the Canadian Society in the Friday Morning Club Building, 940 South Figueroa street, next Wednesday evening. All former residents of Canada and Britain and their friends are invited to the party.

Wrestling Fans Aid Christmas Party

WITH $1500 contributed by wrestling fans to start the ball rolling the Christ-child Christmas party to be given 2000 poor children at the Philharmonic Auditorium on the 22nd inst., is assured of success, Midnight Mission officials declared yesterday.

Through the courtesy of Lou Daro, fifty pretty girls passed collection boxes through the audience following a short speech from the ring by Mrs. D. R. Covell, the mission's social welfare director.

Children attending the party will each receive a large bag containing enough food for a family of five, a box of candy, a toy and a pair of stockings. They will be selected by parent-teacher associations from various neighborhoods and transported to and from the affair in automobiles. Entertainment by the 233 Club with Monte Blue as Santa Claus is promised.

Business Leaders Confer on Sending Delegation to Inaugural Ceremonies

Preliminary plans for Southern California's participation in Gov.-elect Rolph's inaugural ceremonies at Sacramento, January 4-6, were formulated yesterday when a committee of business and professional leaders met at a Biltmore luncheon, it was announced last night by Al G. Faulkner, chairman of the Southern California inaugural committee.

Special Southern Pacific trains will leave Los Angeles the night of January 4 and are expected to carry approximately 500 persons to the inauguration, Faulkner said. Entertainment features to be contributed by Hollywood screen players are being organized to be given in Memorial Auditorium at Sacramento Monday night, January 5, he said.

Those present at yesterday's meeting included E. J. Fleming, N. P. Milnor, Ingall W. Bull, Joseph Goldsmith, Jr., Hugh Evans, M. B. Silberberg, M. P. Snyder, Herbert R. MacMillan, Earl Gilmore, Senator McKinley, Gen. S. E. Howard, Harry Baine, Thornton Kinney, Mitchell Lewis, Sam Hardy, C. W. Huntington, C. Don Field, C. C. C. Tatum, Rodney Webster, Klyde Young, Clarence Wakefield, Lloyd K. Hillman, Richard Carlson, Joe Musgrove, Maurice Webber, Maurice de Mond and Henry Lee, all of Los Angeles; Mayor Michel and Austin McFadden of Santa Monica; Councilman Alexander, San Diego; Frank Tetley, Riverside; Joe Powers, Oxnard and Joe Burke, Santa Ana.

Boy Relates Tale of Flight From Kidnaper

A 10-year-old boy, his hands tied with a heavy cord, foiled a kidnaping plot yesterday afternoon by being faster on his feet than his captor.

Arthur Baker, 4438 Ratain street, was standing in front of a store at 4635 Whittier Boulevard, when an autoist drove up to the curb and grabbed him, he asserts. The boy was driven to Coyote Pass, where the autoist tied the child's hands with a heavy cord. He then drove to Monterey Park, where he stopped again, this time to fix his car.

When the machine came to a halt the boy jumped from the car and beat the man in a foot race to the home of his uncle, L. A. Baker, 331 East Newmark street, who lived close by. Sheriffs of Belvedere Garden substation are investigating.

MORE MONEY NEEDED FOR GARBAGE WAGES

An appropriation of $17,000 will be necessary to pay overtime wages in the garbage and rubbish collection service for the remainder of the fiscal year, according to a report filed with the City Council yesterday by the Board of Public Works. The request for the money was referred to the Finance Committee.

West Adams Fete Start Set

Santa Claus, arriving by plane instead of by sleigh, will set in motion at 1 p.m. next Saturday the community Christmas festival arranged by the West Adams Chamber of Commerce. He will land at the Lincoln Airport on Crenshaw Boulevard, whence he will be escorted to the West Adams business district by bands and paraders.

In the evening he will continue his modern role by flying over the district in an illuminated plane.

THEATER RITES TO DRAW MANY

Pilgrimage Play Will Get New $200,000 Home

Ground Will Be Broken for Show House Today

Leaders to Give Addresses in Program at Site

Ground-breaking ceremonies at the site of the new Pilgrimage Play Theater to be erected at Highland and Cahuenga avenues at a cost of $200,000 are expected to draw large numbers of people to the Hollywood foothills this afternoon. The exercises begin at 3 o'clock and the program will embrace music selections and short addresses by prominent persons.

Among those who will speak are Dr. R. B. Von KleinSmid, president of the University of Southern California; Mayor Porter, Mrs. Robert J. Burdette, Byron Hanna, Joseph Scott and Rev. Stewart MacLennan. Music will be furnished by the Sol Cohen Trio, by the Pilgrimage Play vocal quartet and by other organizations. Admission to the full program will be free to the public.

Following today's ground breaking actual work of construction on the building will start tomorrow morning. It is expected the structure, which is designed to seat 1471 persons and which will be of reinforced concrete throughout, will be completed in June. Opening of the Pilgrimage Play's eleventh annual season is scheduled for July 1, next.

In addition to providing greater seating space than was afforded by the old Pilgrimage Play Theater, which was destroyed by fire two years ago, the new playhouse embodies many striking architectural and other improvements in its designs. It is expected that it will attract great interest among the 15,000 or more members of the National Educational Association who will convene in Los Angeles next July.

New All-Metal Amphibian to Arrive Shortly

With the announcement by the Towle Aircraft Company of Detroit that the Towle all-metal amphibian, powered by two-oil burning Packard Diesel motors, will be delivered to Airco, Inc., west coast distributors, within ten days, Charles H. Veil, vice-president of Airco, immediately began plans for a civic reception for this famous land-and-water ship.

The arrival of the Towle 450-horsepower ten-passenger ship will mark the commercial advent of both all-metal amphibians and Packard Diesel plane motors on the Pacific Coast. Airco plans to use Towle products on several coastwise runs, details to be announced shortly.

Flying Schools Furnish Pilots

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—Graduates of Federally approved flying schools are found by the government to have the greatest chance of gaining their pilot licenses.

In a survey of applicants from schools of flight training during the first half of 1930, 92.66 per cent of flyers from approved schools met the requirements for Federal licenses while but 67.34 per cent of flyers from other schools were successful.

A check of the records of students enrolled in approved flying schools showed that 91.5 per cent completed their flying courses and obtained one of the four grades of Federal licenses. There are thirty-eight schools on the approved list.

Legion Makes Book Appeal

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—State Commander B. W. Gearhart of the American Legion has sent an appeal to all posts in his organization throughout California and to all friends of the Legion for donations of books both nonfiction and fiction, for the libraries of the State Veterans' Home near Yountville, Napa county.

Books may be sent direct to the Veterans' Home, care of Col. Nelson M. Holderman, commandant, or to local American Legion Posts which will transship the books to the disabled veterans.

CHIROPRACTORS' BABY SHOW PLAN REVEALED

Three days, one day more than usual, will be devoted to the fourth annual baby show, children's clinic and health contest of the Los Angeles college of chiropractic, according to announcements yesterday of Dr. Charles H. Wood, general chairman. The event will be held January 16, 17 and 18. Free health examinations of hundreds of children are scheduled, Wood said. A committee is being formed to carry on the work.

TROUBADOURS WILL SING

The Troubadours, a costumed group of seventy-five boys of LeCompte Junior High School, will be a principal attraction at a Christmas program to be given in First Presbyterian Church, Hollywood today at 7 p.m. The boys are from 13 to 15 years of age and appear in Spanish attire. They sing under direction of Miss Mae Nightingale.

REINDEER IMPORTED

MUNICH, Dec. 13. (AP)—A herd of reindeer has been imported from Lapland to the Zugspitze, the highest mountain in Germany, by the Bavarian Zugspitz railway, offering an additional attraction to ski-runners during the season of winter sports.

MODEL SOUGHT FOR UNIVERSITY

Hindu Engineers Study Plan of Westwood U.C.L.A.

World Searched for Ideas on $30,000,000 College

Europe Goal of Travelers After Stay Here

Two prominent engineers from India have just completed a detailed examination and inspection of the University of California at Los Angeles, their object being to aid them in the designing and building of a new $30,000,000 university in their native country. They are S. Zaminddan, State engineer, and S. A. Rass, who have been commissioned to undertake their task by the Nizam's government, Hyderabad, Deccan, India. Their project is to be named the Osmania University.

The two will spend nearly a year in visiting the larger and better-known universities over the world, gaining every possible bit of knowledge as to new and practical ideas to guide them in the shaping of their new institution.

They were escorted through the buildings and over the campus of the University of California at Los Angeles by Dr. Ernest Carroll Moore, director, and by Robert M. Underhill, secretary of the regents.

In view of the fact that less than $10,000,000 has been expended in building the new University of California at Los Angeles, it is interesting to note the great expenditure in comparison, which has been set aside for the new university in India. A campus of 2000 acres has been obtained for the Osmania University, while the campus here is slightly less than 400 acres. The instruction at Osmania University is to be in Hindustani language, and already $1,000,000 has been expended in the translation of 1000 volumes for its library.

WIDE RANGE

The two engineers first visited the Imperial University at Tokio, Japan, then came direct to the University of California at Berkeley. They next visited Stanford University, then came to Los Angeles to inspect the University of California at Los Angeles. While here they also visited the California Institute of Technology, then departed for Chicago where they are to visit the University of Chicago.

Their itinerary in this country also provides for visits to the University of Wisconsin, the University of Pennsylvania, Princeton University and Columbia University. They will then go to London, and they plan to spend about six months in Europe, visiting Germany, France, Spain, Morocco and Turkey.

Japanese Start Movement for Life Extension

TOKIO, Dec. 13. (AP)—The Japan Red Cross, taking note of vital statistics which show the Japanese are shorter-lived than most other nationalities, has inaugurated a "movement for the prevention of premature decay." The plan corresponds to "life-extension" institutions in America.

Statistics show the average life span in Japan is 43.08 years for men and 43.2 years for women, as compared with 49.24 years for men and 53.24 for women in the United States.

The Red Cross has opened an exhibit in Tokio featuring charts and other material designed to educate the Japanese about diet, exercise, clothing and rest.

Germany Turns to United States for Yule Apples

BERLIN, Dec. 13. (AP)—Christmas without apples is unthinkable in Germany, and red-cheeked "snow apples" imported from the far-away State of Washington are in great favor. They are sold as "Amerikaner," without further designation. But native apples, too, are in constant demand.

In the case of Berlin, they are brought to the metropolis on large barges. The skippers of these barges eliminate the middleman by erecting little sales huts on their vessels in which the customer can do his shopping.

FOURTEEN COUNTRIES TO SHOW AT BERLIN

BERLIN, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Fourteen countries—America, Australia, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Denmark, England, Esthonia, Hungary, India, Italy, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Palestine and Switzerland—have already engaged space for the international exhibition of city planning and dwellings which will be the central feature of the German Building Exposition to be held in Berlin next summer. Negotiations are proceeding with other countries.

CHINA WILL PROTECT NATIVE INDUSTRIES

NANKING, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Early promulgation of the National tariff to bring about enforcement of a protective policy for native industries in China is urged in a telegram sent to the Ministry of Finance by the Shanghai General Chamber of Commerce in compliance with a number of requests from various commercial organizations.

Bad laws, if they exist, should be repealed as soon as possible; still, while they continue in force, for the sake of example, they should be religiously observed.

Today's Bible Text

And He that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. Write: for these words are true and faithful. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely.—Rev. xxi:5, 6.

THE CURE

Not new laws, but adequate enforcement of those now in existence, is President Hoover's recipe for ridding the country of racketeers. It is the law enforcer's province to oversee, not to overlook.

TRANSCONTINENTAL HIGHWAY

What prospects of adventure, romance, delight the mere words, "A highway from Alaska to South America," conjure up! At a national convention this month the undertaking was unanimously indorsed.

FORCED REFORM

It probably is a blessing to mankind that while a fanatical reformer of the Mussolini type can make people obey by show of arms he cannot control their thoughts. And how quickly they get back to normalcy, once the iron grip is broken.

IN MILLION-DOLLAR CLASS

The Army-Navy football game gate will stack up with the takings of a prize fight in which Jack Dempsey is one of the principals. The estimate is $1,250,000. Too bad some method cannot be devised to add the rake-off of the scalpers to the pot for the unemployed.

TRUSTS OR NO TRUSTS

Mr. Macmillan bewails the anti-trust laws that beget "disastrous competition" in the retailing of gasoline. But the Sherman law doesn't explain the fact that, throughout most of the year, Los Angeles pays more for fuel than cities so far removed from the course of manufacture that the cost of retailing necessarily is higher.

WEEK-END DRIVING

President Henry of the American Automobile Association says there are 3,000,000 autos on the American highways valued at less than $25 each. We not only believe we met them all on the road over the week-end, but are sure their owners thought they were driving $8000 cars and that none of the others had any right to be there.

WHY THE SECRECY?

In spite of official denials that Mme. Magda Lupescu has been in Rumania since the arrival there last June of King Carol, the "scandal sheets" of the world continue to keep her in Bucharest. If the Rumanian government wishes to still the rumors a little publicity as to her real whereabouts might have the desired effect.

EARLY SHOPPING

Big Los Angeles department store reports business for the first week in December is ahead of the same period for last year. Which not only indicates good times ahead, but shows that the fellow who declares annually, "I am not going to do anything this year except for the children," is doing his shopping a little earlier for the regular list.

ANSWERING BACK

The world will always give a cheerful "How do you do?" to the person who responds with a "Fit-as-a-fiddle" reply. But everyone gets tired of having that friendly inquiry elicit nothing but a melancholy recital of griefs, ills, fears and suspicions. If the world isn't speaking to you try to remember how you answered back the last time it did speak.

DEMAND AND SUPPLY

At the recent meeting of the National Chamber of Commerce organization in Portland, Or., a California delegate to the conference stated: "The world is out of joint; something is radically wrong in our economic structure." And he cited as a conducive cause the overproduction of rubber, silk and other commodities in China and the dearth of cotton and machinery of all kinds in the Orient. It is claimed that civilization can still learn much from savage races. The savage traded his commodities without the assistance of a complicated currency system. Given an equitable basis of measurement and value, why not trade wheat direct for rubber and silk?

THE LESSON OF HARD TIMES

Disregarding all that has been taught in educational institutions and written in books, each generation, it would seem, must learn its own lessons at its own cost. The follies of the "gay nineties" are regarded as an allurement rather than a warning. In fact, many still-active people lived through those years without even suspecting that they were gay.

Seven years of opulence in Egypt left the Egyptians wholly unprepared for the seven years of distress that followed. During the years of prosperity a generation attained maturity that knew from experience nothing of famine. The old men who spoke of droughts that had been, and would return again, were simply tolerated as hopeless glooms. Youth would not permit the joy of the present to be poisoned by memories of a past that was as dead as the pharaohs sleeping in their walled tombs.

Civilizations and centuries have passed over the surface of the earth since Joseph went down into Egypt. A grazing and agricultural era has been succeeded by an era of industry and it has remained for the present generation to learn from bitter experience that there are cycles of famine in industry as silent in their approach and as relentless as those in agriculture.

One has but to read the records of history to learn that distress always dogs the heels of opulence. During prosperous times, in the school of thrift are only empty benches. Perhaps it is asking too much to expect youth to prepare for an adversity it has never experienced. We chide the grasshopper. But how is the grasshopper, born in the spring, to know that summer is not eternal? Why should it not make merry over the ant, storing away dried food when the green is so much more palatable?

A few years ago, all those able and willing to work in this country were employed. Wages were high and more was expended on luxuries than on necessities. It was an era of silks and fine linens. Youth rode gaily away in the pursuit of happiness, without counting the cost.

We have just passed through a lean year. Seldom before have so many able and willing to work been out of employment. To millions, to be deprived temporarily of gainful employment means to be deprived temporarily of life's actual necessities.

The grasshopper of youth is learning that, to every generation, winter surely comes, an economic condition that will not yield overnight to political panaceas. Millions are now learning in the hard school of experience the first inescapable lessons of thrift.

Yet the sun of industry has not fallen from the heavens. Spring will return to what should be a chastened and enlightened generation. We are paying the price of our wastefulness rather than of our sins. Riding fast and recklessly, we have run out of gas and must be content to walk until the tank is filled again.

This is no time to turn to untested patent nostrums, no time to seek political remedies for economic ills. The fat years came, and too many heeded not the opportunities they offered to save what they had easily acquired. A lean year came, and caught the spenders out of gasoline. Demolishing the service stations will not fill the tank.

How many now in distress are saying, "If I only had saved!"

How many of these will remember, when the sun of industry shines again, the lessons of thrift they are forced to learn in their present distress? Good times will come again, and hard times will follow them. It has been so since the beginning; but the age-old precepts of thrift are always available for those willing to learn.

LET LOS FELIZ ALONE

That Los Feliz Boulevard is practically the only street in town so far unspoiled by "spot zoning" for business purposes is not an argument for ruining it also. Time after time the City Council and the City Planning Commission have refused "spot zoning" applications for this street, but the appliers are persistent and the City Planning Commission—which seems to be running in reverse gear a good deal of the time lately—has this time yielded to their arguments.

Such arguments could only be commercial; that is, the petitioner could urge that the change would benefit him personally and financially. He could not urge that the change is needed or wanted, either by the city at large or by the residents of the neighborhood. There is plenty of business property in the vicinity already, which satisfies the needs of the residents, and there is an overplus of business property in the city as a whole. Further business zoning can only depreciate the value of property already in use for such purposes, and thus have a bad effect on the whole community, and on its ability to pay taxes.

The zoning law, if it means anything, means that property owners will be protected, when they buy property for residence purposes, against business encroachment, until there has been such a change in the neighborhood or in the city as a whole as to make a change in the character of the property desirable. Certainly there has been no change in the Los Feliz district which warrants its destruction as a street of beautiful homes, nor is such a change likely in the near future; unless, of course, this business application is granted. That will be an opening wedge for a swift overturning.

The precedent heretofore set should be followed and the present zoning of Los Feliz Boulevard should be maintained intact.

CRIME AS AN ISSUE

A Middle-West politician has defined the national crime wave and the general ignoring of laws as "Capone-ism." The head of Chicago's predatory forces may yet become an issue in a national election, but if we know the American people the party that ignores the Capone brand of politics will lead the procession.

EVENING THE SEXES

The only difference between the sexes in the air seems to be in the power of the plane and the luck of weather conditions.

The LEE SIDE O' LA
By Lee Shippey

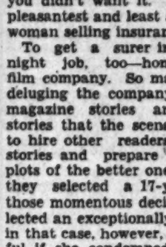
Personal Glimpses of Famous Southlanders

ANN HARDING is at the very top in Hollywood. She and her husband, Harry Bannister, have built a home at 7430 Pyramid Drive, or the apex of the pyramid. Next to those in Ellen Beach Yaw's "Larksnest" near Covina, their living-room windows are the biggest we ever saw in a home, and from one side of that room one may look down one side of a young mountain and down the opposite side of it from the other side. You simply couldn't get more view from an airplane.

But that isn't the only way in which Ann has got to the top. In less than two years she has become one of the great figures in talking pictures.

The Old Army Game

"I really never thought of being an actress," Ann told us. "In fact, my parents reared me with the idea that actors were not the sort of people one met socially. Father was an army officer. So when people ask where I came from I have to just say from around and about. Father came from New England, mother from Florida, they were married in the Presidio of San Francisco and I was born at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. Army people live like that. Father was a captain then and gradually rose to the rank of colonel, which meant there was never quite enough pay for a good home and good clothes. We had to skimp through. And he got all the foreign service there was—Cuba, Mexican border, China in the Boxer uprising. That meant commutation of quarters for us most of the time—we lived in some town near the post at which he was stationed. Brass buttons are fascinating things to girls, but army wives have a lot to put up with.



"Father got to be a general in the World War and after the war was head of an army training school in Kentucky for a while. There were only two or or three officers' daughters there and more than 500 student officers. I am a little vain of the fact that though I was only 16 then I didn't lose my head. It was a great place to be the general's daughter, but if one married a second lieutenant she ceased to be the general's daughter, socially. She took her husband's rank and got snubbed by the wife of a captain, who never liked her, anyway.

"Then father was demoted, in the general readjustment soon after the war and ordered to report to the War College in Washington. Washington was so overcrowded and he was so disgusted he wired us to go where we wanted to, but not to come to Washington. So we went to New York. And I tried to earn my living as an insurance agent."

Pleased Customers, But Captured Few

Ann was only 17 and she isn't the insistent type. The ideal insurance agent is one who can get his extension - sole shoe in the door, so that you can't close it, or his mouth either. You can't answer the arguments of an insurance agent—all you can do is close the door on him. And Ann isn't the sort who would thrust anything on you, no matter how good it is, if you didn't want it. So she was the pleasantest and least successful young woman selling insurance in New York.

To get a surer income she got a night job, too—home reader for a film company. So many people were deluging the company with novels, magazine stories and manuscript stories that the scenario editors had to hire other readers to read the stories and prepare digests of the plots of the better ones and naturally they selected a 17-year-old girl for those momentous decisions. They selected an exceptionally intelligent one in that case, however, and it is doubtful if she condemned and cast into outer darkness many manuscripts which really should have been passed on to higher-ups for consideration. Insurance and script reading combined made her a living.

Ann Goes Slumming

But Ann found life a bore. She yearned for adventure. She longed to do something positively desperate. Army circles being so supermoral that they frowned especially on the stage, she decided the wildest escapade imaginable would be to get some connection with a Greenwich Village theater. She couldn't quite lower herself to the idea of getting into a professional troupe, but she heard that the Provincetown Players were a semi-amateur group which included some really nice people. She decided to go down there and try to establish some connection with the Provincetown Players for a couple of weeks — reading plays or carrying a spear or anything.

"I knocked timidly at a door," she says. "I was a little surprised when a very pleasant voice, not an ogre voice, called 'Come in.' I entered, but was careful to leave the door wide open behind me. I was all on springs for a hasty escape. But the man was very courteous and after I was seated asked if I minded his cigar. Even in the insurance business I had met men more ogre-like than that.

"After I'd told what I wanted he said: 'We're having a kaffee-klatsch tomorrow afternoon, Susan's going to read us one of her plays. Come back then.'

"I didn't know what a kaffee-klatsch was. But evidently there was going to be at least one other woman there, so I decided to be present. When I arrived the door was opened by a Dresden shepherdess, as dainty and exquisite a woman as breathes—Susan Glaspell. There were a lot of charming folks there. I was so impressed I tried to take in everything. And when the session was about over the director turned to me and said:

"'You seem able to listen. Downstairs on my office desk you'll find a part. Take it home and study it and come here tomorrow and we'll see what you can do with it.'

"He didn't tell me it was 'the' part of the play. He was a wonderful director who liked to work with unspoiled clay."

Baby Changed All

Ann kept right on selling insurance and reading scripts till she scored so decidedly with the Provincetown Players that several other jobs were offered her. She played on Broadway till about three years ago. About four years ago she married her leading man, Harry Barmister, and it was not the movies, but the desire for home life, which brought her to Hollywood. Her husband was on tour in "Strange Interlude," and a couple of years ago she left the stage to take care of their baby daughter. She rented a house in Pasadena, to keep clear out of Movieland, to await Harry's arrival here. As Mrs. Bannister she escaped filmland notice for a while, but when Bannister arrived it became known that Mrs. Bannister of Pasadena was Ann Harding. They were offered a joint contract, which meant they could have a home and not be separated from each other or their baby—and that's how Ann became a movie star.

The Bannisters have a lovely home, but they rarely entertain more than four people at once. They take no part in screenland's social whoopee. Ann is vivid without being vivacious, an intent, rather quiet little woman who acts without trying and could hardly stop if she tried. Her expression changes unconsciously with every sentence she utters and interprets her words. She likes to drive and doesn't have a chauffeur. She isn't afraid of anything except vulgarity, and for art's sake might even stand a little of that. But in her home she is all young wife and young mother.

AN INGROWN CHRISTMAS

The poor are always with us. It was so 2000 years ago; it may be so for ages to come. The handicapped by disease and abnormalities of mind and body stumble in our path. Weak wills are still fettered and many are intermittent in their efforts.

The least of these calls for the best in us. In the higher civilization the higher lift the lower. In the survival of the fittest, the responsibility of the fit is paramount.

Big shoulders were not given to elbow their way to the front; but to bear the burdens of the less fortunate. Bright minds were not conferred to outwit the foolish; but to show them the way and lead them in it.

An ingrown Christmas has no place in the holiday season. The blaze of the Yule log is the flame of affection. The Christmas candle is no headlight just to show the way for selfishness; it is a street lamp to flood the highway for all. The Christmas gift is not a debt-paying affair; it is a stealthy bestowal to help without thought of reward.

An ingrown Christmas will bring as much pleasure as other ingrown institutions. It is a deformity of an ideal. It is as painful as any cell gone wrong in the body. It is as hateful as a diseased conscience and is a secret thief of joy.

WHAT OTHERS THINK ABOUT IT

PROMPT PROOF OF IT
[Baltimore Sun]

There has been one illustration in Chicago of the truth of Mr. Hoover's statement that the States can clean up their own criminality if there is public sentiment to do so.

Here is the case of "Fur" Sammons, murderer, gunman and bootlegger, who has been at liberty for a number of years on "parole," granted after he had been reprieved forty-eight hours before he was due to suffer the death penalty for a murder committed in 1903. Sentence was commuted to life imprisonment and later, in 1923, to fifty years by Gov. Len Small. Within a month thereafter Sammons, by some hocus-pocus known to Illinois justice, was released on parole. Hauled up a few weeks ago on a charge of vagrancy, it is now suddenly discovered that parole was not applicable in case of a commuted sentence, and Sammons has been returned to the penitentiary to serve the balance of his term, which means thirty years.

This is an amazing development in the administration of justice, one which throws a high light on the strange doings of the Illinois courts. But, accepting the facts as stated and assuming that the action taken is to be attributed to a reawakened sense of the State's responsibility for suppression of crime, the case bears out the President's proper stand that the State, not the Federal government, is the agency which must act.

THAT NEXT WAR

Thanks for the compliment, is the feeling in France in reply to Ludendorff's prediction that in the next war the French will be the victors over an alliance of Germany, Italy, Russia and Great Britain.

Pleased With Peggy

BOSTON (Mass.) Dec. 3.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Greetings from Boston to the "Citizens of No Mean City," Los Angeles. We are indebted to the local press for picture of one Peggy Hamilton—a daughter of your city, appointed as official hostess of Los Angeles. Permit us to congratulate the lady on her mission through Europe to invite all to come to Olympic Games in your city in 1932. Coupled with the wish for success in your municipal enterprise.

Rotten and Dangerous

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 9.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Harry Carr says some foolish things, but every now and then he says something so wonderfully good that it atones for all the rest. His characterization in today's paper of Judge Lindsey is one of the good ones. Lindsey's doctrine is so utterly rotten and dangerous that nothing but a prompt and decisive repudiation of it does it justice. To condone it or even to remain silent or inactive regarding it is to participate in its baleful influence. The whole country ought to acclaim Bishop Manning for having the courage to damn it in the presence of its author.

Contributory Causes?

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 10. [To the Editor of The Times:] In order to change the present economic situation the world over let us first remedy the causes that brought it about.

Right now we are only clutching at measures which are bound to increase our taxes and not bring prosperity. All of the following are contributing causes of the situation and revisions should be immediately made: Prohibition, the tariff, the introduction into our labor market of Filipinos, Asiatics and other cheap labor, war debts, the Young plan, Treaty of Versailles, nonrecognition of Russia, the depreciation of silver and the consequent loss of trade with countries using the silver standard, the unsettled condition and locked door of India.

The world suffers from stagnation and not overproduction.

WILLIAM STOKER.

Married and Single

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 10.—[To the Editor of The Times:] With reference to Mr. and Mrs. Roy Reese, who seem to discount the fact that society is built on returns from gainful employment (most people's shelter, food, clothing or whatever they possess was paid through earnings derived from gainful occupation) and as it is quite impossible to correct this manner of living they refuse to alleviate present hardships by allowing a man and his wife to have gainful occupations at the same time.

Inasmuch as their logic is to avoid penalizing marriage by permitting women to work after marriage, it should be just as logical to make the hours of employment short enough to accommodate those (who due to circumstances, society, or otherwise, are compelled to continue life in a state other than marriage) to replenish their finances in the accepted manner of gainful employment.

LLOYD RICH.

What Would It Settle?

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 8.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I see that the leaders of the dry forces of the nation have refused to agree to the proposition of the wets to hold a nation-wide referendum on the Eighteenth Amendment.

I think the drys have made a mistake. I favor a referendum.

In the first place it is bad politics. It looks as if the drys were afraid to leave the question to a vote of the people. The wets have always claimed that prohibition was put over. This claim is bunk, but it is bad policy to do anything that will lend support to that claim. In fact, I am strongly of the opinion that the assumed anxiety of the wets for a popular referendum is very largely a pose. I think if the drys would enthusiastically join in a demand for a popular referendum the enthusiasm of the wets for it would immediately cool.

In the second place, a popular referendum would clarify the situation. The vacillation of politicians on this question is due to the uncertainty as to what popular sentiment actually is. Nobody actually knows whether a majority of the people of the United States favor prohibition or not. A popular referendum will settle the matter.

L. A. SWAN.

DYING WISH FULFILLED

The dying wish of an English ex-soldier that a watch be returned to its owner, a German soldier, will be fulfilled, according to the announcement of German Consul Hunecke, at Hull, Eng. Hunecke recently received the watch, accompanied by an anonymous letter. The letter requested the consul to forward the watch to its owner or his family, whose name and address were inscribed on the case. "The inclosed watch," stated the letter, "was in the possession of my brother, who recently died as a result of war service. The family, in accordance with his wish, would like the watch to be restored, if possible, to the soldier to whom it belongs, or to his family. We ask as a favor that you will do what you can."

Continued mild weather permitted the continuation of Denmark's building boom through the winter.

THE "THING" CALLED LIFE

By The Foothill Philosopher

According to a sensational report, not of scientists but of a reporter, "the secret of life, for which science has been searching, may lie in a test tube in the biological laboratory of the Cleveland Clinic Foundation."

Almost anything, possibly anything and everything may be, might be—but the fact that unheard of things might be does not appeal to many of us as cause for undue excitement.

The reporter states that brain tissues from a freshly killed animal were reduced to ashes and that to the salts and other elements obtained thereby were added certain other elements, that the combination was treated electrically and that "before the astonished eyes of the scientists appeared a 'thing,' with all the characteristics, or nearly all, of a living cell."

In that phrase, "nearly all," lies the weakness of the "thing" said to have been produced by the scientists and which is believed to be living protozoa.

The scientists are said to "stand in great awe of what they have found." In the name of common sense, why should they stand in awe of a "thing" which they have synthetically "created," but which they do not understand?

It is reported that the scientists will ask the American Society for the Advancement of Science to help them interpret the meaning of what they have discovered and that they will not be surprised if the society pronounces it "synthetic life."

Maybe the society will call the "thing" synthetic life—which will have no effect whatever upon the "thing." The "thing" is a force, or a combination of forces, and its consciousness (if it has any) will continue to be universal in character and not specialized as is the case with forms imdued with the principle of life. If there is any intelligence in any form of force (and there is such intelligence in all organic forms) it is so because intelligence has created the form.

It is unthinkable that "blind force" could create an organized form, or a materialized idea, cognizable by mind. There may be no proof that force, of itself, never has created a form, but there certainly is no proof that it ever has done so. Blind force never yet effected an organization of ideas or material forms used by man, who always has been the combiner and organizer of the forms he used, and it is logical (though, perhaps, not demonstrable) that all forms, including the human form, were brought into existence by intelligence.

If it requires mind to combine elemental substance, or forces, to create forms, how much greater intelligence must be necessary to create, or emanate, conscious, feeling, thinking forms, or forms in which the thinking principle exists! Unconscious forces cannot produce mind—it requires mind to do that.

"For the sake of argument," let us grant, for a moment, that the scientists have produced a "thing" that can feel and think. If they have accomplished such a feat, it is not blind force that did it—it is mind. And if those scientists have actually created, or rather combined substances to make, such a creature, have they yet discovered the secret of life? Have they not yet to explain the origin of the substances they used in making the "thing," as well as the origin of the intelligence they used in their marvelous scientific operations?

ENGLISH "MIXED SCHOOLS"

BY SUZANNE PEHKOFF

When co-education was first tried out in the secondary schools of England, there were dark misgivings. After some years of the experiment, the Head Masters have come out whole-heartedly in favor of it. None of the dark misgivings entertained by the more conservative critics of the school system proved to have any foundation in fact.

We learn with no little surprise that when the system was first introduced, it was feared that the girls would not be able to follow the same curriculum as the boys. The strain on the weak feminine intellect would be too great, the masters opined. With surprise and doubtless a little disappointment, they now concede that their feminine pupils can master any given subject as well as the boys and readily adapt themselves to new methods of teaching.

The greatest value secured from coeducation is found to be on the social side. In the mixed schools, as they are termed in England, the young people learn to meet the opposite sex in a friendly manner that makes life easier for them later on.

Graduates of young ladies' boarding schools usually have to go to work in a store or office after graduation, and they are so bedazzled by the proximity of desirable members of the opposite sex that their efficiency is undermined, whereas the product of the mixed schools can meet new youths in a friendly fashion that promotes efficiency on all sides. From this point of view alone, the head masters declared, co-education was more than worth while.

Bicycle "Speeder" Fined

When Alexander Hassan tried to ride his bicycle down a hill at Downhill, Ireland, recently, the machine got beyond control and ran into a group of boys playing football in the road. The boys escaped unhurt, but Hassan was knocked unconscious and had to spend several days in a hospital while cuts in his head healed. When released he was arrested for speeding and fined.

SOCIAL WORLD DESERTED FOR ART

Lowe Widow Establishes Gallery Here in New Venture

Mrs. Leon P. Lowe

MRS. LEON P. LOWE, prominent in Pasadena and Los Angeles society, has forsaken the social world for the realm of art by opening an art gallery in Lafayette Park Place.

Mrs. Lowe, who is the widow of Leon Percival Lowe, oldest son of Prof. T. S. C. Lowe, for whom Mt. Lowe was named, has many old masters of the famous Lowe collection, as well as a number of paintings by well-known American artists.

She has furnished her gallery and a studio for living quarters with the tapestries, rugs and museum pieces which formed the setting for her own home.

The gallery has Miss Florence Brice, art and curio expert, as an associate.

RADIO STAR 'THANKED' IN ADVANCE

Entertainer Congratulated by Listeners-in Full Hour Before Rendering Songs

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (NANA)—Music publishers naturally are eager to have radio favorites sing their songs over the air, because it results in sheet music purchases for homes all over the country, but sometimes they are too eager and too hasty in seeking to curry favor with "the talent," as radio performers are called.

Here's an example: A radio star was scheduled to do some important singing at 8 o'clock. At 7 o'clock he received three telegrams, each from a different publisher and each congratulating him on the beauty of his singing and telling him that it was just great and had been so much enjoyed and that his enunciation was so perfect.

That riled the singer. He thought it would have been nicer if, before praising his performance so highly, the publishers had listened to it. He would have been more impressed by their sincerity.

Turkey Starts Building Great Bridge in Asia

EL-AZIZ (Turkey) Dec. 13. (AP)—Despite hard times Turkey has begun construction of what is to be the biggest bridge in Asia.

It is to span the Euphrates River, between this city and Malatia, thus forming a link between the young republic's eastern provinces, where the recent Kurdish revolt occurred, and her more stabilized western provinces.

The bridge is to be 486 feet long and will have three arches, the longest of which will measure 358 feet.

Muscle Action Produces Static Effect in Radio

LONDON, Dec. 13. (AP)—The sound of muscles in action has been broadcast by radio here.

Bryan H. Matthews, talking on animal electricity, demonstrated the strength of electricity in his own body by amplifying the current and passing it to a loud speaker. With varying degrees of muscle action the volume of sound, which seemed to radio listeners much like ordinary static, increased or lessened.

PRINCESS HONORED

BRUSSELS, Dec. 13. (AP)—On her twenty-fifth birthday anniversary Princess Astrid was presented with a huge diadem of glass wrought in the shape of flowers. The presentation was made in behalf of the Liege glassworkers by Henri Miesen.

HAVANA SKYLINE CHANGES

American Architect Sells Cuban Capital Idea That Steel Buildings Resist Hurricanes

HAVANA, Dec. 13. (AP)—Leonard E. Brownson, an American architect, is credited with having done more to change the skyline of Havana in the last thirty years than any other single individual.

When Brownson came to Cuba at the close of the Spanish-American War, he found Havana "Old World" to its very foundations.

Its buildings were piles of solid masonry, erected by men whose firm conviction it was that mass made for strength. Strength is still an important factor in Cuba, subject as it is to hurricanes.

Squat buildings with massive foundations and walls of great thickness were the architectural heritage of the Spanish regime. Brownson knew that buildings constructed with a tough backbone of steel I-beams could be made taller, less bulky and stronger than those built of masonry alone, and in his first big contract here he "put across" his idea to "reinforce with steel."

Brownson's first big job was the Miramar Hotel, and he made it Cuba's first modern edifice. This opened the way to a fresh era of construction on the island.

Brownson's crowning work was the new $17,000,000 Capitolio, considered one of the most beautiful of the world's capitols. The new National Hotel, completed at a cost of $7,000,000, is his most recent achievement.

"With this modern construction of steel frame-work we have practically eliminated danger of collapse in case of hurricanes," he said.

BUSINESS REVERSAL WINS JOB

Salesman Fails as Seller, But Succeeds in Teaching Others How to Sell

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (NANA)—It is the opinion of Dr. Stephen I. Miller, executive director of the National Association of Creditmen, that a number of business men should not be business men. They don't know how and they constitute an economic weakness in the nation.

"Failure statistics show incompetence as the main factor in business suspensions," he holds, and one source of his information is his experience as national education director of the American Institute of Banking.

Dr. Miller quit trying to be a salesman when he discovered that he couldn't sell and then proceeded to make a success in teaching others how.

As a lad he milked 13,000 cows, according to his estimate, led a town band, attended Heidelberg and Harvard, and was forest ranger on the edge of a desert.

Stone Marker Fixes Grave of Hanged Bandit

SANTA CLARA, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—The grave of Tiburcio Vasquez, one of California's most noted bandits, who was hanged in the yard of the Santa Clara County Jail fifty-five years ago, has been marked by an impressive stone monument in the Santa Clara Catholic Cemetery. The stone which is of polished granite was erected at the suggestion of Rev. W. H. Culligan, S. J., pastor of St. Clare's Church of this city. It bears the inscription, "Vasquez Tiburcio. 1835-1875. Rest in Peace." The grave was formerly marked by a large wooden cross from ten to twelve feet in height, which was later replaced by a small palm tree.

After years of successful raids, robberies and murders, Vasquez was trapped in a cabin in Southern California and captured by a posse. He is said to have pleaded innocense to the last of the murders with which he was charged, before he ascended the steps of the scaffold.

Sergeant Wins Flying Cross

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Staff Sergeant Robert F. Summers, Ninety-first Observation Squadron, Air Corps, Crissy Field, whose home address is Statesville, N. C., was decorated yesterday with the Distinguished Flying Cross by direction of President Hoover, for heroism while participating in an aerial flight in Hawaii on May 14, 1930, at which time he was serving with the Fourth Observation Squadron.

The presentation was made at the Presidio by Maj.-Gen. Malin Craig, commanding general Ninth Corps Area, and a review of the Thirtieth Infantry and Crissy Field troops followed.

King Receives Silk Neckties

LONDON, Dec. 13. (AP)—Like American Presidents, King George gets lots of presents. His latest gift is a set of silk neckties woven on a handloom by descendants of Huguenot refugees who established a weaving industry which still employs a small group.

RULERS FIX PLANS FOR CHRISTMAS

Members of British Royal Family to Spend Holidays at Sandringham This Year

LONDON, Dec. 13. (NANA)—Most of the members of the royal family will spend Christmas at Sandringham this year, and the Queen has recently been staying there for a week to supervise the necessary alterations to the nursery suite, in order to provide accommodation for Princess Margaret's first visit to Norfolk.

The present nursery suite, which the Queen had prepared some three years ago for Princess Elizabeth, consists of day and night nurseries, rooms for those in attendance on the royal babies, a small kitchen and a bathroom. The largest of these apartments is the day nursery, which is very bright and airy, and so arranged as to be free from draughts.

The Queen is a great believer in cheerful colors for babies, and the prevailing shades in the day nursery are white and blue, while the night nursery, which immediately adjoins, is carried out entirely in cream. This is a model apartment of its kind with its entire equipment of the most simple description. In the whole of the suite there are no corners or other places where dust might accumulate.

LEGION HEAD WARNS OUTSIDE VETERANS

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Warning World War veterans of other States that the Veterans Farm and Home Loan Act applies only to California veterans, State Commander B. W. Gearhart of Fresno has started a movement aimed at heading off any influx of ex-service men from other States into this State with an idea of reaping immediate benefits from the recent passage of the $20,000,000 farm and home loan bonds.

HOSPITAL BUILDING CAMPAIGN URGED

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Immediate construction of government hospitals for which appropriations have been authorized by Congress is urged by the officials of the American Legion, according to State Commander Gearhart. "Commencement of work would aid in relieving unemployment," Commander Gearhart declares.

Rehearsals for Yule Program to Begin Tomorrow

With rehearsals scheduled to start tomorrow for the annual city-wide Community Christmas Pageant, to be held Saturday evening on the City Hall steps, several hundred playground children, Boy Scouts and Camp Fire Girls will start preparations for the series of costumed dances, pantomime, and tableaux included in the event.

The work of setting up huge Christmas trees and other decorations on the Spring-street steps and forecourt of the City Hall is also to begin tomorrow, under the direction of the Playground and Recreation Department.

The production is to be called "The Christmas Message," and the children will be dressed to represent the flowers, trees and shrubs which bloom in the Southland at this time of the year.

SIGNAL BILL PRESENTED

The Acme Traffic Signal Company yesterday presented a bill for $15,600 to the City Council, covering the cost of installing signals at eight intersections. The matter was referred to the Finance Committee.

Shuler Aide Dies in Crash

John B. Slocum, 70 years of age, 326 West Forty-ninth street, circulation manager for Bob Shuler's Magazine, was killed on the State highway near Laguna Beach early yesterday morning when an automobile he was driving and in which his daughter, Olive, was a passenger, skidded on a stretch of wet pavement and hit a dirt bank.

The daughter was seriously injured and was taken to the San Clemente Hospital for treatment, according to Coroner Charles D. Brown of Santa Ana. At the time of the accident Slocum was en route to San Diego.

DINNER AND LOVE COOL

While dinner grew cold, her love did ditto, Mrs. Minnie A. Frost yesterday testified in getting a divorce from Sydney S. Frost. Each delay of Frost increased the coldness. "Night after night he was late getting home," Mrs. Frost testified. "I investigated and found that he was not detained at the office but stopped to play pool on the way home. When I reproached him he flew into a rage and said all kinds of things about me and the meal."

VETERAN OF STAGE TO GIVE LECTURE

"How to See a Play," a lecture by Leo Cooper with interpretive readings from four plays, are included in the program announced by the literature department of the Los Angeles public library for next Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the central library lecture room. Mr. Cooper has been connected with the theater for many years and played character parts for nine years with the original Alcazar Stock Company of San Francisco. At the library lecture he will read from "Tle" by O'Neill, "Sabotage," by Dubois, "The Valiant," by Hall, and Middlemas, story play.

MRS. ANDERSON WILLS ESTATE TO CHILDREN

Mrs. Sarah C. Anderson, who died the 4th inst. at 81 years of age, bequeathed her $150,000 estate to three sons and two daughters, according to terms of her will, on file yesterday. The estate consists of stocks, bonds and cash. Heirs are Edward L. Anderson, 534 North Ardmore avenue; Nellie Abbott, Lincoln, Neb.; Walter A. Anderson, Connell, Wash.; Faye A. Folts, Seattle, Wash., and Roy N. Anderson, San Gabriel.

Chambers Put on Architect Board

H. C. Chambers, president of the Southern California chapter of the American Institute of Architects, has been appointed by Gov. Young to serve as a member of the State Board of Architectural Examiners, filling the vacancy created by the death of W. J. Dodd, architect, of Los Angeles.

John C. Austin is president of the southern section of the board. The other members of the section are A. M. Edelman, John Parkinson and H. C. Chambers of Los Angeles and Louis J. Gill of San Diego.

NEWS OF SOUTHERN COUNTIES

EINSTEIN URGED TO RUSH ARRIVAL

Famous Physicist Desired as Guest at Tournament

Plans Made to Meet Scientist When Boat Docks

Auto to Make Hurried Trip From San Diego

PASADENA, Dec. 13.—Dr. Albert Einstein, famous mathematical physicist, will witness the 1931 Tournament of Roses parade, if plans to rush the scientist here from San Diego, made by local civic officials, are carried out.

When the Belgenland docks at San Diego on the 31st inst., it is proposed to have a comfortable sedan at the pier in which Dr. and Mrs. Einstein will be driven to this city.

It is understood at the California Institute of Technology that the Belgenland will arrive at Los Angeles Harbor on New Year's Day, which would make it difficult for the visitors to arrive here in time for the floral pageant, due to traffic congestion.

Telegrams are asserted to have been dispatched to Dr. Robert A. Millikan, now in New York, to determine whether the plan to meet Dr. Einstein in San Diego will be acceptable. Dr. Einstein is coming here as the invited guest of the Mt. Wilson Observatory and California Institute.

Jesse James Learns Why He Is in Jail

SANTA BARBARA, Dec. 13.—Jesse James, who disavows relationship to the notorious gunman of other days, witnessed the rise of the sun this morning through bars in the city bastile. He shook his head and for the best of him, couldn't remember events leading to his becoming a guest of the city.

A little later, however, has was informed by none other than Chief of Police George Sloan just how, why and when he landed in jail—and furthermore, probably how long he would stay there.

According to the Chief, James drove up alongside a car in which the Chief and Traffic Lieutenant Jesse Butts were riding early this morning, and without investigating his prospective opponents, demanded a race. He got his race and more, too.

James stepped out and sent his snappy roadster to a mark well beyond all speed limits and not too far behind was the police car. For perhaps a mile the "race" continued and finally James slowed down to congratulate himself and the his opponents.

Evidently wanting to be a good sport, Mr. James proffered his vanquished opponents a bottle of "swell beer."

His ticket this morning read: "Driving while intoxicated, exceeding all city speed limits, reckless driving, transportation of liquor and resisting an officer.

Small Park to Honor Memory of Clergyman

TUJUNGA, Dec. 13.—As a memorial to Rev. Edgar W. Pasko, for several years a Tujunga clergyman, M. V. Hartranft, head of a land company in this section, today announces that a tract of about three acres surrounding the cross of San Isidro on the summit of Mt. McGroarty has been given by him to be set aside and improved, and to be known as Pasko Park.

Formal presentation of the park is to be made at later date. Dr. Pasko died here on the 5th inst. He was one of the best-known men in the Tujunga Valley, having at various times served the Community Church and the little church at Tujunga Terrace. Dr. Pasko also took active part in the Boy Scout movement and in all other civic and improvement affairs.

The new park will be at a point where each year Tujunga Valley residents hold their sunrise Easter services on Mt. McGroarty.

Hosiery Concern Buys Van Nuys Organ Factory

VAN NUYS, Dec. 13.—The Pacific Hosiery Mills, Ltd., of New York, has purchased the Robert Morton Organ Company plant here, and the factory which at one time was one of the leading motion-picture theater-organ makers in the country will become a hosiery mill.

Henry P. Platt, general manager of the Robert Morgan Company, has just returned here from San Francisco where he stated all negotiations had been completed. Within a short course of time, it is stated, the plant will be equipped with hosiery-making machinery and operations started. The organ factory still has a number of contracts on hand to be completed. These, it is understood, will be given to another organ plant to handle.

During the peak of the silent motion pictures the plant here was unable to keep up with orders for theater organs. With the advent of the talking picture, business of the factory came to a sudden halt.

BREA PROGRESS SOLD

BREA, Dec. 13.—G. C. Gordon, for the past two years owner and publisher of the Brea Progress, weekly publication, today announced the sale of the property to J. B. Phillips of East Orange, N. J., who has arrived to assume charge of the paper. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon will continue to make their home in Brea for the present.

ROBBERS HOLD UP CLUB

Gunmen Secure $200 in Night Raid Near Ventura City Limits; "Split" With One Victim

VENTURA, Dec. 13.—The Bachelors' Club of Ventura avenue, just beyond the city limits, was the scene of a hold-up last night which netted the three gunmen $200. Shortly after midnight, the members of the club, where card games are held, saw three men, masked and armed with automatics, standing in the doorway. While the crowd was covered from the doorway by one of the gunmen, the other two demanded that hands be lifted while they rifled the pockets of the crowd.

The proprietor of the club backed into a doorway and flopped his "roll" into an adjoining room, where it was not found by the hold-up men.

Another man attempted to back into an open window and drop his roll of $80 out of the window, but was caught in the act. No watches or jewelry were taken by the bandits.

"I have a wife and family; for God's sake leave me my money," begged one of the victims.

"Say, I'm a family man myself so I'll split with you. Give me half and you keep half," was the cheerful answer, emphasized with a gun.

The three robbers were young and well dressed, according to the descriptions given Sheriff Robert Clark who arrived shortly after the hold-up. The hands of one of the men holding a gun shook violently throughout the affair.

Deputy Sheriffff Grant Fraser arrived shortly after Sheriff Clark, and the two officers learned that the men had made their getaway in a dirty yellow car.

BANDITS HOLD UP AUTOIST ON HIGHWAY

SANTA MONICA, Dec. 13.—Four youthful gunmen believed to have been amateurs, held up William Z. Mabry of Hollywood last night as he was driving his car a mile south of Las Flores Canyon, on the Coast highway, according to a report here. The youths took Mabry's watch and an empty wallet, returning the watch to him and fleeing with the wallet. Doris Ronner, also of Hollywood, was said to have been in the car with Mabry. Deputy Constables Nester and Chapman of Constable McNabb's Las Flores station, were on the scene a few minutes after the hold-up, and the officers started a search for the bandits.

DRUG STORE YIELDS BUT SMALL AMOUNT OF MONEY

SANTA MONICA, Dec. 13.—After having disarmed suspicion by entering a drug store at 3009 Wilshire Boulevard several times in the past, chatting in a friendly way with the proprietor, a young Italian, described as dark and slight and slender, drew a gun last night just as Mrs. Grace Wilson, behind the counter, was about to say hello to him. "Hand over the money!" he ordered.

When told to help himself the bandit insisted that Mrs. Wilson obey his command. When she dropped a quarter on the floor, she was told to "keep it for breakfast money." Mrs. Wilson furnished police a good description of the robber, who escaped with a small amount of money.

CUCAMONGA WINERY IN NEW HANDS

Products Company Reports Sale of Property That Has Caused Trouble

CUCAMONGA, Dec. 13.—According to announcement today the Western Grape Products Company winery here has been purchased by Vai Brothers of Los Angeles, manufacturers of a wine tonic.

The sale price is said to have been $125,000, the highest amount bid for the holdings.

The same company also purchased the Grape Products Company's ranch No. 1 in Alta Loma, the sale of which was announced several days ago, but the purchaser was then unknown. It is reported that Vai Brothers paid $40,000 for the ranch.

Local grape growers say the winery holds 400,000 gallons of wine, and that the sale was made necessary to the highest bidder in order to remunerate local grape growers who had supplied the plant with their grapes.

It is presumed the Vai Company will use the local winery for the manufacture of their tonic, and may possibly manufacture other grape products.

The mysterious disappearance over one year ago of Frank Baumgartaker, and the more recent disappearance of Edward Neuman, hinged about the Cucamonga winery, the assumption being that as both men were directors in the winery company, they were "taken for a ride" by racketeers who failed in their efforts to have the two men open the winery to their racketeering.

Arnold Bosch, official wine maker, and custodian of the plant, was recently threatened by a group of racketeers who threatened to "put him on the spot" for failing to turn over the keys of the plant to them.

Depositors to Get Dividend Checks Soon

SAN DIEGO, Dec. 13.—Playing the part of Santa Claus to depositors of the California Savings and Commercial Bank, Charles O. Labree, special deputy State Superintendent of Banks, announced today that substantial "Christmas" dividends will be paid in both departments of the local financial institution.

Dividends in the savings department probably will be more than 50 per cent, while those in the commercial department are expected to be less than 35 per cent, according to Labree.

Depositors who have not yet filed claims must do so before 3 p.m. Monday, the 15th inst., in order to participate in the dividends, he said. "We expect to obtain a Superior Court order about the 18th inst., declaring the dividends, said Labree. "We hope to have the checks in the mail not later than the 20th inst.

Labree assumed charge of the bank's affairs following its closing and arrest of I. I. Irwin, president, on charges of misuse of the institution's funds.

Hit-Runner Kills Boy

POMONA, Dec. 13.—An unidentified hit-and-run driver was today held responsible by a Coroner's jury at the Todd & Reeves mortuary, for the death of Edmond Hugues, 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Jules Hugues, 1001 East Firth avenue, Thursday evening.

The jury found that the fatal accident occurred while the boy was in the street between intersections near his home when struck by the unidentified automobile driver after dark without headlights. The lad, rushed to the Health Center, was so badly crushed and broken that he did not regain consciousness.

Funeral services will be held Monday morning at 9 o'clock from the St. Joseph's Catholic Church. A rosary service will be held in the Todd & Reeves chapel Sunday evening at 7 o'clock. Burial will be in Holy Cross Cemetery.

DEATH FOLLOWS AUTO ACCIDENT

VENTURA, Dec. 13.—Illness brought on by injuries in an automobile accident several years ago today caused the death of Mrs. Carmen Loteria Salmeron, 52, wife of John Salmeron, grocer.

Surviving Mrs. Salmeron are her husband; three daughters, Mrs. A. Duane, Mrs. Doris Fender of Ventura and Mrs. C. J. Daniels of Los Angeles; her father, five sisters and two brothers.

Funeral rites will be held 9 a.m. Monday.

RESEDA MASONS ELECT

RESEDA, Dec. 13.—T. B. Turner was elected master of the Reseda Lodge of Masons at the annual meeting held here, having served last year as senior warden. Other officers elected are W. K. English, senior warden; H. W. Vandervcer, junior warden; James McArdle, secretary, and Lee W. Miller, treasurer. Turner is a Mason of many years. He came to Reseda from St. Louis, Mo., soon after Reseda was founded, and was the first merchant in the community.

TEETH PULLING POPULAR

Parents of Santa Barbara Girl Start Something by Telling Young Miss That Fairies Rewarded Bravery in Youth

SANTA BARBARA, Dec. 13.—The parents of little 6-year-old Mary Schreiber started something when they informed their daughter that if she placed under her pillow a recently extracted tooth, she would find some money in its place in the morning.

Mary, following her parents' advice, placed the tooth as per instructions—and, sure enough, in the morning the molar was missing and in its place was a shiny new dime!

Gleefully, Mary romped off to school and before the 9 o'clock bell had sounded, every child between the ages of 6 and 10 had been informed of the wonder. It was a topic of general discussion throughout the day and was finally placed before the teacher.

The teacher, unsuspecting of the results, confirmed the tale—much to the delight of a score or more youngsters in the stage of losing their "baby teeth."

With the coming of the next day many a cry of delight greeted success while in as many other homes sobs told of disappointment.

Informed of the previous night's happenings, the teacher modified her statement to the effect that sometimes the fairies were so busy that not all the teeth could be located in the course of one night.

Although skeptical, many 6-year-old hopefuls are still placing their teeth under their pillow as they slip into bed—and many a puzzled parent is wondering why Johnny or Mary doesn't mind in the least about having a loose tooth pulled at home.

Rum Runners Captured on Coast Highway

SANTA BARBARA, Dec. 13.—Working on a "tip" from San Francisco, Federal prohibition agents early today seized seventy gallons of alcohol, confiscated three expensive automobiles and arrested four men on the Coast Highway near Santa Maria, eighty miles north of here.

Those arrested were George Britt, 35 years of age, San Francisco, Z. M. Morris, 34, Santa Barbara; George J. Simley, 29, Los Angeles, and C. G. Marechal, 29, Venice.

The arrests were made by four Federals directed by Agent Joe Feeley.

According to Peeley, the three cars were stopped and seized within an hour. He did not believe any of the three loads were headed for the same destination, but instead were bound for small bootleggers.

Those arrested are being held in the County Jail pending removal to Los Angeles for hearing.

HOST ENTERTAINS GUESTS BY PROXY

REDLANDS, Dec. 13.—Dr. W. E. Phelps, City Veterinarian of Redlands, has qualified as the champion host of the county by proxy. For the second time, Dr. Phelps has entertained the members of the Orange Belt Veterinarians' Association at his Walnut-street home and then has been forced to leave the entertainment to his good wife.

The first time he entertained the group the guests arrived and the program was begun when Dr. Phelps was called to Bear Valley and did not get back until after the group had left.

Last night he attempted it again and the festivities were no sooner underway than Dr. Phelps was again called to the mountains and this time did not get back until the guests were putting on their coats, ready to leave.

Those who were "his" guests were Dr. and Mrs. W. L. Curtis of Los Angeles, Dr. and Mrs. B. H. Smith, Monrovia; Dr. and Mrs. H. G. Miller, Covina; Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Taylor, Pomona; Dr. and Mrs. R. L. Brunson, Dr. and Mrs. R. M. Bell, Dr. and Mrs. H. L. Simpson, Riverside; Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Closs, Fullerton; Dr. and Mrs. F. L. Kimple, Redlands, and Dr. and Mrs. P. H. Blickenstaff, Chino.

NEW OFFICERS FOR CLUB

TORRANCE, Dec. 13.—Sam Rappaport, prominent local merchant, will head the Kiwanis Club for the coming year, as the result of the election of officers yesterday.

Others elected are Henry F. Ulbright, vice-president; C. T. Rippy, district trustee; Paul Vonderahe, treasurer, and James Leech, secretary.

Installation will take place on January 2.

Church Society to Gather in San Bernardino

SAN BERNARDINO, Dec. 13.—Quarterly convention of the Holy Name societies of the Los Angeles-San Diego diocese of the Catholic Church will be held in San Bernardino the 21st inst. with many notables of the church in attendance. Included will be Rt. Rev. John J. Cantwell, bishop of the diocese, Very Rev. M. O'Gorman, diocesan director of the societies, and Hon. P. H. O'Neil, K.S.G., diocesan president.

Martin J. Coughlin, San Bernardino attorney, is president of the parish here and one of the vice-presidents of the diocese. According to Mr. Coughlin and Rev. Patrick J. Dunne of San Bernardino, more than 5000 members of the Holy Name Society in Southern California are expected to meet in the city. Especially strong contingents are expected from San Diego, Imperial, Orange, Ventura and Santa Barbara counties.

Riverside and San Bernardino counties, which compose the deanery of San Bernardino, will be represented by practically every Holy Name member. The Holy Name Society is a Roman Catholic organization whose primary motive is to combat blasphemy. There are approximately 50,000 members in the 267 parishes of the Southland.

Thomas Hearn of Beverly Hills, who was a Notre Dame classmate of Knute K. Rockne, famous football coach, will be the principal speaker. His subject will be "Higher Catholic Education."

Officers of the Southern California group are:

President, P. H. O'Neil of Los Angeles; secretary, Leo L. Parry of Los Angeles; vice-president, Judge William T. Aggeler of Los Angeles, Maj. J. H. Dockweiler of Los Angeles, Theodore N. Streff of San Diego, Bernard J. Leonard of Pasadena, Robert H. McGrath of Oxnard, Frank Birkhauser of El Centro and Martin J. Coughlin of San Bernardino.

Three Injured in Auto Smash

POMONA, Dec. 13.—Leander Vonoch, 28 years of age, of Tenth street, Puente, is in a critical condition at Pomona Community Hospital, suffering from a fractured shoulder and a spinal injury. Joe Halter, of the same address, suffered a hip injury and severe internal injuries, and Mrs. Rutherford Frater of Alhambra was suffering from shock at the home of her brother, Harold Frater, 639 Columbia avenue, as the result of a crash between automobiles driven by Vonoch and Mrs. Frater at the intersection of Franklin avenue and Reservoir street today.

Mrs. Frater was traveling east on Franklin avenue, while Vonoch was driving north on Reservoir street, the two cars meeting with terrific impact, overturning the Vonoch machine.

Aged Pioneer's Funeral Monday

VENTURA, Dec. 13.—Born in Roseville, Cal., seventy-four years ago, Mrs. Mary Jane Topping died here yesterday after a life of pioneering along the west coast which included covered-wagon trips into British Columbia and thrilling experiences as the wife of the late E. S. (Col.) Topping, noted scout and frontiersman.

Mrs. Topping succumbed from a nervous breakdown at the home of Mrs. Alan R. Bamford, a daughter. Her funeral will be conducted Monday in Long Beach.

SISTER TOWNS TELL OF CHRISTMAS PLANS

RESEDA, Dec. 13.—The Reseda community will conduct its Christmas-tree celebration on the evening of the 20th inst., on the ground at the southeast corner of Sherman Way and Baird avenue. The ceremonies will be sponsored by the Parent-Teacher Association, American Legion Post auxiliary, the Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club and Woman's Club.

Mrs. H. L. Cady, Mrs. Fred Dana, Mrs. Elmer Petz, Mrs. F. W. Townsend, Mrs. A. W. Pierson, E. C. Parks, G. E. Nelson, K. M. Van Geleren and W. F. Estep constitute the committee in charge of arrangements. A large Christmas tree is to be one of the features of the entertainment.

At Tarzana on the south, sister city in the Reseda district, there will be a civic Christmas celebration on the 23rd inst. in the Topeka Drive school. An outdoor celebration also will be conducted at Clark street and Reseda Boulevard, at the site where the new Tarzana Church is being erected.

Man Jailed for Driving Wrong Auto

ANAHEIM, Dec. 13.—Arthur W. Harrell, 29-year-old Long Beach oil worker, got the surprise of his life this morning when he woke up and found himself in the Anaheim City Jail instead of in his own bed in Long Beach.

Harrell also got a $100 fine on a charge of being intoxicated, which he did not deny.

The man confessed before Police Judge Frank Tausch that he attended a party in Long Beach last evening, and that the last he remembers was when an unknown assailant struck him in the mouth. Police officers here arrested Harrel as he drove northward through Anaheim resting his head upon his arm and the door of the car.

Later Harrell will have to explain how he happened to be driving a car belonging to William McConnell of Long Beach, at whose request he is being held pending an investigation on a car-stealing charge.

BUNK HOUSE TAKES CARE OF WANDERERS

INDIO, Dec. 13.—On account of this city being a division point on the Southern Pacific it has been overrun by homeless men trying to get from one town to another. This situation became so acute that the Salvation Army was appealed to and after a survey made by officers from the Los Angeles division a canteen and bunk house was opened here yesterday. The people of Indio and vicinity have subscribed several hundred dollars over a period of four months to supply food for these people and the ranchers also have made contributions of money and produce. Twenty-eight men were cared for the opening day.

WILBER PRICE QUITS CHAMBER IN VALLEY

NORTH HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 13. Wilber Price, secretary of the North Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, today handed in his resignation to the board of directors, to take effect January 9, next. This is the date for the annual election of seven new directors, at which time also a new secretary will be chosen.

No reason is given for the resignation. Price is one of the best-known men in this section, and an active civic worker in all affairs pertaining to North Hollywood and San Fernando Valley.

OWENSMOUTH HIGH SCHOOL COMPLETED

OWENSMOUTH, Dec. 15.—Immediately following the present Christmas vacation, West San Fernando Valley pupils who attend the Owensmouth High School will take part in the ceremony of occupying the new building just completed at the school. The new structure takes the place of the one that was partly destroyed by fire in June two years ago. When school resumes on the 29th inst., there will be a dedication program, in which the girls' drum and trumpet corps and the high-school band will take part. An appropriate speaking program is being arranged.

FLOWER SANCTUARY

London claims the honor of being the first to inaugurate a flower sanctuary which is located at Wanstead Park. Owing to the wanton destruction of flowers in many parts of the countryside, for which week-end trippers by train, bus and motorcar are mainly responsible, there is a real risk that some of our most beautiful wild flowers may shortly become extinct. It is not merely that the blooms are picked; the roots are dug out, taken away wholesale, only to die as a rule.

Some of the wild plants that are now almost or entirely extinct are the royal fern, lily-of-the-valley, Welsh poppy and summer snowflake.

The flower sanctuary is to contain some twenty acres. More than the mere preservation of wild flowers is intended; it may be possible to re-establish in time some of the wild flowers that are now so rare.

Trip to Alphabet Land

One of the most enchanting trips in wild Wales is to go by motor from Llandudno, Conway or Deganwy, through Trefriw and Llenrwst to Betws-y-coed, thence along the Holyhead road past the Swallow Falls and Capel Curig, under the heights of Tryfan to the gorge of Nant Ffrancon. It is as famous in Wales as the trip to Capri is in Italy, or the famous Amalfi drive, though it has more variety than the latter.

Earth's Interior

The earth's interior is remarkably uniform. There are three zones: a comparatively thick crust of, say, thirty miles; a substratum of 1000 miles thickness, and a very tough heavy core about 5000 miles in diameter, probably an alloy of iron and nickel.

HEALTH OFFICIALS CONFER

Welfare Workers Meet in Convention at Desert Inn in Palm Springs Friday

PALM SPRINGS, Dec. 14.—One hundred and fifty health and social welfare workers from all parts of Southern California attended a combined meeting of the Southern California Public Health Association and the Riverside county welfare group at the Desert Inn here yesterday.

Approximately fifty persons attended the session from Riverside and an equal number were present from other county communities, making it the largest meeting in the history of the local welfare workers' group.

Opening with a luncheon at 1 o'clock, the program of the meeting included talks by several prominent persons attending and three short addresses by doctors. Representing the largest city of the county, Mayor Joseph S. Long of Riverside welcomed the members of the public health association to Riverside county. Dr. A. D. Wilson, Palm Springs' health officer, made a short talk in which he expressed the appreciation of the residents of the community that the meeting was held in Palm Springs.

An address on efficiency in school sanitation was one of the three principal talks of the day. It was given by Dr. Harold E. Morrison, assistant director of health in the Los Angeles city schools. Dr. Berryman Green of Riverside spoke on the importance of considering a child's physical inheritance. Dr. Warren Fox of El Centro, Imperial county health officer, reported on the recent national convention of public health associations in Fort Worth, Tex.

Dr. George Parrish of Los Angeles, president of the Southern California Public Health Association, presided. Dr. W. B. Wells, city and county health officer, arranged the program.

David Adams Confesses to Robbing Stores

VENTURA, Dec. 13.—David C. Adams, 47 years of age, today confessed to Arthur Waite, Deputy District Attorney, that he held up the Thompson Boulevard branch of the Safeway stores here on October 18 and November 29, using a gun, and put the employees and customers in cold storage in the refrigerating plant.

Adams was arrested in Los Angeles yesterday by Undersheriff Howard Durley and Deputy Sheriff Ed Hearne, and was given a preliminary hearing before Judge Malvern Dimmick today. He was held to answer in the Superior Court to two charges of robbery, and his bail was fixed at $10,000.

Both hold-ups, which netted him about $175, on October 18, and $125 on November 29, were made early in the evening, and at the point of a gun which was found by the officers in his room. Each time he put the employees in the refrigerator and departed, after ransacking the cash register.

Adams had worked as a grocery clerk in a Safeway store in Santa Paula, and was manager at one time of one of the Safeway stores in San Luis Obispo. At one time he was employed by a local oil company.

Husband Freed; Wife to Answer

HUNTINGTON PARK, Dec. 13.—Fred Freck, with a statutory charge against him, was brought before City Judge Carson Hubbard yesterday, where his wife was present. However, she was instructed by her attorney, Thomas Anaya, not to testify in the case, so the charge against Freck was dismissed. Mrs. Freck is awaiting hearing in Superior Court charged with assault with a deadly weapon on her husband.

Freck, while in his room one night a few weeks ago, was shot in the neck when a bullet crashed through a window. He was taken to a hospital and a few days later Mrs. Freck, from whom he had separated in Toledo, O., a few years ago, was arrested, charged with having fired the revolver wounding her husband.

Shortly after the arrest of Mr. Freck Mrs. Frankie Craane was arrested on a statutory charge. The case against her was dismissed last week.

Mrs. Freck recently was held to answer in Superior Court in a local court here and hearing on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon is to be heard in the higher court at some future date.

VALLEY CELEBRATES RECORD DATE CROP

COACHELLA, Dec. 13.—About sixty representative citizens of the valley gathered last night at the Coachella Valley Woman's Club for the annual meeting and dinner of the Valley Chamber of Commerce and to celebrate the harvesting of the largest and best crop of dates in the history of the district.

The valley this year produced approximately 3,000,000 pounds of dates, valued at nearly $1,000,000, and they are being marketed all over the United States and Europe. It is estimated that by 1937 when the palms now planted are in bearing the valley will produce close to 30,000,000 pounds of this luscious desert fruit.

This valley, which has been one of the white spots on the economic map of the United States, also is feeling much pleased over the prospect of the Metropolitan Water District Aqueduct coming through here so it is anticipating added prosperity during the coming year.

The chamber which represents the whole valley, decided to increase its activities during 1931 and plans also were discussed for a valley Community Chest for next year. The principal speaker of the evening was Charles P. Bayer, field secretary of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, who pledged the co-operation and support of his organization. The meeting was presided over by Thomas H. Rosenberger, general manager of the Deglet Noor Date Growers' Association, and president of the valley chamber.

GUILTY PLEA IN RIVERSIDE MURDERCASE

James Murphy Tells Court He Shot Woman There Last September

RIVERSIDE, Dec. 13.—James Murphy, itinerant carpenter, charged with murder in connection with the fatal wounding of Mrs. Emma E. Hodges, after maintaining an unbroken silence for four months since the shooting, today pleaded guilty to murder in the second degree.

Murphy was to have gone on trial before a jury in Superior Court December 16.

The defendant, brought into court before Superior Judge O. K. Morton at his own request, stood beside Defense Attorney Richard J. Welch, Jr., and, in a voice so low that even the court could not hear him, mumbled his admission. Asked again for his plea, Murphy braced himself and said:

"Guilty!"

Sentence will be passed by the court Monday morning. Murphy faces an indeterminate sentence of from ten years to life imprisonment.

Addressing the court before the plea was entered, Attorney Welch said that after investigation of the circumstances surrounding the case, and after interviewing persons connected with it, he had advised Murphy to plead guilty to second-degree murder.

Dep. Dist.-Atty. George A. French, representing the prosecution, asserted: "It is a case we do not feel disposed to accept a plea of anything less than second-degree murder. It could hardly be construed as manslaughter."

Murphy was charged with murder in a complaint sworn to by Police Inspector Paul Scott, when he was found at Mrs. Hodges's residence in Riverside, after Mrs. Hodges had been shot and fatally wounded. One of Mrs. Hodges's dying statements, according to testimony introduced at preliminary hearing held before Justice R. A. Moore, was:

"Jim wanted me to go and get him some whisky, and I refused to do it, and he killed me."

Legion Stops Ticket Graft

PASADENA, Dec. 13.—Outwitted by Robert M. McCurdy, local Legion adjutant, a group of asserted promoters which is said to have used the name of the post without authority in selling tickets for a dance in Los Angeles, are reported to have left this city hurriedly late today.

Adjt. McCurdy heard that telephone solicitors were selling tickets by telephone by representing themselves as local Legionnaires.

After securing the number of the telephone from which the calls were being made, the Post Thirteen adjutant did a little phoning himself.

Calling the number from his office in the Legion clubhouse, McCurdy asked, "Is this the headquarters of Post Thirteen?"

"Yes, it is, can't we sell you a dance ticket?" the voice at the other end of the wire is said to have replied.

"There must be some mistake," McCurdy retorted, "I'm the adjutant of that post and I think the best thing for you fellows to do is to climb into your cars and dash for Los Angeles!"

Van Nuys Gets Big Egg Plant

VAN NUYS, Dec. 13.—The R. M. Covey Company, for the last ten years engaged in the packing and distribution of eggs with a plant at 1966 West Washington street, Los Angeles, is to establish its main plant here after January 1, next. A large building for the purpose is nearing completion at Sylmar avenue and Bessemer street.

Covey today stated his reason for moving into the Van Nuys district was in order to get nearer to the center of the large egg production in San Fernando Valley. He also said that the company has been doing a $500,000 gross business annually, and that this likely would be increased with the location of the plant here.

DOCTORS INTERESTED IN DESERT SUN BATHS

PALM SPRINGS, Dec. 13.—Prominent scientists are becoming interested in the restorative and curative values of the desert climate of Southern California and making observations on the sun-bathing vogue at Palm Springs in the Coachella Valley.

Among the recent visitors are Dr. J. C. Bloodgood, the world's foremost cancer specialist and consulting surgeon of Johns Hopkins. Dr. Bloodgood with his wife stopped at the El Mirador, where all facilities are available for "taking the sun." These specialists have been attending the recent Institute of Radiology in Los Angeles. Another prominent scientist who is spending the entire winter here is Dr. D. Samuel Salinger of Chicago, for years chief of staff of the Cook County Hospital, nose and throat specialist and lecturer at Loyola College there. Dr. Bloodgood is being entertained by Dr. Albert Soiland of Los Angeles.

Roberta Semple

Laugh Blamed for Shooting

When Marcelina Flores, 53 years of age, remarked in an off-hand way that he is a landowner, Joe Martinez, 34, laughed. This enraged Flores, according to police, and he drew a gun and fired, the bullet penetrating Martinez's groin.

At Georgia-street Receiving Hospital the victim told police surgeons Flores was intoxicated and had boasted of being extremely well-to-do. This boast, Martinez said, so amused him that he snickered out loud and the shooting followed.

Flores, who is said to live at 554 Callardo street, is being sought by homicide detectives.

TEMPLE SET SURPRISED BY ROBERTA

Mrs. McPherson's Pretty Daughter Returns From Long Visit Abroad

Wearing a black and white spotted suit, black hat and baby-blue tie, Roberta Semple, daughter of Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson, surprised scores of her friends yesterday by her sudden appearance at Angelus Temple.

Only her brother Rolf and a few friends knew of Miss Roberta's arrival and these met her at Central Station at 8:30 a.m. and whisked her away to the temple.

"It's good to be home again, after nearly a year away from Los Angeles," she said. "Not that I didn't enjoy my trip, every mile and every hour of it.

"In Ireland I had a world of fun, riding bicycles and visiting my grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. James Semple, whom I liked very much because they are Bobbie Burns fans."

Miss Roberta will address Angelus Temple audiences this morning and evening. Mrs. McPherson, it was said, probably will not appear as she is still recuperating from her recent breakdown.

Arrest Made in Mail Fraud

H. Ellery Seymour, 32 years of age, of 1439 Crescent Heights Boulevard, Hollywood, was arrested yesterday by Deputy United States Marshal Lessner on a New York City warrant charging mail fraud.

Seymour, former sales manager for the Automotive Royalties Corporation of 551 Fifth avenue, a Delaware concern, was sought in connection with the asserted sale of more than $1,000,000 worth of securities of the corporation.

Seymour furnished $10,000 bond before United States Commissioner Head and was released pending a hearing on removal.

Street Condition Causes Protest

A protest against what is termed unsatisfactory work in connection with the resurfacing of streets after improvements have been installed was filed with the City Council yesterday by the Western Precipitation Company.

The company's communication referred specifically to the condition of Ninth and Georgia streets, following the installation of sewers. The Council referred the matter to the City Engineer and to the Public Works Committee.

EXAMINATIONS ANNOUNCED

The United States Civil Service Commission yesterday announced competitive examinations for junior stenographer and typist, open to men only, and for junior chemist, to which both men and women are eligible. Further information and application blanks can be obtained from Warner McIntyre, Room 618, Federal Building.

SOUND STUDIOS' WOES REVIEWED

Acoustical Society Given Details by Levee

Humorous Pioneering Facts Told at Session

Phone Expert Lectures on Theater Problems

Introduction of sound equipment in motion-picture studios has resulted in more systematic methods of studio operation, it was stated by M. C. Levee of Paramount-Publix studios, in an address before the Acoustical Society of America yesterday at the University of California at Los Angeles. The society's meeting concluded a three-day convention held jointly with the American Physical Society.

Levee traced the growth of motion-picture sound accompaniment from the period when producers were struggling with apparently hopeless problems, which were later cleared up by minor changes, to the day when even a whistler's notes can be recorded. He cited several instances which demonstrated the seemingly unimportant conditions which hindered production of early sound pictures.

WAVES DISTORTED

Among these was the confusion in recording which resulted from a prominent star's drinking a glass of water and leaving the empty glass only a few feet from his head, causing the sound waves of his voice to be distorted.

C. F. Eyring of the Bell Telephone Laboratories discussed the acoustical problems relative to theater balconies and their interference with sound emanating from the stage. His lecture followed somewhat that of Dr. Vern O. Knudsen, U.C.L.A. instructor, who prophesied in Friday's session that sound effects in theaters will some day be controlled by levers and stops similar to those used in a large pipe organ.

OTHER SPEAKERS

The American Physical Society's meeting yesterday was marked by an address by Dr. Paul Epstein of the California Institute of Technology on the motion of projectiles and the effects upon them of air resistance. The meeting was presided over by Prof. S. J. Barnett of the U.C.L.A. physics department. Two other lectures were delivered by Dr. A. H. Warner and Dr. Hiram Edwards, both of U.C.L.A.

A joint luncheon at the Roosevelt and a visit to First National studios in North Hollywood entertained members of both societies between morning and afternoon sessions.

LEADERS IN INDUSTRY FORM SERVICE CLUB

A Los Angeles organization to serve executives in industry as are business and professional men by service and luncheon clubs was launched last night at a meeting at the Young Men's Christian Association. D. L. Scott, manager of public relations for the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation; F. L. Macy, president of the Foreman's Club of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, and E. L. Bandy of the Central Young Men's Christian Association were named members of a committee to perfect the organization. Foremen, supervisors, personnel managers, office managers, superintendents of departments in factories and similar executives are eligible to membership. A meeting to hear reports on organizations working along the same lines in the East will be held in the "Y" next Friday.

U.S.C. TALENT WILL PRESENT ORATORIO

Musical talent at the University of Southern California will be displayed in the preholiday presentation by 250 students, alumni and faculty of Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah," to be sung by the Semi-Centennial Chorus on Tuesday evening, the 16th inst., in Bovard Auditorium, accompanied by the University of Southern California orchestra of more than fifty pieces.

Lisa Roma, head of the opera department of the S.C. college of music, is to sing the soprano role; Elizabeth Monser Biehl, contralto; Fred Scott, tenor; Clifford Lott, baritone. Alexander Stewart will direct the chorus.

STOP SIGNS APPROVED

The installation of illuminated arterial stop signs at the intersection of Occidental Boulevard and Hoover street and at the intersection of Eighth avenue and Sixty-seventh street was recommended to the City Council yesterday by the Police Commission. The reports were referred to the Traffic and Lighting Committee.

MONNETTE TO SPEAK

Orra E. Monnette, vice-chairman of the board of directors of the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, and president of the Los Angeles Library Board, will address the Los Angeles Soroptimist Club next Tuesday noon at the Biltmore. His subject will be "The Keynote."

HUSBAND WINS DIVORCE

Another "misunderstood woman" lost her husband via the divorce court yesterday when Allen P. Davison divorced Vivian C. Davison. The husband told Superior Judge Yankwich his wife went out nights, saying she was going to visit a mutual friend, but that he learned she was with another man.

PAVING PLEA PRESENTED

A petition for the improvement of Richmond street at Mission Road by the construction of concrete pavement was filed with the City Council yesterday by a group of property owners. The petition was transmitted to the City Engineer and the Public Works Committee.

LIBRARY MEETING TUESDAY

The monthly meeting of the Southern California chapter of the Special Libraries Association will be held Tuesday at the Barlow Medical Library, 742 North Broadway. A picnic supper will be followed by a travel program, the feature of the evening.

MEXICO CITY SENDS TRADE ENVOY HERE

Commercial Agent Moved From Bay City for More Advantageous Relations

The Federal government of Mexico has decided that Los Angeles offers that country the best opportunity on the West Coast to advance trade and create good will.

As a result of that decision Enrique Mexia, newly appointed West Coast commercial agent has been instructed by officials at Mexico City to make Los Angeles his headquarters and to bring to this city two outstanding exhibits, one from Seville, Spain and another from New Orleans. These exhibitions, which include articles of native handicraft, samples of mineral resources and manufactured articles, will be housed on the second floor of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce Building.

The office formerly was located at San Francisco, but following the recent visit of Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce men to Mexico City a clearer understanding was reached which resulted in the removal of headquarters to this city. Mexia, with his wife and family, is staying at the Rosslyn Hotel.

"My country feels that Los Angeles is a port to which much trade can be diverted. Hats, for instance, now go to New Orleans and New York; they could come through Los Angeles just as well," he said. "We are also interested in the tourist trade. We can make Old Mexico a point of call through proper advertisement. San Antonio has been reaping a rich harvest from tourists who want to go to Mexico and we have so much more here to offer the visitor.

"De want Los Angeles to become better acquainted with the art and culture of Mexico. We want them to know about our craftsmen and about our artists. The visit of the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra to Mexico City next spring will be greatly appreciated. We hope for a better understanding and an exchange of musical and artistic talent and ideas.

"The exhibits which will be brought here will be outstanding and we feel that they will be well worth attention."

Mexia will have offices on the second floor of the Chamber of Commerce Building.

STEAMSHIP TICKETS GIVEN AS PRESENTS

Among Christmas gifts is that of a steamship ticket for around-the-world voyages. During the last week more than a score of tickets for these trips have been issued by the D. F. Robertson Travel Bureau. Among the prominent Angelenos booked for cruises are Mr. and Mrs. Louis Siegel, Miss Anne Siegel, Mrs. Oscar Trippett, Mrs. Frances S. Milbank, Mr. and Mrs. John G. Spangler, Dr. and Mrs. Glenn C. Burbank, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Nix, Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Hodson, Miss Laura Myers, Mr. J. W. Jamieson, Miss Alta T. Rowsey, Miss Bertha A. George.

SUICIDE ASKS KIN TO PAY HIS BILLS

Leaving a farewell note in which he asked relatives that his bills be paid and begged forgiveness for his act, Charles L. Lynch, 29 years of age, was found dead in bed at his home, 200 Broad avenue, Wilmington, early yesterday. A .22-caliber rifle had been used to fire the fatal shot, which penetrated his temple. The body was discovered by Mrs. Louise Vetter, landlady, when she called him yesterday morning and received no response. Acquaintances told San Pedro police Lynch had been out of work for a long time and was despondent.

Coming! LOS ANGELES TIMES ANNUAL MIDWINTER NUMBER

Olympic Games International Edition

CALIFORNIA in less than three weeks will launch the most ambitious festival program ever undertaken by any state or country. Beginning with the Tournament of Roses at Pasadena on New Year's Day and culminating in the Olympic Games in Los Angeles in 1932, there will be staged an almost continuous succession of fairs, fiestas, rodeos, races, historical plays, tournaments, exhibitions, and all manner of picturesque carnivals by mountain, desert and seaside communities. It goes without saying that this provides Southern California with a supreme opportunity to attract new visitors.

THE ANNUAL MIDWINTER NUMBER—out January 2, 1931—will invite the world to these gala and colorful festivities, and will set forth the magnitude of the Olympic Games as sponsored by the great, enterprising city of Los Angeles. In addition, it will present the enthralling story of Southern California from a new international point of view—its growth, resources, life, sports, industries, scenic attractions, scientific and cultural activities, backed up with the indisputable facts and figures of the 1930 United States Census.

THE 1931 EDITION will comprise five profusely illustrated magazines. Next Sunday's "Times" will give a bird's-eye view of the comprehensive contents, and also will contain an advance order blank. Copies ordered in advance will reach recipients in ample time to stimulate the current winter's travel. To insure an adequate, world-wide distribution, The Times will make the following unusual mailing offer:

Mailed Postpaid Anywhere in the World—25c

The Times will supply the five Midwinter magazines, wrap them in a decorated mailing jacket, and mail them postpaid to any point in the world having a postoffice system—for 25c.

To get this rate, names and addresses must be furnished to The Times, Los Angeles, so that copies may be mailed by this newspaper.

Affairs of the Week

By Juana Neal Levy

The Marlborough School opened its forty-first year, eight charming [illegible] were in charge of different departments, and are prominent [illegible] activities. Miss Virginia Chamberlain, clever daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rexy Chamberlain of 614 Walden Drive, Beverly Hills, was elected president of the graduating class while Miss Barbara Albertson, [illegible] Daughter, was chosen vice-president.

Miss Albertson is the daughter of [illegible] Mr. P. S. Albertson of [illegible] Boston avenue, and is [illegible] fond of horseback riding, which she is privileged to indulge in to her heart's content as she passes much time at the family rancho in Ventura county.

Miss Carrie Louise Newkirk, daughter of Frank Newkirk and Dr. Lulu Newkirk of 145 South Mansfield avenue, is treasurer. Part of the summer was enjoyed by Miss Newkirk in the high Sierras, where she was a guest of Sherman Albert Sherer and her attractive daughter, Miss Barbara Sherer, at their mountain home.

Miss Mary Margaret Hobson, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. James M. Hobson of 88 Fremont Place, is secretary of the graduating class and is very fond of aquatic sports and passes much of her time on the beach at Laguna during the summer.

Chosen for their literary ability, Miss Ura Louise Welsh, daughter of Mrs. Ernest Fairman Bent of 3109 Ambrose avenue, and Miss Edwina Montague, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Montague of 315 South Rossmore avenue, and Miss Orion Smith, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Clarke Stull Smith and granddaughter of Mrs. Robert London, are the editor and associate editors of the school paper Serendility.

Miss Lucia Raymond, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Raymond of 735 June street, is president of the student body, thus completing the "official family" of the school.

Marlborough's Christmas festival this year is to be in the nature of an innovation. Following the solemn presentation of the "Story of the Nativity" by members of the Junior High School, the guests will emerge from the charm of this candle-lighted scene and are at once in the midst of the merriment and wassailing of a sixteenth century celebration.

The principal characters include Father Christmas, Barbara Lee; St. George, Janet Haskins; Dragon, Rosemary McCarthy; Giant, Betty Lee Cline; Jack Finney (the devil) Mignon Woldemann; King, Betty Miles; Doctor, Dorothy Hunt; Jester, Sheila Hunt; Turkish Knight, Jean Albertson; Puppeteers, Anne Naylof as Julius and Andrita Somers, Romeo; Host, Helen Yost.

From the junior high presenting the "Christmas Story," Mary, Louise Parks; Joseph, Jane Dunsmore. Kings, Virginia Shields, Marjorie McCoy and Janet Webber; Shep-

ENGAGEMENT REVEALED HERE

Arizona Girl to Be Wed in Spring

[Curtis Biltmore studios]
Miss Margaret Louise Bayless

ONE of the charming brides-elect from afar who will wed a Southern California is Miss Margaret Louise Bayless, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Stuart Bayless of Tucson, fiancee of Kingston Jay Smallhouse, son of Mrs. Charles Smallhouse of this city, the wedding to be an event of January 10 in Tucson.

Miss Bayless and her mother are visiting at the home of the latter's sister, Miss Louise Funston Shields, 818 West Adams Boulevard. The betrothal announcement was made at a bridge luncheon given ten days ago at the home of Miss Bayless's cousin, Mrs. Gerald R. Knudson, in Inglewood, by means of small cards hidden in corsages of Cecile Bruner roses and violets.

Home from Europe

Mrs. Godfrey Holterhoff, who for nine months has been abroad, passing the summer in Switzerland, later going back to Paris and several weeks in Italy, has returned to her home, 1360 West Adams street.

Mr. and Mrs. Evan Royal Mosher (Leila Holterhoff,) with their young son, Allen Mosher, crossed with her aboard the Minnetonka from Boulogne, and remained in New York for a week, leaving there last Wednesday, and will arrive here Tuesday.

Mrs. Holterhoff is having a family dinner party Christmas night.

Thompson-Buchanan

One of the loveliest Southern California weddings of the Christmas season was that of yesterday when at 4:30 p.m., Miss Kathleen Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Percival Thompson of Coronado, became the bride of Lieut. Charles Allen Buchanan, United States Navy, the ceremony taking place at the Thompson home in Ocean Boulevard, with Mgr. Francis J. Conaty of Los Angeles officiating in the presence of more than 100 relatives and close friends.

The house was lovely in its decorations, flowers and grasses entwined with pink roses being used in the drawing-room, where the ceremony took place before an altar arranged before the huge fireplace, lighted tapers gleaming from the mantel shelf at either side, and the Hutton String Quartet from Hotel del Coronado played the wedding music.

The bride, exquisite in her gown of white satin, fashioned along simple lines was given in marriage by her father. The gown was made en-train with soft cowl collar falling to the waist line, and touches of old lace which has been in the family for many years.

The veil of tulle was caught into a Juliet cap of pearls and rhinestones and she carried an arm shower of lilies of the valley.

Miss Betty Godfrey whose engagement to Lieut. Jack Wells, U.S.N., was announced several weeks ago at a luncheon with which she entertained Miss Thompson at the Coronado Country Club, was maid of honor, wearing a gown of peach shade of chiffon, with which she wore a broad brimmed velvet hat in slightly deeper shade and carried an armful of Talisman roses and ferns.

Misses Marion Thompson and Miss Lenore Thompson, sisters of the bride, were bridesmaids in frocks of pale peach chiffon and carried bouquets of roses in delicate shades to match their gowns.

Dr. Cedric Carpenter, son of Capt. Dudley N. Carpenter (Medical Corps) U.S.N., served as best man and brother officers from the battle fleet, including Lieuts. John Wells, Henry Farrow, John Greenslade, Maxwell Leslie, Fitzhugh Lee and Yates Sterling, U.S.N., ushered. And after the ceremony formed an archway of swords beneath which the bridal party passed from the altar.

At the reception following Mrs. Thompson received her guests in a gown of green lace with corsage of orchids.

Lieut. and Mrs. Buchanan are motoring up the coast on their honeymoon and after their return will be at home in Coronado until the fleet goes on its spring cruise when Mrs. Buchanan will follow her husband to Panama.

What Hostesses Have Been About Lately

Out-of-town guests included the aunt and cousin of the bride, Mrs. William Nelson Pelouve and Miss Medora Pelouve, and Mr. and Mrs. Gale Thompson, all of Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. William W. Campbell (Doreen Kavanagh) and the bride's maternal grandmother, Mrs. James Charles Kavanagh of Beverly Hills, while the bride's sister, Mrs. John R. Fordyce (Helen Gale Thompson) came from her home in Little Rock, Ark., for the wedding.

Mrs. Buchanan is one of the most popular members of the younger set of San Diego and Coronado and is a prominent member of the San Diego Junior League. She was graduated from the Sacred Heart convent in Menlo Park after attending the Coronado Beach School and last year traveled extensively through Europe and England, with her mother. Lieut. Buchanan was graduated from the Naval Academy with the class of 1926, and is attached to the U.S.S. Omaha. He is the son of Capt. Allen Buchanan, U.S.N., who was formerly an aide to President Hoover and is now commandant of the Naval War College.

Orchestra Supper

Mr. and Mrs. George Leslie Smith have issued invitations for a supper at the Biltmore, Thursday evening following the Philharmonic Orchestra, and honoring Marvine Maazel, soloist of the concert.

More than 100 guests have been bidden and the hosts will be assisted by Mrs. Carl Blissett Fix, Mrs. Cecil Frankel, Mrs. Joseph L. Levy and Mrs. Sylvain Noack.

Lovely Affair

One of the lovely affairs of the week was the tea with which Mrs. Harvey L. Deardorff and her daughter, Mrs. James Worden Roberts, (Virginia Deardorff) entertained Wednesday afternoon at the Town House, several hundred guests being bidden, the hours being from 3 to 5 o'clock.

The hostesses received their guests in the Wedgewood Room, which was beautifully decorated with flowers and foliage carrying out the Christmas motif. Assisting the hostesses were Mmes. Worden Ballinger Roberts, C. Charles Henry Thompson, William Laurice Duncan, Harmon David Ryus, Charles Heyler, James McCarthy Rounds, Burnet Wohlford, Max Hebgen, Daniel Ferguson, Vernon Bettin and Miss Harriet Eugenia Andrews.

Afternoon Reception

One of the most charmingly appointed affairs of this week will be the tea and reception with which Mrs. Albert Laurence Bagnall and Mrs. Clarence A. English are entertaining at the home of the former in Western avenue, honoring Mrs. Patrick Campbell. More than 300 invitations having been issued.

A Christmas color scheme of red and green is effectively to be carried out in the decorations and appointments. The hostess will be assisted by Mmes. Hancock Banning, Edward P. Johnson, Mrs. John Cobb Macfarland, Harcourt Hervey, Avery McCarthy, Harold Brent Wrenn, Arthur Bumiller, Paul English, John Cook and the Nine O'clock Players of the Assistance League. Mmes. Walter Perry Story, William Gibbs McAdoo, Sven Lokranz, William G. McAdoo, Jr., Richard Rowe, Frederic Kayser, Marjorie Requa, John Osburne, Lawrence Smith, Clyde Russell Burr, Theodore Braun, Irene Denny, Foster-Dudley, Lindsey Gillis, Thomas Edwin Gibbons, Henry Haggerty, Nichols Milbank, Jr., Margery Davenport, Seeley Mudd, Jr., Hazel Nelson, June Braun Pike, Helen Hammond, Roy Ruth, James Langford Stack, Leroy Sanders, Byron Story, Leroy Stanton, Henry Wetherby, Howard Hawley Wells, Seymour Tally, Hoyt, Mitchel and Misses Eleanor Johnson, Marguerite Brunswig, Ellen Andrews, Dorothy Collins and Constance Dieghton-Simpson.

The hours are from 4 to 6 o'clock, and a group of songs will be given by Estelle Heartt Dreyfus and a program of chamber music by a strong orchestra will play during the reception hours.

Backgammon Party

Miss Eleanor Louise Lee and Miss Mary Ellen Fisher gave a backgammon party Friday evening at the home of the latter, 2012 La Mesa Drive, Santa Monica, more than twenty-five guests having been bidden. During the evening Mrs. Frances Young Flintom gave a most interesting talk on backgammon, which is proving the rage of the season.

Will Wed in January

Members and pledges of Mu chapter of Sigma Phi Beta at the University of California at Los Angeles gave a shower for Miss Lisa Hamilton, whose engagement to Harold Trent was recently announced at a sorority affair by means of the traditional box of candy. The wedding will be a New Year's Day event.

Married in Riverside

Announcement is made by Mr. and Mrs. Peter Kennedy of the marriage of their daughter, Miss Josephine Kennedy, to Louis Heaton Roseberry the 5th inst. at the Mission Inn, Riverside.

Christmas Decorations

The Mothers' Club of Alphi Phi at the University of California at Los Angeles gave a benefit bridge-luncheon the 3rd inst. at the home of Mrs. Carrie M. Van Brunt, 505 South Irving Boulevard, when the holiday idea was carried out with Christmas trees and red candles.

Assisting Mrs. Van Brunt were Mmes. M. Dale, D. J. Bowker, G. S. Maslin, M. R. Boyd, M. R. Hopkins, S. J. Prothero, H. R. Newcomb, J. C. Monning, J. B. Armitage, H. V. Shinn and B. Stover. Mrs. Monning is president of the organization; Mrs. Van Brunt, vice-president, and Mrs. Maslin, secretary and treasurer.

Bridge-Luncheon

Prior to her departure for Vancouver, B. C., her future home, Mrs. S. D. Malcolm was honored with a bridge-luncheon given recently by Miss Marie Braunschweiger and Miss Nell Rogers at the Jonathan Club.

Engagement Interests Southland

Miss Betty Godfrey

OF MUCH interest to society of the Southland was the announcement made recently by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Godfrey of Coronado of the engagement of their charming young daughter, Miss Betty Godfrey, to Lieut. John K. Wells, U.S.N., the news being told at a luncheon at the Coronado Country Club, when Miss Godfrey entertained in honor of Miss Kathleen Thompson, who yesterday became the bride of Lieut. Charles Allen Buchanan, U. S. N. Miss Godfrey was maid of honor at the ceremony.

The wedding will be an event of spring when the fleet returns from its winter cruise.

Miss Godfrey was graduated from Santa Barbara School for Girls, and is one of the most popular members of the San Diego Junior League, while Lieut. Wells, who was graduated from Annapolis in 1926 and is attached to the U.S.S. Rathbourne, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Heber M. Wells of Salt Lake City, his father having been Governor of Utah.

and sixty, are being planned for the Christmas musicale on Sunday night, the 21st inst. The official hostesses for the club for this occasion will be Mrs. George L. Smith, Mrs. R. D. Shephard and Mrs. Lee A. Phillips. Mrs. Smith will also be hostess for an individual dinner party preceding the musicale, the affair being to honor Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Frankel. She will have fifty guests. Mrs. Dora A. Stearns will entertain with a party of twelve, her guests being Mr. and Mrs. Earl W. Peck, Mrs. Ellen Dee, Miss Frances Dee, Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Brooks, Mrs. Sarah J. Smith, Miss Marian Evans, Smuth Brooks and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Peck. Another hostess of the evening will be Miss Vera M. Ingham, whose guests will be Mrs. P. J. Heinz, the Misses Henrietta and Virginia Heinz, Mrs. W. B. Fallbush, Miss Elizabeth W. Bell, Mrs. E. L. Davis and Miss Evelyn Davis. Among other club members who are entertaining that night are Mmes. Morris Albee, Paul H. Granger, Robert Linton, A. G. Page, C. E. Longfellow, Katherine Murray, George Rice, M. Israel, S. C. Wilson, Miss Elizabeth McIntyre and Miss Minnie Ripper.

The bridal motif was carried out with charming effect at a luncheon and shower given the 8th inst. by Mrs. Charles M. Cooper at her home in Monterey Road, San Marino honoring Miss Marion Cooper of South Pasadena, bride-elect. Those bidden were Mmes. Henry S. Rowland, Everett Morris, Heber H. Fowler, Robert Garrison, E. O. Stumpf, W. E. Cooper, E. S. White, Hugh Lamberth, Case Bradford, Milton L. Bradford, W. F. Mobley; the Misses Helen Annable, Mary Pinfrock, Dorothy Ham, Elizabeth Brydon and the honoree.

Girls' Collegiate School

The annual Christmas dinner party at Girls' Collegiate School will be held Tuesday evening, following which a series of one-act plays will be presented by students of the private expression classes.

The delightful "Pink and Patches," by Margaret Bland, will begin the evening's entertainment, with the Misses Ruth De Vienne, Frances Elfendahl, Juanita Lewis and Betty Merwin in the cast of characters.

This play will be followed by Ursula Cooke MacDougall's "Stars and Groceries," with the Misses Eleanor Williamson, Mary Olive Todd and Nancy Ann Monroe.

"Everybody's Husband," by Gilbert Cannan, will complete the program, the characters enacted by the Misses Gene Monroe, Betty Stoddard, Meta Bolge, Audrey Miller, Helen Chandler and Helene Maddux.

Children's Party

Many a society matron is setting aside her usual social activities on Tuesday afternoon, the 23rd inst., to entertain her juvenile friends at the children's Christmas party at the Women's Athletic Club. This annual party is always a gay event, and proves that just as many mothers are necessary to take their daughters to a club circus, as it takes for fathers to get sons to a regular circus. Among society leaders who are giving children's parties at the club on that day are Mmes. A. C. Moorehead of El Segundo; S. C. Haver, Jr., Mac Carvell, F. L. Capers, Frances Davidson, George Piness, A. V. Woolcott, Stephen Royce, Edgerton Christian, F. C. Kingsbury, Richard W. Kirkley, Rose Naylon, W. A. Anderson, J. C. Wilson, C. L. Smith, C. R. Morford, Edwin Stanton, Joseph Gray of Alameda, Miss Florence Williams.

Luncheon Series

Mrs. Leiland Atherton Irish is honoring Mrs. Sylvain Noack with the second of a series of luncheons to be held Friday in the Biltmore Hotel, preceding the Philharmonic Orchestra concert at 1 p.m. Those bidden include Mmes. Elmer G. Mansfield, Joseph Levy, Nora L. Puterbaugh, Edna Gunnar Peterson, Carl Blissett Fix, Inga Nelson Brown, Alexander Raab, Leola Goetze, Caroline Galbraith, Florence Lawrence, Joseph G. Braun, John Boyce-Smith and Frank W. Davey.

Complimentary Affairs

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Maria Hurlbut to Jack Welch has been the incentive of many delightful affairs. Edward Sullivan honored the betrothed with a dinner-dance held at the Deauville Beach Club. Corsages of white gardenias marked the places of the Misses Maria Hurlbut, Arabella Hurlbut, Dorothy Hensagen, Marilla Fuller, Paula Sullivan and Helen Brewer. Escorts were Messrs. Jack Welch, Paul Quinn, George Todd, Neale Quinn, Roland Olson and the host, Edward Sullivan.

Miss Dorothy Hensagen, past vice-president of the Sigma Phi Beta Sorority at U.C.L.A., held a shower luncheon for Miss Hurlbut. Clever place cards and a miniature bride decorated Miss Hensagen's table. Those who attended the shower were Misses Marilla Fuller, Catherann MacDonald, Katherine Horsman, Irene Hensberger, Arabelle Hurlbut, Marion Shelp, Harriet Brown, Virginia Smith, Isabel Welch, Peggy Sullivan and Helen Brewer.

European Trip

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Shlaudeman are welcoming them home from an extended European trip. They are now at home in 1709 Ambassador avenue, Beverly Hills.

At the Sea Breeze

The newly decorated supper-room at the Sea Breeze Beach Club provided a colorful setting for the dinner-dance given last evening by Miss Beatrice Adelstein of North Alexandria avenue, Hollywood.

The table was decorated with pink and yellow roses and sweet peas interspersed with tall lighted tapers. Individual corsages were presented to the feminine guests while their escorts received boutonnieres.

Among the guests were Dr. Leo J. Adelstein, Misses Elsie Garfield, Natalie Adelstein, Pauline Koffler, Elma Burnkrant, Elsa Cane, Sally Meerson, Sydelle Fink, Messrs. Louis Shapiro, Myron Abrams, Irving Ad-

Mrs. Ralph Sugar of West Long Beach, N. Y., was the guest of honor at a charmingly appointed bridge-luncheon given Tuesday by Mrs. Don D. Pattison in the galeria of the Sea Breeze Beach Club.

Violets and poppies adorned the table while individual corsages of violets were presented to each of the guests. Dainty hand-painted place cards were set at each plate.

Covers were laid for Mmes. Henri Didot, Earle B. Wiggins, Carrie Gonnerman, Nelson Davis, Leo Olinger, Gladys Mensenwerth, Stanley Osika, Gilman Camp, Anita Wade and Janet Wood.

Formal Initiation

Phi Phi, junior-senior honorary sorority of the college of music, University of Southern California, held formal initiation at La Venta Inn, Palos Verdes Estates, Saturday, the 6th inst., ending a week of activity which included a recital at the college of music and observance of annual "Harmony Day" the 4th inst.

The initiation ceremony was held at sunrise, and was followed by the traditional candle breakfast. Miss Pearl Alice Macioskey, toastmistress, was introduced by the president, Helen Parrett. The speakers were Walter F. Steele, dean of the college of music; Arthur M. Perry, assistant dean; Charles E. Pemberton of the faculty, and Emily Korstad, alumnae member. Besides the actives and initiates, a large number of alumnae members and faculty members were present.

Those initiated were Glenna Gould, Mildred Pfaffenberger, Catherine Preston, Roy Smallwood, Adelaide Steward and Miss Pauline Alderman of the faculty, college of music.

Visiting Relatives

Mrs. James Thornton Ross of Portland, Or., is visiting at the home of her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Lindsley, 826 West Fifty-third street. Mrs. Ross is a prominent club woman in her home city.

Gamble-Thomas

Word has been received here of the marriage of Miss Geraldine Gamble and Hugh Thomas at Casa Grande, Ariz. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Gamble, 1345 Comstock avenue, and is a member of the Chi Omega Sorority. Mr. Thomas, who is superintendent of a copper mine at Superior, Ariz., is a former resident of Los Angeles. He was graduated from the school of mines at Rolla, Mo., and is a Lambda Chi Alpha. The ceremony was performed at the First Presbyterian Church in Casa Grande by Rev. Curry M. Lane.

Sorority Sisters Attend Affair

[Curtis Biltmore studios]

Miss Josephine Hefferlin

THE announcement of the engagement of Miss Josephine Hefferlin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Hefferlin, of North Manhattan Place, to John David Purviance, son of the late Col. W. E. Purviance and Mrs. Purviance, was announced recently at a bridge tea given at the home of the bride's parents.

No date for the wedding has been set.

Among the guests were a number of the bride-elect's sorority sisters.

Alumnae Club Entertained

Members of the Mu Phi Epsilon Alumnae Club were entertained with a luncheon given recently by Mrs. Roger Knorpp, 226 North Gower street. The program arranged by the hostess and her assistant, Mrs. Carl Stalling, was presented by Miss Norma Brown, pianist, and Miss Aurora Berg, contralto. The Christmas spirit prevailed in the decorations and was emphasized by the singing of carols.

At Hotel Del Coronado

Prince and Princess Murat of Paris and New York, who have been passing some time in California, were guests at Hotel del Coronado for a few days the last week, after coming down the coast from San Francisco and visiting the various places en route. They went from here to Phoenix on their way East. Princess Murat was, before her marriage, Miss Margaret Rutherfurd. She is the daughter of Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt. They were married three years ago in Paris, where they have a home and pass most of their time.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Aubrey Davidson, Jr., gave a dinner in the Crown Room of the hotel last Saturday evening, honoring Miss Kathleen Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Percival Thompson, whose marriage to Lieut. Charles Allen Buchanan, U.S.N., took place yesterday at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Davidson took their guests, numbering twenty-two, to the Casino for dancing following the dinner.

Mrs. G. K. Burt of Beverly Hills, who usually passes her winters at Hotel del Coronado, and who remained last year until the late spring, has returned for her annual visit. Mrs. Burt motored down with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Sturgis of Pasadena, who remained for several days, and will come down frequently during her stay.

I. C. Seamans and R. Smiley Fitzgerald of Ilion, N. Y., who pass their winters at Pasadena, motored down to spend a few days at this resort during the past week. Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Pendleton were guests for several days from Los Angeles.

Mrs. Arthur H. Mitchell and her daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Mitchell of Princeton, N. J., who reached here by way of the Panama Canal, are passing a week at Hotel del Coronado before going to Los Angeles, from where they will sail for Honolulu for a month. After returning from the Hawaiian Islands they will travel for a month through the Golden State before returning east.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark Holbrook of Red Bank, N. J., who have been staying at the Los Angeles Biltmore for several weeks, motored down for the week-end at Hotel del Coronado before continuing to Ensenada, Mex. They will return to Los Angeles for a few days before going to New York.

Capt. L. B. Jacobs of the Army Air Corps came down from Los Angeles, where he had made a brief stay, to make a visit at the resort before flying back to Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Stanley M. Timberlake of Indianapolis, who is staying at Hotel del Coronado, motored to Los Angeles last Friday with her son-in-law and daughter, Lieut. Douglass Pollock Johnson, U.S.N., and Mrs. Johnson, who went up for the Notre Dame game, and returned early in the week.

Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Heaton of Long Beach, with Mr. and Mrs. D. Worthington of Chicago, who are making a tour of California, came down by motor to spend the week-end at the hotel, and went to Agua Caliente on Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. N. T. Mason were others from Los Angeles here for the week-end.

Many of the regular season guests have arrived from different parts of the country during the past week to remain at Hotel del Coronado until spring. Mr. and Mrs. Theodore F. DeWitt of Denver, who have been here for many winters, arrived by motor after being snowbound for three days in a small

UNIVERSITY GIRL TO BE BRIDE

February 20 Will Be Wedding Day

[Lansing Brown studios]

Miss Helen Cornelia Burton

FORMAL announcement is made by Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Burton of 6441 Maryland Drive of the engagement of their charming young daughter, Miss Helen Cornelia Burton, to Joseph Mitchel Gaalken of Culver City, the wedding to be an event of February 20 in Wilshire Boulevard Christian Church, with Rev. Harold Griffiths officiating.

Miss Burton was a student at Mills College, and later attended University of California at Los Angeles, where she is a member of Pi Beta Phi Sorority. Mr. Gaalken is an alumnus of University of California, where he was affiliated with Delta Tau Delta Fraternity.

The news was told by the traditional box of candy at the sorority house at Westwood Monday evening, the 1st inst.

Christmas at their winter home in Beverly Hills. Although Miss Rothacker has not made her formal debut, she has taken part in many of the eastern debutante affairs. She attended Bennett School at Millbrook, N. Y., and last year was a student at Mlle. Boissier's in Paris.

In New York

Angelenos who are now visiting in New York City are Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Pearce, where they are guests at the Ambassador.

Announce Engagement

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Epstein of 1084 Redondo Road formally announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Helen Epstein, to Maurice Breier, son of S. Breier, formerly of Denver. Miss Epstein is a popular member of the younger set, while her fiance was graduated from University of Denver and is a member of Phi Beta Delta fraternity. The wedding will be an event of the first of the year, although no date is definitely set.

Book Review Series

The charming East Indian Room of the Ambassador has been chosen as the setting for the new series of book reviews by Mrs. Jack Vallely and several luncheon parties have been arranged following the next talk Saturday, the 20th inst., at 10:45 a.m.

Mrs. Charles Jeffras will entertain at luncheon with Mrs. Vallely as honor guest, while other affairs are planned among the patronesses, who include Mrs. Hancock Banning, Mrs. Rufus Von KleinSmid, Mrs. Fred Baker, Mrs. Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Mrs. Chester Turner Hoag, Mrs. Hanson Moore, Mrs. John Phelps, Mrs. Sam L. Kreider, Mrs. Josepha Tolhurst, Mrs. Leslie Brigham, Dean Laughlin and Dean Crawford of the University of California and University of Southern California, respectively; Judge Georgia Bullock, Mrs. Susan B. Dorsey and Mrs. John Kemp.

Birthday Anniversary

Last Sunday evening Miss Nettie M. Dick, 1134 Harvard Boulevard, was honored with a delightful affair given by a number of her relatives and friends in celebration of her birthday anniversary. Mrs. Robert Morrow, a niece of the honoree, was in charge. The guests included Mrs. Kate M. Hedges, J. Will Dick, the Misses May and Ona Dick, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde O. Dick, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. McArthur, Mrs. Robert Tanner, Dorris Hedges, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Heinen, Dwight J. Morrow, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Humphreys and their sons, Don and Carl Humphreys of Pasadena; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Morrow and son, Olen Morrow, of Torrance; Mrs. Emmaline Thomson, Mr. and Mrs. Roy D. King and daughters, the Misses Barbara and Dorothy King of Glendale, Mr. and Mrs. Harold P. Stewart of Gardena, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Humphreys of Eagle Rock and Miss Nell Clingan of Santa Ana.

Play Reading

Mrs. Harry J. Tremaine of the Bryson presented Ethel Elliot Swan, dramatic artist, at the Jonathan Club Tuesday afternoon. Between the acts of Philip Barry's play, "You and I," which Mrs. Swan read, Miss Rigmor Peterson and Mrs. Glendon Tremaine sang.

Assisting the hostesses were Mrs. A. Bennett Cooke, Mrs. Homer A. Miller, Mrs. Thomas Ritchie Ponton, Mrs. Arthur E. Huntington, Mrs. Robert T. Burge, Mrs. Leonard Deither, Mrs. Raymond Tremaine, Mrs. Glendon Tremaine and Miss Winifred Huntington.

More than 200 invitations were issued to the affair. Christmas colors prevailed in the decorations.

Writer to Address Club

La Salon Francais will meet Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 at the home of Mrs. Hector Geiger, 7357 Franklin avenue, when M. Pierre De Lanux, distinguished French writer and lecturer, will address the salon in French on "Our International Ethics" and Samuel Albert will play violin numbers accompanied by Mrs. Clifton Herd. Mrs. H. Selfridge Standish is president of the salon.

Wed at Community Center

A recent wedding of interest to many in the Southland was that of Mrs. Ida Warner and Earl L. Riggs at the Community Center, with Rev. John P. Morrow officiating. Mr. and Mrs. George Trulock of Venice, who assisted, were married a year ago by Rev. Morrow at the Community Center.

Relatives and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Riggs were guests at a wedding breakfast which followed the ceremony.

International Relations

Angelenos who attended the annual Institute of International Relations, in session over the past week-end at the Riverside Mission Inn were Mmes. Seeley W. Mudd, Hancock Banning, Nicholas E. Rice, Sloan-Orcutt, R. D. Shepherd, William F. Howard, Norman B. Herman, Jerrold F. Walton, Stuart W. French, George O. Robinson, Frank C. Touton and Marchesa Cambiosa.

Here and There

Angelenos who were guests at El Mirador, Palm Springs, over the past week-end were Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Clark, Mr. and Mrs. H. Duke Hancock, Mr. and Mrs. Cleves Harrison, Mrs. R. Robertson and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Quinn.

Dr. and Mrs. L. H. Lee and their son Billie recently returned to this city after a visit at the Twin Joshua Rancho near Palmdale.

Mrs. Hugh Sterling of St. Louis, will pass the winter months at the Mar Vista, Santa Monica.

An attractive addition to the coterie of service brides this season is Mrs. Vaughn Bailey who before her marriage was Miss Lois Feaster of Glendale. Lieut. Bailey is attached to the U.S.S. Maryland.

Mrs. Marie S. Wilson is a guest at the Ambassador, New York City.

One of the charming courtesies of recent date was the bridge party given by Mrs. Wilford Kennedy honoring Miss Peggy Kolb, popular bride-elect. Guests were the Misses Alice Strasser, Leona Love, Mildred Fitzgerald, Evelyn Denwitt, Freda Katzmann, Mollie Robineaux; Mmes. Cecille Bradley, Bertha Birsh, Roy Hamlett and Phyllis Wright.

Among the recent arrivals at the Hollywood Knickerbocker are Mr. and Mrs. Paul Chalfant of Chattanooga, Tenn.

Miss Katherine V. Morrissey is a guest at the Dodge Hotel, Washington, D. C.

Mrs. I. D. Watson of Grand Island, Neb., arrived Thanksgiving Day for a few weeks' visit with her daughter, Mrs. F. C. Kelso of El Segundo. Mrs. Watson will also visit her son, Albert Watson, of Hollywood.

After a month's visit in Los Angeles as the house guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Hook of Lowry Road, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Heigho of Detroit, Mich., have gone to Palm Springs for the winter, where they will be guests at El Mirador until their new home is completed at the resort. Mr. Heigho is Mrs. Hook's brother.

Other guests at El Mirador are Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Amend, Miss Florence Sadler, Robert Borger, John S. Shepherd of Palos Verdes, C. C. B. Moody of Santa Monica and Maj. Lowengaard of Portland, Or.

Among the prominent Angelenos who were recent guests at the St. Francis, San Francisco, were Mr. and Mrs. A. Hirsch, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar S. Oldknow, Mr. and Mrs. B. Schulberg and family, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Stothart, Mr. and Mrs. A. Dunlop and Mr. and Mrs. C. H. McGee.

Miss Margaret Wysong, 2262 Ines street, was the honoree at a luncheon given recently at the Hotel Clark by members of the staff of the Los Angeles Daily Journal. The hostesses were Miss Mary Martin, Miss Louise Bradford, Miss Alma Anthes and Miss Gwendolyn Artz. Miss Wysong is the bride-elect of Marcus Harlan, 2223 Rogers avenue.

Mrs. Millie Berg and her son Harold have returned to the Hollywood Knickerbocker after a protracted visit with relatives in Detroit, Mich.

Mrs. Edna May Heins, who has been motoring through Europe for eight months with Mrs. David Mixell and Mrs. Selma Boyd, recently arrived at her home in this city.

Among the recent arrivals at the Hollywood Plaza are Mr. and Mrs. William Russell of Yokohama. Mrs. Russell, a charming Parisienne, is a bride of a few months. Mr. Russell, an Englishman, has long been a resident of the Orient.

Upon her arrival from San Francisco on the steamship Ruth Alexander recently, Mrs. Caroline Manning of Pittsfield, Mass., was welcomed by her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Robertson of Franklin avenue, with whom she will pass the Christmas holidays. Mrs. Manning has been touring Canada.

Mrs. Irwin Johnston Muma will pass the holidays with her son, John Muma, in Munich where he is studying at the American Institute. Later, Mrs. Muma will tour Poland and Russia accompanied by Mrs. Elizabeth Burton. On her return Mrs. Muma will study voice in Vienna.

Mr. and Mrs. William W. McCandless, Jr., 3517 West Tenth street, will leave shortly for Tulsa, Okla., where they will pass the holidays with their brother and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. George S. Bole. On their way East they will visit the Carlsbad Caverns.

After an extended trip abroad, Mrs. Hazel Keever has returned to her home in Altadena. She was accompanied on the trip by her daughters, the Misses Deborah and Jeanne Keever, and Mrs. S. Smith. Miss Jeanne Keever remained in the East to attend Vassar College.

Betrothal

Mr. and Mrs. S. K. Goldstone announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Catherine Harriet Goldstone, to Meyer Price Stern. The bride-elect is attending the University of California at Los Angeles. Miss Goldstone and Mr. Stern will receive their friends at the Goldstone home this evening at 8 o'clock.

Birthday Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Ellis of 5353 Almont street entertained with a dinner party Saturday evening, the 6th inst., the occasion celebrating Mrs. Ellis's birthday anniversary. Those included were Messrs. and Mmes. Cecil Cornwall, Oscar Daner, Ray Morris, David Ayre, Thomas Caldwell, F. Emmett, F. Branon, Max Daner, Edward Davis, W. Francis, La Verne Hayes, Frederic Hatfield, E. Grinnell, W. Maltby, Ray Dickenson, E. Glenn, M. Bagley, Mmes. Eleanor Jeal, Julia Campbell, J. Crownover, Florence Grant, T. Appony, M. Schonce and Misses Mary Crownover, Sylvia Grant, M. Englander and Carl Appony.

Woodbury-Green

Among the number of colorful Hollywood weddings in recent weeks was that solemnizing the marriage of Virginia Earle Woodbury, daughter of James E. Woodbury, prominent local portrait artist, to Harry Charles Green of this city, at the Hollywood Christian Church, 1717 North Gramercy Place. Rev. M. D. McGowan officiated.

Dorothy Woodbury was her sister's maid of honor and William Green was his brother's best man. Alice Craven, Alyson Larkin and Mary Caffray, John Miller, John Price and Grafton Lynn completed the list of attendants. Mr. Woodbury gave his daughter in marriage.

The bride wore a gown of ivory satin and a veil of white tulle trimmed with orange blossoms. The dress had a medium-length train and was made on simple lines with Pale, thin, run-down children—they need cod-liver oil. Give it to them the pleasantest way—give them Scott's Emulsion.

Scott's Emulsion hasn't that strong "fishy" taste. It doesn't upset even delicate stomachs. It brings you purest, Norwegian cod-liver oil in its pleasantest form—a perfect emulsion. A form that makes it easier to take—easier to digest. Almost immediately, the body absorbs the health-giving vitamins—and the assimilation is complete. You get more good out of Scott's Emulsion and you feel the benefits quicker.

Scott's Emulsion is rich in vitamin A, the growth-promoting vitamin that helps guard against disease. It is rich in vitamin D, the sunshine vitamin that prevents rickets. It also contains vital mineral elements that aid in forming sound bones and teeth. This gives Scott's Emulsion a special advantage for growing children, infants, nursing and expectant mothers. Get Scott's Emulsion at your nearest druggist. Watch cheeks grow rosy. See youngsters gain new weight and vigor.

a rounded neckline. She carried a bridal bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley and her corsage was of gardenias.

Following the nuptials, a reception was held at the Woodbury home at 589 North Arden Boulevard. After a short honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Green will reside at 445 North Martel avenue.

Previous to her wedding, Mrs. Green was the guest of honor at a number of parties, among them a well-attended reception given by the parents of the bridegroom, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Green of Hollywood.

Engagement Announced

An attractively appointed bridge party given recently by Miss Evelyn Edlund, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Edlund of Burnside avenue, honoring Miss Mildred Willson of Fresno, was the occasion for the announcement of the engagement of Miss Edlund to Lawrence Willson, brother of the honoree.

The bride-elect was graduated from the University of California at Los Angeles while Mr. Willson's alma mater is the University of Southern California.

The wedding will be an event of February 21.

Betrothal Told

Coming as a surprise to their friends was the announcement of the engagement of Miss Phyllis McInerney, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John McInerney, to Chester Lukens, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lukens of San Gabriel. The announcement was made by the arrival of the traditional five-pound box of candy at the Alpha Chi Omega house in Westwood. In the candy box was found a treasure chest containing a ring and the names of the betrothed.

Miss McInerney, a member of the senior class at University of California at Los Angeles, is affiliated with Alpha Chi Omega, and vice-president of Nu Delta Omicron. Mr. Lukens returned from a year abroad last fall, and is connected with the film industry. No date has been set for the wedding.

Announce Betrothal

Formal announcement was made by Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Caswell of 141 South Hudson Place of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Gladys Caswell, to William Miller Chace, Jr., formerly of Detroit and Chicago, the news being told at a beautifully appointed dinner-dance with which they entertained the 6th inst., at the Jonathan Club.

The table was beautifully decorated with yellow pompon chrysanthemums, salmon pink sweet peas, yellow gladioli and Talisman roses, while orange and green tapers gleamed from the silver candelabra, the color scheme carrying out University of Southern California and the fighting Irish of Notre Dame.

Miss Caswell was graduated from Miss Orton's School, after which she traveled extensively abroad. The secret was revealed by little ragged newsboys at each place announcing the betrothal in little extras with the names of the betrothed. The wedding will be an event of the late spring.

Those included were Messrs. and Mmes. L. F. Tieman of San Francisco; R. T. Nelson, L. E. Seymour, J. V. Dillman of Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Kneeland of Santa Barbara; Dr. and Mrs. C. C. Steiner, Dr. and Mrs. L. R. Brantley, Miss Helen Ledgerwood and A. N. Long.

Christmas Bridge-Tea

Alpha Delta Pi Alumnae Association entertained at a Christmas bridge-tea at Alpha Chi chapter house, at U.C.L.A., 806 Hilgard, the 6th inst. Miss Sue Nelles, president of Alpha Chi alumnae, was assisted by a committee under the chairmanship of Miss Margaret McPherrin.

At U.C.L.A.

Chi Omega has chosen the yuletide season to honor alumnae of its Gamma Beta chapter with a dinner, furnishing entertainment with a Christmas party tomorrow at its Westwood residence, 708 Hilgard avenue. Besides a large holiday tree in the living-room, decoration will be further carried out by small wreaths of holly, artistically arranged on the dinner table. Miss Marguerite Walsh is making arrangements.

Honoring parents of its members, Sigma Kappa recently held a formal tea at the Alpha Iota chapter house, 726 Hilgard avenue.

Mrs. Ira Thompson and Mrs. C. H. Robison poured at the tea table and Mrs. Mary Ellis, house mother, sponsored the function. A delicate pastel color scheme was carried out. The committee which made arrangements was headed by Miss Mary Louise Brady, and included the Misses Mary Johnson, Martha Grimm and Alaine Meeks.

One of two delightful recent events on the social calendar of Alpha Psi chapter of Alpha Chi Omega was a Christmas dinner party given by the Delta Delta organization of Alpha Chi Omega alumnae of Los Angeles to honor both local chapters of the sorority, Alpha Psi at the University of California at Los Angeles, and Epsilon at the University of Southern California. The affair was given at the home of Miss Frances Wilkinson of the alumnae chapter, 657 Lucerne Boulevard. Mrs. Harry Masser, province president, and Mrs. William Garland, house mother of Alpha Psi chapter, were guests of honor.

Alpha Psi members informally entertained their fathers recently with a southern dinner at the Westwood chapter house, which was also attended by Mrs. Harry Masser, province-president, and Miss Elizabeth Bryan, alumnae adviser. An autumnal color motif was carried out in the table setting and tapers of burnt orange, with dark red and orange zinnias. Entertainment was presented by the Misses Mary Clark and Jane Everson, and by means of impromptu speeches and songs by the fathers. Miss Rebecca Brandt, chapter president, and Miss Frances Beckwith, social chairman, were in charge.

Sorority Affairs

Groundbreaking ceremony for the Delta Zeta lodge, as the newest addition to Westwood's Sorority Row on Hilgard avenue, was held last Sunday afternoon. It was preceded by a formal luncheon at the present chapter house, 10807 Lindbrook avenue. The luncheon, which carried out a modernistic motif in black and silver, was attended by active members and their honored guests, Dean Helen Mathewson Laughlin of the University of California at Los Angeles and Mrs. Rene Selbring Smith, national Pan-Hellenic president of Delta Zeta. The ceremony was followed by an open-house reception at the chapter house for all friends of the sorority.

Miss Mary Ellen Hohiesel, social chairman, selected the following committee members to assist her in arrangements for luncheon: the Misses Willie Spencer, Ruth Hester and Helen Riter; for groundbreaking, Miss Helen Baynham, and for open house, the Misses Antoinette Porter, Phyllis Bourn and Ethel Leppo.

Pledges of Gamma Phi Beta acted as hostesses to active members of Alpha Iota chapter at U.C.L.A. at a formal dance at the Cocoanut Grove recently. Miss Katherine Stokes was in charge.

Farewell Reception

One of the interesting affairs of recent date was the farewell reception given for Edgar Hansen, who left for New York City to become a member of the educational department of the G. Schirmer Publishing Company.

The reception was given by Mrs. Sarah Taft Teschke of Hollywood, Mrs. Gertrude MacIn'osh and Mme. Don Phillippini (Mr. Hansen's mother) at the beautiful studio of the Zeta Phi Eta, 900 West Adams street.

The guests were:

Dr. and Mrs. Frank Touton, vice-president of U.S.C.; Judge and Mrs. Guy Bush, Mr. and Mrs. Homer Grunn, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Guerinsey, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Schallert, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Lott, Charles and Ruth Bowes, Ronald and Olive Dundas, Mr. and Mrs. John Smallman, Hugo and Betty Friedhofer, Mr. and Mrs. Frans Herding, Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Daly, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Keith, Mr. and Mrs. William Scott, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Travis, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Turpin, Vera Travis, Mr. and Mrs. Whitson, Mr. and Mrs. Mrs. Sweeney, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Cambern, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Hermile, Grace and Vincent Phillippini, Mr. and Mrs. Henry McCann, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Pollich, Louis Curtis, Julia Howell, Bess Daniels, Bertha Vaughn, Florence Hubbard, Mrs. Florence Mills, Winifred Hooke, Alice Sturdy, Homer Simmons, Meeka Aldrich, Katherine L. Mary Browne, Dorothy Gordon, Mrs. Gordon, Mary Cavanaugh, Rita Mitchell, Gladys Guild, Frank Anderson, Mrs. Anderson, Allan Soule, Lewis Ryan, Hugh McDoyal, Harold Miller and Mark Busby.

Bridge-Luncheon

One of the loveliest parties of the season was the bridge-luncheon given by Miss Beatrice Brand at her home on South Citrus avenue recently in honor of Miss Lucille Umbdenstock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Umbdenstock of Kingsley Drive, who on the 16th inst. will become the bride of George Silzer, Jr.

The appointments were in deep colors of various shades, each table carrying out its own color scheme in china, flowers and refreshments, as well as bridge favors and score cards. The effect was like a rainbow. The bride-elect was specially favored with a corsage of pansies and baby roses, and during the afternoon she was presented with a complete set of imported topaz crystal.

Guests bidden were the Misses Christina Ballreich, Harriet Segall, Margaret Althouse, June Amierson, Elizabeth Ashburn, Rebecca Brant, Hazel Carvin, Marjorie Martin, Maxine Olsen, Dorothy Onions, Mary Seeles, Mary Jane Smith, Elizabeth and Margaret Tull, Dove Bailey, Marjorie Schroeder and Jean Schroeder, Helen Small, Betty Thompson, Doris Wilder, Margaret Jackson, Mary Umbdenstock, Blanch Weaver, Celeste Ryus, Virginia and Jane Botsford, Mary Ester Evans, Helen Gray, Bonnie Hickey, Maxine Latta and Helen Pease. Also Mmes. Judson Corbin of New York City and her mother, Mrs. Clark Gregg of Ohio, winter guests here; Mmes. Allan Laws, Harold Dougher, Neil Shephard, Clayton Townsend, Edward Wintz, Byron Wolfe, James Haskell, S. McKee Adams, Harold Burres, Frank and Maurice Alexander, Phillip Lively, Sidney Meeks, James Norton, Vernon Sheblak and Lillian G. Brand, mother of the hostess, and W. M. Umbdenstock, mother of the honoree.

Interesting Affair

Of more than usual interest was the dedication, held recently at Girls' Collegiate School in Glendora, when the members of the senior class formally presented a fountain and pool, designed and constructed by them, under the direction of Mrs. Frances Duncan Manning.

The pool is planned as the central unit for a formal garden and each semester will see additions to the garden.

The officers of the class of 1931 in charge of the ceremony were Miss Frances Elfendahl, president; Miss Sue Knox, vice-president; Miss Charlotte Gregg, secretary and treasurer. Other members of the class, the Misses Betty Bailey, Louise Bramlette, Helen Chandler, Marion Cruickshank, Ruth De Vienne, Ruth Franklin, Jane and Virginia Helm, Edith Hightower, Mary Lou Hendry, Juanita Lewis, Anna Margaret Losey, Helene Maddux, Frederica Marco, Dorothy McNeil, Betty Hilliron, Gene Monroe, Margary Adelaide Moran, Peggy Phillips, Madalene Potter, Harriette Rutan, Sally Schulze, Betty Stoddard and June Wilson, assisted.

Visits Parents

Mrs. Stephen E. Metcalf (Helen Katherine Broughall,) who is making her home in Berkeley, where her husband is completing his medical course, will arrive in this city tomorrow for a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Broughall, 445 South Berendo street.

Mrs. Metcalf will give a talk on Christmas stories at a section meeting of the Friday Morning Club Tuesday. Last year she addressed the Marlborough School and the Westlake School for Girls. She is an honor graduate of Stanford as well as the University of Lyons, France, and has studied at the Louvre, in Paris, France.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Last Tuesday Mr. and Mrs. William H. Burnham celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with a quiet family party at the home of their eldest son, Ralph F. Burnham of Pasadena, when their children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren attended. Their children are Ralph Burnham, William H. Burnham, Jr., of Pasadena, and Mrs. Henry O. Wheeler. They have seven grandchildren and one great grandchild.

Mr. and Mrs. Burnham were married in Geneva, Ill., December 9, 1880. In 1883 they came to Orange, and later moved to this city, where they have since resided.

Betrothal Told

The engagement of Miss Helen Henrietta Rissman, daughter of Mrs. Connie H. Rissman, 5824 La Mirada avenue, to Harry Louis Barrell, son of Fred Barrell of Zanesville, O., was announced at a bridge party given recently at the Rissman home. Miss Rissman was graduated from Hollywood High School. Mr. Barrell is a Phi Sigma Chi.

Dinner Dance

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Millar were hosts to a coterie of friends at a recent dinner dance at the Town House. Those bidden were Mr. and Mrs. Louis A. Benoist of San Francisco, Mrs. W. A. Keddie of Fallon, Nev., E. A. Julian of San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. Clark, Jr., of San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. Livingston Kepplinger of San Francisco and Elisha Walker of New York City.

Luncheon Hostess

Mrs. Dorothy Moyer of Catalina street, Pasadena, was a recent luncheon hostess to the Alpha Phi alumnae chapter. There were many guests representing a large number of chapters of Alpha Phi. Among the guests of note were Mrs Robert J. Burdette, one of the founders of Alpha Phi at Syracuse University in 1872, and Mrs. George O Robinson, one of the first initiates, later dean of women at Northwestern University. Both Mrs. Burdette and Mrs. Robinson now live in Pasadena. Mrs. Burdette gave a very inspiring description of her recent visit to University of Arizona, where she took part in the dedication of the beautiful new Alpha Phi house

SOCIAL AFFAIRS of THE ARMY AND NAVY

Capt. Charles E. Courtney, commanding officer of the U.S.S. Tennessee, and Mrs. Courtney, whose marriage was an event of November, are being extensively entertained by ranking officers of the naval colony and their wives since they returned to Long Beach to make their headquarters at the Villa Riviera. Opening the round of brilliant gayety, Lieutenant - Commander and Mrs. Forrest U. Lake of the Tennessee were hosts at an exquisitely appointed party at Pacific Coast Club last Friday night.

Guests were seated at a long table vivid with delphinium and snapdragons in three shades of pink and aglow with candlelight.

Pale green tapers were arranged about the center basket and grouped with smaller baskets of the blossoms at either end of the table. Invitations were issued to Capt. and Mrs. Courtney, Commander and Mrs. Ronan Grady, Commander and Mrs. William Furnell, Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. Walter Riedel, Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. Alfred S. Wolfe, Lieut. and Mrs. John Haines, Lieut. and Mrs. Hugh Olds, Lieut. and Mrs. Thomas T. Craven, Lieut. and Mrs. Cyril Rumble, Lieut. and Mrs. Walter Schindler, Lieut. and Mrs. Julius Thompson, Lieut. and Mrs. George P. Hunter, Lieut. and Mrs. Harry Kieth, Lieut. and Mrs. Richard Oliver, Lieut. and Mrs. Morton K. Fleming, Lieut. and Mrs. Emmet J. Sullivan, Lieut. and Mrs. Charles Weigester, Lieut. and Mrs. Edward Hawkes, Capt. and Mrs. William C. James, Marine Corps; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hoyt, Mr. and Mrs. George Taubman, Jr.; Lieut. J. N. Adams, Lieut. R. E. Price, Lieut. F. E. McDonald, Commander Smith Hempstone, Commander Albert N. Parke, Jr., and Ensign W. E. Allen.

Virginia Country Club was the scene of a smart luncheon when Mrs. Thorvald Solberg, wife of Lieutenant - Commander Solberg, U.S.S. Idaho, entertained honoring Mrs. Courtney, who is her sister. Her table was charming with a fusion of pussywillows, snapdragons, sweet peas and other colorful blossoms which lent an air of early springtime to the party.

Feminine members of the service contingent bidden to greet Mrs. Courtney were Mrs. Richard H. Leigh, wife of Vice-Admiral Leigh; Mrs. Luke McNamee, wife of Rear-Admiral McNamee; Mrs. Joel R. P. Pringle, wife of Rear-Admiral Pringle; Joseph K. Taussig, Adolphus Watson, Edward S. Jackson, Ernest J. King, Edward H. H. Old, Alfred Toulon, Richard Edwards, Reginald B. Henry and Ronan C. Grady.

An outstanding affair of the past week took place Thursday when Mrs. John D. H. Kane, wife of Lieut. Kane, U.S.S. California, entertained with a bridge-tea, honoring Mrs. Emanuel A. Lofquist, who leaves in January for Washington, D. C., where Commander Lofquist, executive officer of the California, has been ordered for shore duty. The tea table was beautifully appointed with pink and lavender stock and narcissus and cream-colored candles adding a soft illumination. Presiding at the tea and coffee urns following bridge were Mrs. Richard Leigh, wife of Vice-Admiral Leigh, and Mrs. Joel R. P. Pringle, wife of Rear-Admiral Pringle.

Bright colors hinted of approaching Christmastide in flowers and candles decorating the table at which Commander and Mrs. John C. Ziegler of the Nevada were dinner hosts at Pacific Coast Club Friday night. Those who enjoyed the merry collegiate night party in the club with Commander and Mrs. Ziegler were Capt. John Joseph Hyland, commanding officer of the Nevada; Commander and Mrs. Lesley Barratt Anderson, Commander Roscoe E. Schuirman, Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. Donald Godwin and Lieut. and Mrs. Robert H. Matton.

Mrs. Elsie H. Kimmell has announced the betrothal of her daughter, Miss Dorothy Lane Kimball, to Ensign Royce L. Gross, U.S.N., of New York. Miss Kimmell has sailed from the east coast on the liner Virginia and the wedding is scheduled to take place here soon after her arrival the 24th inst.

Luncheon and bridge was enjoyed aboard the U.S.S. Relief Thursday afternoon when Capt. Harry A. Orr, commanding officer of the hospital ship, was host to a group of service friends. His guests were Lieutenant - Commander and Mrs. Fred W. Connor of the Nevada, Commander and Mrs. Frank J. Wille, U.S.S. Procyon; Capt. Charles W. O. Bunker, senior medical officer of the Relief, and Lieutenant - Commander Romeo J. Jondreau, executive officer.

The home of Commander Morris M. Leonard, corps of chaplains, U.S.S. Colorado, and Mrs. Leonard was the setting for an informal party Tuesday afternoon, when Mrs. Leonard entertained at luncheon for wives of chaplains attached to the battle fleet. Motoring to the harbor from Los Angeles were Mrs. Walter L. Thompson, wife of Lieutenant - Commander Thompson of the Idaho; Mrs. Le Roy Nelson Taylor, wife of Capt. Taylor, and Mrs. Robert E. Miller, wife of Lieut. Miller. Other guests were Mrs. Maurice Witherspoon, Mrs. Alfred Vogler, Mrs. Robert Workman, Mrs. Charles Dittmar and Mrs. H. R. Trump.

Mrs. George T. Mundorff, Jr., wife of Lieut. Mundorff, aviator aboard the U.S.S. Saratoga, has returned south after an absence of several weeks in Bremerton and is again at home at the harbor. During her stay in Bremerton Mrs. Mundorff entertained as her house guest Miss Emily Fenton of Loma Portal, San Diego.

One of the many delightful affairs in the San Pedro naval colony was given Tuesday when Mrs. Frank F. Webster and Mrs. Norman Schwien were luncheon and bridge hostesses at the Webster home to wives of officers attached to the U.S.S. Medusa. Gay holiday colors of scarlet and green made an effective holiday background for the party, which was enjoyed by Mmes. Dallas Laisure, Oscar Holtmann, Charles C. Stotz, Clara Stotz, Howard Wickham, Charles E. McDonald, David Greenlee, Jr., Louis Sharp, Roy Hudson, Arthur Peterson, Gustav Tanske, William Powell, Tom B. Hill, William Shahan and Percy McCord.

Joy-Makers to Present Plays for Christmas

An outstanding feature of the Harrison-Wallack Studio of Drama is the work done by the junior production group, known as the Joy-makers Juvenile Stock Company.

The youngsters receive their training in voice and stage technique under Edwin N. Wallack, who is widely known for his unusual success in developing dramatic talent. The purpose of the "Joy-makers," as the name implies, is to bring joy and sunshine into the lives of those around them. The aim is to present full-length plays and sketches each month, and to turn the proceeds over to some worthy charity.

Last week the Joy-makers turned over an appreciable sum to the Community Chest when they presented a brilliant two-act comedy in the studio auditorium. Among others in the cast whose work elicited much favorable comment was tiny Margaret Miller in the role of little Mary Mickford and Miss Anita Swarts, who played opposite her as the "poor little rich girl."

"The Toys That Were Left Behind," a Christmas play now under preparation, will be the holiday offering at the studio theater. The proceeds, in this case, will go to the Crippled Children's Home.

Comedy Drama First of Play Series Group

Are men too slick for women—even the modern business woman? Is the feminine equal to the late-model, high-pressure masculine attack? This problem is piquantly presented, says Robert W. Major, the producer, in the new comedy-drama by a Hollywood writer, to be offered for the first time on any stage at the Major Theater, beginning December 8, with Alice Calhoun and Eugene Parker in the principal roles, supported by an all-professional cast. The play, entitled "Everybody's Troubles," is said to have special interest for women who find themselves without a man to fight their battles in a hard-boiled modern world.

Third Bill of Plays Given

The third bill of one-act plays was recently given at the Edward Clark Academy, where it ran for a full week. Three sketches, including a condensed version of Mr. Clark's famous play, "De Luxe Annie," was the offering, in which students took part, aided by several professional players, among them Janet Elsie Clark and Paul Weigel.

Among the artists, directors and studio executives who attended the week's performances were Jean Hersholt, Eddie Lambert, Ralph and Vera Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Van Buren, Clare DuBrey, Knute Erickson, John T. Murray, Vivian Oakland, Nellie V. Nichols, Charles H. Smith, Johnny Morris, Marty Brooks, M.-G.-M. director; Miss Welsh, Samuel Goldwyn's secretary; Lionel Belmore, Daisy Belmore, Lichtig and Englander; Miss Knapp, William Morris agency; Benjamin Christianson and the two Paramount casting directors, Fred Datig and Joseph Egli.

The next bill of plays will be given the week of January 12, on which program Mr. Clark will appear in support of his students. He will again essay his role of Uncle Wolfe in a condensed version of his play, "Relations."

Lorbeer Will Speak to Club

Carroll Lorbeer, son of Mrs. James Birney Lorbeer, past president of the Los Angeles district, California Federation of Women's Clubs, will speak on "The Student's View of the Orient." Mrs. Fred V. Watson, president, will preside at the regular meeting of the Woman's Club of Hollywood, Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. Mrs. E. B. Dixon will present Aline Barrett in "Current Reviews."

A children's party will be given next Thursday at 2:30 p.m. Each child is asked to bring a gift and aid Santa Claus in filling his pack for a child.

The young woman's section is also giving a Christmas party for the children. This party is for the children of the Los Angeles Orphanage, and will be given in the lounge of the club Monday, the 22nd inst., at 2 p.m.

Teachers' Club Holds Meeting

Los Angeles City Teachers' Club held a joint meeting with the High School Teachers' Association last Monday to discuss proposed changes in tenure and retirement.

The welfare committee reported that plans are under way among several subcommittees for Christmas cheer and general welfare. These committees are to function both independently and in co-ordination with established civic organizations that are seeking to relieve the stress caused by unemployment.

The board of directors and Miss Olga Roberts with her social committee will act as hostesses at the City Teachers' Club luncheon to be given this year at the Ambassador Tuesday, the 16th inst., at 12:30 p.m.

FILM "GAGS" PLACED IN FINISHED STORY

A diamond may be just a piece of hard glass and a gold nugget merely a bit of metal, but a motion-picture "gag" is a "gag" and must be guarded with a life-or-death attitude.

This is the film creed of Edward Sutherland, director of successful screen comedies, who is now plotting Jack Oakie through Paramount's "The Gang Buster."

Sutherland has become noted in Hollywood for comedy situations which he injects into his picture after a story is completed.

So carefully does Sutherland conceal his comedy actions that most of them are never included in the completed script of the story, which forms the working basis for the picture.

Some of these laughs may be talked over before camera work begins and kept out of typed pages for protection.

Usually, however, these humorous situations are pulled "out of the air" by Sutherland as a scene is about to begin. Sutherland seeks laughs from the settings or the properties with which the company starts work.

The director's reason for such secrecy lies not in a fear of piracy but in the fact that he believes that surprise laughs are the most conducive to a successful showing of a picture. He wants an audience to see a comedy without knowing what to expect. If people know a laugh is coming, and what it will be, the result is not effective, he says.

"Running gags" are Sutherland's hobbies. These are laugh situations which keep occurring, each time with greater effect and continually altered to create surprise and create comedy.

Such a "gag," which was worked out during the production of the picture and not a part of the script, was the shoe-string situation in "The Social Lion." Oakie, as a prize fighter, is knocked out in the first sequence because his opponent barks out that Oakie's shoe is untied and Oakie glances down only to receive a knockout blow on the chin.

When, later on, Mary Brian suddenly tells Oakie his shoe is actually untied, Oakie leaps back defensively. Still later, he and Miss Brian take the train for the city to be married and the camera moves down to an untied shoe lace. The last scene has Oakie knocking out an opponent by the untied shoe-string fake and then reveals the fact that Oakie's shoes are equipped with zippers. Each succeeding laugh tops its predecessor.

So popular did this running comedy register with the public that Oakie met it in every city in which he appeared on a personal appearance tour. He capitalized on it. He reports that at every performance in every city, he could always depend on some one in the audience shouting "Your shoe's untied." Oakie's comeback was to lift up his feet and reveal the fact that he wore bedroom slippers.

Sutherland has a comedy build-up situation of this type in "The Gang Buster," but, naturally, is not revealing it.

FRENCH WRITER TALKS TO CLUB

Pierre de Lanux Speaks of Peace Efforts

World Economic Conditions Stressed by Speaker

Nations Becoming Used to Conferences, He Says

BY MYRA NYE

Pierre De Lanux, youthful editor, writer of books, including "The Life of Henry IV," a practical organizer, linguist and an internationalist, was the speaker at the last meeting of the Friday Morning Club. His subject was "The Modern Art of Statesmanship," and he set forth reasons for ultimate world peace and its comparative nearness.

"I am a conditional optimist," stated the Frenchman, who organized the French Comite d'Action pour la Societe des Nations. "We now have treaties which, if regarded, will maintain peace and we have in all nations a will to peace. This is the reason my optimism is conditional on the integrity of the treaties and the dissemination of the knowledge of true statesmanship."

PEOPLE SHOULD KNOW

The speaker declared that more important than the treaties or any that may be signed in the future is that the people should know the great forces for peace and the great dangers that threaten it. He said that there were all too few great and well-informed leaders. In spite of this, he stated that great strides have been made in the last fifteen years, and he named three factors to substantiate his claim.

"Nations are now getting used to conferences on peace and they find they do avail.

"Economic relations are better than they were fifteen years ago. We have machinery for peace and public opinion throughout the world for peace is strong," said M. De Lanux.

As the speaker views the dangers to world peace the greatest is the belief in all nations that only their own is for peace and all others are against it.

To dispel this false illusion as he views it, M. De Lanux never ceases to be an indefatigable worker for the French committee, according to Mrs. John C. Urquhart, who introduced him. He has spoken in France in hundreds of towns on the subject of the pacific union of the world. So distinct was his contribution that he was appointed director of the Paris information office of the League of Nations, a task which calls for coordination between French associations dealing with international affairs and supplying information to the leading publications of the world.

NEWSPAPERS SURPASS

In this work M. De Lanux stated to the club members he has found that there are about fifteen newspapers in the United States that surpass in excellence and fairness any publications of other countries.

"There are also a few," he said, "that are worse than those of other countries."

Mrs. Louise Ward Watkins, chairman of drama, will preside at the drama luncheon in the clubhouse Tuesday. Two plays will be presented, "The Beau of Bath" and "The Top of the City." The latter was written by Margaret Barbrick Purcell and will be directed by her. Mrs. Neal Woods and Mrs. Charles Axton Chamberlain, the former member of Euterpe board and the latter head of the drama workshop of Ebell, will take the two roles of the play whose scene is laid in the library of a bachelor's apartment on Christmas eve.

"Folk Lore of Many Lands" will be given after luncheon by Ritza Freeman Reardon and Evelyn Adams will speak on "Shakespeare and the Theater Today" at 10:30 a.m.

Actress Will Be on Program

The book and current literature section of the Beverly Hills Woman's Club is presenting as its outstanding program of the month Mrs. Patrick Campbell in repertoire, Tuesday, at 2 p.m., at the clubhouse. Mrs. Campbell is portraying six definitely different personalities in this program as against one presented in any of her regular plays.

Following the program, which is "open house" to club members, an English Christmas tea will be served in the loggia with Mrs. J. B. Millard, president emeritus, and Mrs. Karl Murdock, president, presiding at the tea urns. They will be assisted by Mrs. Edith Burlingame, curator, and four past curators, Mmes. Norman Pabst, George Elmendorf, A. C. Heegaard and Ford Twaits.

Mrs. Noel Hooker is program chairman for this section.

Stop GRAY HAIR

If you are troubled with gray hair, falling hair or dandruff, don't give up! Use Nourishine! Nourishine is a tonic that acts naturally, at the base of the trouble—the hair roots. VAN NUYS' WOMEN'S CLUB JUNIORS PLAN CHRISTMAS BENEFIT PARTY

One Hundred and Fifty Children to be Given Christmas Party

One of the outstanding activities of the junior auxiliaries is the annual Christmas party to be given by the juniors of the Van Nuys Woman's Club for the children of less fortunate circumstances, including approximately 150 children of the San Fernando Valley. The affair will be given Friday evening, the 19th inst., in the clubhouse. Mrs. Virginia Miller is in charge of the decorations. Other members taking an active part in the arrangements are Miss Irene Chapman, junior club president; Miss Phoebe Ann Balcom, Miss Alice Marsden, Miss Barbara Steere, Miss Dorothy Taylor and Mrs. Herbert Chrysler Hunter.

CLUB NOTES

At the 1 o'clock meeting of the Woman's Club tomorrow, Mrs. Robert D. Shield, president, will introduce the speaker of the day, Prof. John Eugene Harley, whose subject will be "International Understanding." Miss Lillian Getty, secretary of U.I.R., will give a report of the International Institute Conference conducted at Riverside.

"Courts" will be discussed by Judge Henry N. Willis, at the 11 o'clock luncheon. Albert Von Tilzer, composer of modern music, has arranged a program of interesting numbers. Mrs. Hulda Wessels, chairman and her courts committee will be in charge of the luncheon.

A benefit party for war veterans, assisted by the Wilshire Juniors, was given in the Sala de Oro Ballroom at the Biltmore, last Friday, under the direction of Mrs. A. Sidney Brown, chairman of division of cooperation with War Veterans.

The Scribblers' League will present at the Mayfair Hotel the 20th inst. Miss Ruth Yanover, solo pianiste from the Marguerite Le Grand Studio. Also, Earle Strickland, editor of Plotweaver, on "Modern Authorship;" and the Park Players in the prize-winning, one-act play, "A Pair of Foxes," by Dorothy Nunnelly, vice-president of the club. Miss Doris Mayo Pratt will give a reading.

The Junior Republican Study Club of Los Angeles will give a Christmas charity dinner-dance at Honolulu Isle, Deauville Beach Club, Wednesday night, the 17th inst.

Proceeds of the dinner will be spent on a Christmas program, for the patients at Rest Haven, to be given the 24th inst. Also, five American families will have their Christmas made cheery by clothing and toys for the children. Each family will receive a basket of food.

The hostesses in charge are: Chairman, Miss Elizabeth Sewell; the Mmes. Gladys Towles Root, Juanita Hogsett, Lucille Towles Sutherland, Golda Lindroth, Ruth Sampson Dollor, Helen Porter, Virginia Sewell, Louise Trekell Carr, Winifred Dickey, Margaret Porter, Isabella Dodds.

The 16th inst. has been chosen for the Christmas program at West Ebell. Prof. Frans Hoffman will lead the chorus in singing carols, accompanied by Miss Adele Marie, pianist. Mrs. Edgar Spinney will sing selections in southern dialect.

Departments convening in the morning are music, Spanish, parliamentary law and better American speech.

Mrs. Roy Hill will be hostess in the dining-room at luncheon.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Los Angeles County Medical Association, will be conducted Thursday, the 18th inst., at 2:30 o'clock in the Friday Morning Club building.

Mrs. James F. Percy, first president of the county auxiliary who developed the chapter into an organization with the largest membership of any auxiliary in the United States, is retiring as county president on account of her numerous duties as State president and national fourth vice-president.

Dr. C. Morley Sellery, assistant director division of health and corrective physical education of Los Angeles city schools, will address the meeting. There will be a musical skit given by Mrs. Marxmiller, Mildred Wheat and Marion Beaullen, and a Christmas tea will follow the program.

Hollenbeck Ebell will entertain its juvenile friends Wednesday afternoon, the 17th inst., with a Christmas party. The program will feature a group of talented young artists. Mrs. J. L. Barton is chairman of the day.

Donations of fruits, jams and jellies are requested, to be used by Mrs. E. E. Hockett, social service chairman, in the baskets which that section is providing for Christmas giving.

Mrs. Hazel Pettit, chairman, has her group organized to assist the disabled veterans on "Forget-me-not Day."

LAST MINUTE GIFTS TO BE DISCUSSED

Guidance in solving the problem of "the last-minute gift" will be given at the book review luncheon of the Women's Athletic Club next Tuesday. Miss Helen Haines of the Los Angeles Public Library will talk on "Books for Christmas Buying," and she promises to throw so much light and understanding on the books in the Christmas market that the shopper who even at the last moment remembers she must obtain a gift will know exactly the book the individual will want. Reservations for the luncheon are already being made and by their number indicate a lively interest in the subject on the part of club members.

GRACE NOTES

Art of unusual merit will be on display at the Catholic Woman's Club, 927 Menlo, next Wednesday, at 2 p.m. At this time Mrs. Georgia Fink will give an instructive lecture on the "Christ Child in Art."

At luncheon Dr. C. Morley Sellery will speak on "Corrective Physical Education." Mrs. William P. O'Meara will preside.

Cadman Creative Club will conduct its December meeting Thursday night this week at the Adele Hatcher-Smith Studio, 642 South Berendo street. A Christmas party will be given with Mrs. Hatcher-Smith hostess for an informal Christmas party following.

Choristers from St. Paul's Cathedral, selected singers, boys and men in robes, will sing carols featuring Frank Jones, 13-year-old boy, Dudley Warner Fitch, president of the club and director of the choir, at the piano. Irene M. Gifford of the drama department of the club and head of the drama department of the Adele Hatcher-Smith School, will give a Christmas reading. Edna L. Shaw, of the dance department, will present little Miss Frances Layne in "Christmas Bonnet," and other dances, and through the courtesy of the Hatcher-Smith Studio, Ovedia Holther, head of the dance department, will give a Grecian number and peasant interpretative dance, Marie Mikova at the piano. Mrs. Arthur Reams of Atlanta will play for Frances Layne.

Mrs. Smith will open her studio for the evening. She will be assisted during the social hour by Mmes. Rose Victoria Johnson, Marshall Stookey Anderson, C. A. Isaacs, Grace Eaton Dow, Alamae Burman, Gannon M. Strelitz and Miss Edna L. Shaw.

Honoring Caro Roma, composer, a musical reception was given Friday night at the home of Baroness Ryhiner-Morrill in Portland street. The affair was for the members of the Cadman Creative Club, of which Baroness Morrill is a member.

Artists presented were Flora Meyers Engle, soprano; Franz Darvas, pianist composer; Laurel Nemeth-Saunders, soprano; Mrs. George Mitchell, reader; Frank Pursell, baritone, and Caro Roma herself contributed some of her own numbers.

Hostesses for the evening were Mmes. Marshall Stookey Anderson, Grace Eaton Dow, Frances Dunaway Goodman, Myra Cain Grant, Leonora D. Pier, Maxine Scaggs, C. A. Isaacs, John McPhee, Mabel Dyer.

An outdoor meeting in Westlake Park will be substituted for the usual indoor meeting of the Los Angeles Audubon Society next Thursday. Visitors are invited to join the members at the southwest corner of the park at 9:30 a.m. for study of the many unusual birds now wintering in the park.

Talking on the Ukrainian-Russian Civic Center, Mrs. Valentine Kachmarshy, the founder, will speak at El Camino Real Chapter D.A.R. next Thursday at 2 p.m., Women's University Club, 943 South Hoover street.

Guests of honor will be the State officers, Mrs. George Adams, and Miss Lizzie B. Cowles. Tea will be served by Mmes. Ethel S. Perry, George Craig, Harry Scott, Adeline A. Tiel, Hattie B. Green, Charles Williams, William A Banta. Misses Elizabeth Waters, Anna Belle Risser, Edith Bannister, Bertha B. Frost.

The Business and Professional Women's Club of Los Angeles was the hostess at the December meeting of the southern district, California Federation Business and Professional Women's Clubs yesterday.

The banquet was given in the main dining-room of the Women's Athletic Club, 833 South Flower street.

CHRISTMAS SPIRIT PREVAILS

Many Charitable Affairs Scheduled by Clubs Throughout Southland During Week

An abundance of charitable and cheery affairs are occurring in club circles throughout the Southland during this holiday season which are reflecting the true light of the Christmas spirit. Schubert Wa Wan celebrated the opening of the season last Wednesday with a Christmas luncheon in the Sala de Oro of the Biltmore when the tables were lighted by the glow from red candles.

Special honor guests of the affair were George McManus, cartoonist, and James McDermott Sheridan, a Consul to Brazil, who spoke on "The Season of International Good Will." Other honor guests were Mrs. Hascle Freeman, Mrs. Lillian K. Floyd, Mrs. Bessie Fuhrer Erb, Mrs. Frances Stults Campbell, Mrs. James McDermott Sheridan, Mrs. Pearl Berry Boyd, Mrs. E. A. Brandes, Mrs. Emilie Rieck, Mrs Oliver Edwards and Mrs. Lester Robinson. Mrs. Ralph Waldo Bucknam, president, presided.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAM

A Christmas program was given following the luncheon by Mrs. Lillian Backstrand Wilson, assisted by Mrs. William Barber and Miss Mabel Woodworth.

Living pictures will illustrate the concert of carols to be given Wednesday at the Wednesday Morning clubhouse, Avenue 38 and Ebell street, when the combined choruses of the San Pedro Woman's Club, West Ebell and the Wednesday Morning Club will sing numbers under the direction of Franz Hoffman.

The Wilshire Juniors will have a Christmas party Thursday evening at the home of Miss Thelma Gowsell, 103 South Mansfield avenue, and the members will furnish and decorate the tree for the party to be given Saturday by the district Federation Juniors for the benefit of the Los Angeles Orphans' Home. The committee for the latter affair includes Mrs. John Swaney, Miss Mildred Scott, Miss Jane Avery, Miss Kathleen Crosby and Miss Beth Beelby.

CHILDREN TO BE GUESTS

Five hundred children from various charitable institutions will be the guests of the Matinee Musical Club Saturday afternoon in the Ambassador Theater, when Janice Sprague Cyr will present thirty-five children in a program and Santa Claus will distribute gifts. Mrs. D. J. Brown is general chairman of the affair.

Santa Claus is to appear at an elaborate Christmas party to be given Tuesday for the members of the Lincoln Study Club with headquarters at Eighth and Plymouth. Mrs. Ferne McCory, drama chairman, will present the program.

A Christmas breakfast will be given at the Highland Park Ebell Club Tuesday preceding a concert by the Woman's Symphony Orchestra with Arthur Alexander director. The club chorus will sing at the breakfast. Gift boxes will be given to the women of the W.C.T.U. home in Eagle Rock and to the county farm.

County Jail Problems to Be Discussed

Problems relative to rehabilitation of discharged prisoners from the County Jail and the unemployment situation will be threshed out under novel circumstances next Thursday when a group of representative women, headed by Mrs. Bertram Eugene Green, will meet at a luncheon in the jail to be given by the rehabilitation department of the Sheriff's office.

The committee, besides Mrs. Green, includes Mmes. Chester Wallace Brown, Oliver Converse Bryant, William J. Chicester, Robert Ladd Gifford, Hector Geiger, Dick Smith, William A. Moses, William Irving Hollingsworth, Leslie Sloan-Orcutt, William Henry Anderson, Earl McClintock, Henry M. Willis, Clifford Rohe and Judge Georgia Bullock.

Room 270, Hall of Justice, will be the meeting place of the group, after which they will proceed to the jail, where a study will be made of all departments.

Educational Address to Be Heard by Club

"Significance of the Emphasis on Guidance in Our Schools and Colleges" will be the subject of a talk by Miss Sarah M. Sturtevant, associate professor of education in the Teachers' College of Columbia at a luncheon the 16th inst. at the Women's University Club.

Honor guests on this occasion will be Mmes. George Herbert Clark, Carrie P. Bryant, James T. Lytle, Rufus B. Von KleinSmid, William Snyder, Ethel Richardson Allen, Pearl Atkin Smith, Helen M. Laughlin, the Misses Jessie T. Gibson, Isabel F. Smith, Helen Persinger, Frederica De Laguna, Jessica Vance and Lillian H. Woody. Hostesses will be Mmes. Susan M. Dorsey, Robert Burdette, Arthur S. Heinemann, W. L. Woolletti, the Misses Mary Sinclair Crawford, Irene T. Myer, Anne Mumford, Grace Fulmer, Ada S. Blake and Dr. Dorothea Moore.

ANNUAL ELECTION OF OFFICERS SCHEDULED

Mrs. Harry A. Chamberlin will close her regime as president of the Republican Study Club Friday, the 12th inst., when annual election of officers will be held. To date, no competition has been in evidence with the exception of the board of directors, in which case five petitions have been filed for the three offices to be filled. The contenders are Mrs. Clara Lane, incumbent; Mrs. Catherine Bearden, incumbent, and Mrs. George McDill, Mrs. Homer Prather and Mrs. Forrest Vrooman.

The Green Cross, in which the Republican Study Club holds membership, will present a tableau depicting a living Christmas tree with Miss Nancy Thompson as the emblematic figure. Additional features of the program will be an illustrated travelogue of Zion National Park and Bryce Canyon, a review of local politics by Mrs. Sidney H. Creager, and Christmas music by Mrs. Jane Davis Morris.

Girls' Corner Club to Give Entertainment

Christmas festivities for the Girls' Corner Club will be enjoyed in the clubrooms the 23rd inst., when a large tree will be hung with gifts for the girls which Santa Claus will distribute. Special carols and other music will be provided by the boys' choir of St. Paul's Cathedral, directed by Dudley Warren Fitch.

In the months of January and February the club will serve their famous "stew supper" each Friday evening from 6 to 7 o'clock in addition to their regular Tuesday evening dinner. These meals are available to all the business girls of the city and at a very low price. They are given in the Auditorium Building, Fifth and Olive streets. Rae Condit is in charge of the community sing, and Frances L. Neth, mother and founder of the club, presides.

The club which started with only ten members, now numbers thousands of girls on its roster and is at this time of business depression doing a particularly fine work.

Women to Aid Valley Indians

Worthy philanthropies claiming the attention of the Wilshire Woman's Club are the war veteran Indians in Owens Valley, who are in great distress at this time because of poverty and misfortune, and children who would otherwise miss the Christmas cheer. At the next regular meeting Tuesday, at 1419 South Wilton Place, clothes and toys will be donated to the City Mothers to be distributed among the worthy poor.

The program of the day will be presented by Mrs. Charles Jaben Hubbard. Mrs. Jean Colwell Houghton, soprano, accompanied by Mary Elsa Hoffman, will sing a group of songs. "Our Constitutional Duties" is the subject of an oration to be delivered by Leslie Goodard, champion orator of the Southern California contest on the Constitution and a graduate of the University of California at Los Angeles. Luncheon will be served at noon, followed by a lecture on "Literature" by Prof. H. T. Thompson.

Averill Club to Give Affair

The Christmas party for the members of the Averill Study Club will be given the 16th inst. with Mrs. Florence A. Bricker, 2712 Menlo avenue, as hostess. This annual Christmas festivity has always been the occasion for gifts toward the club benevolences as well as for the exchange of gifts among the members. Organized more than forty years ago, this club is still active in its charities as well as in its study features. Mrs. D. G. Blair will read the Christmas story. For the first meeting of the month, last Tuesday, Celeste Ryus, pianiste, entertained with a musical travelogue.

BIRTHDAY LUNCHEON TO BE GIVEN SATURDAY

A luncheon for members of the Italian Women's Clubs, whose birthday anniversaries are in the current month will be given next Saturday at the Mona Lisa Tea Room. A Christmas program has been arranged under the direction of Miss Agiene Hamblin. Among the artists who will appear are Maestro Micele, accompanying Mme. Micele; Maestro Franchette, accompanying Mme. Franchette, and Mrs. Pauline Tasca, soprano.

Soroptimist Club Selects New Officers

Dr. Evangeline Percival defeated Miss Clelia Collins in the race for the presidency of the Soroptimist Club in the election of officers Tuesday at the Biltmore. Dr. Percival will succeed Miss Margaret Reordan.

There was a contest in each office. Adelaide Brewer Douglas and Mary M. Russell are the new vice-presidents and Anna T. Schiebusch is treasurer. Four new directors will join the hold-overs, Helen Rankin and Agnes Mahoney. They are Mongette Brodke, Margaret R. Filkins, Paula Steinen Grath and Estella Roath.

Dr. Percival will be the first president to direct the club from the new central headquarters in the Ferguson Building, which will be ready for occupancy when she is installed, January 6.

P.-T.A. CLUB FORMED IN WALNUT PARK

Heading a live and progressive drama department, Miss Jo Reve, State chairman of drama, First District, P.T.A., reports much advance being made in developing the dramatic instincts in the normal and average child. Reporting to the board of the district, she announced that a club had been formed at Liberty school in Walnut Park, which is open to the fourth, fifth and sixth-grade children. Rehearsals are conducted every day except Monday after school. Monday a business meeting conducted by the children themselves takes the place of rehearsal. The ambitious children are self-governing and possess their own drama critics. The productions are of value as a source of enjoyment and instruction, while the Monday business meeting is developing initiative and a knowledge of parliamentary law. Two plays, "The Pudding Pan" and "Gewhilikans" are now being rehearsed for future presentations.

...California Club Gives Versifiers Opportunity in Anthology Publication

BY NEETA MARQUIS

...ly in the interests of literature, but rather more for the prestige gained for their catalogues in the listing of work by a brilliant poet. It accordingly becomes a matter of special importance when a volume of collected poetry in which no single name stands out as particularly famous is brought out at the publisher's risk. The question at once arises, as in the present instance, how has it been accomplished?

The determining factor here has been the Verse Writers' Club of Southern California, an organization founded in 1916 by the late Grace Atherton Dennen of the Girls' Collegiate School, one of the most public-spirited educators Los Angeles has ever known, herself a poet, and the founder and first editor of a poetry magazine, the Lyric West, which maintained a creditable position for a number of years.

The Verse Writers' Club, small in membership and of nonprofessional requirements, but directed by earnest, scholarly leaders, and affiliated with the Poetry Society of America, agreed with the Primavera Press, of recent establishment in Los Angeles, to sponsor such a publication, and to guarantee a portion of the expense. The club in turn required no special privileges in the way of representation in the volume, merely requesting all members to submit poems for judgment on merit alone, and also soliciting manuscripts from all resident writers of verse regardless of membership.

The committee appointed by the club, with authority to collect available material and cull out the best of it, consisted of the president, Colin Palmerston of Monrovia, and two past presidents, Snow Longley Houish and Dorothy Haddox, both well-known poets and members of the English departments of two of the city high schools, the group as a whole representing exceptional suitability for its task.

Of the committee of three chosen to select the final material and edit the volume, one represented the club—Mrs. Housh. The second, Leslie Nelson Jennings, represented the publisher, Mr. Jennings having been recently summoned to the Primavera Press from New York, where his activity, both as a poet and an editor, has connected him with prominent book-publishing firms, and for a number of years with the staff of Current Opinion. The third, chosen by the other two, was Prof. Roy Towner Thompson of the faculty of the University of Southern California, a former editor of the Lyric West.

FORTY-SEVEN IN VOLUME

The result of this committee's work is the 112-page volume which is to appear this month, representing forty-seven poets, from as far south as San Diego, and from many different points in Riverside, Orange and Los Angeles counties, many of whose contributed poems have appeared previously in high-class eastern periodicals. So superior, indeed, is the texture of the work that Mr. Jennings declares it is a revelation to him of the literary quality of the Southwest.

"Frankly, I at first considered the project most impractical," admits Mr. Jennings. "I have worked so much in the East, where literary cliques with their jealous slashings back and forth wreck most attempas at co-operation, that I feared only friction and disaffection on the part of persons whose work failed to reach the final rigid standard to which the editors had committed themselves. But I want to go on record as saying the spirit animating the Verse-Writers' Club is one of the finest things I have ever contacted. Although almost half the club members fell short of inclusion in the book, they still backed up every decision of the editors, encouraging them to stand as a unit for values, irrespective of individual interests.

"Moreover, the poetry itself, even much which we could not use in so small a collection as this, has roused me to the greatest enthusiasm. In the East, the work of poets shows a sophistication bordering on cynicism, which gives an effect of jadedness. Here, it is characterized by a sophstication which is rather an awareness, fresh and vital in feeling."

Such discriminating praise is most gratifying to residents of the "cow counties," the more so when it becomes known that Leslie Nelson Jennings was a hero-worshiping San Franciscan before he became a New Yorker, and, in fact, went from this State in quest of his literary fortunes equipped with letters of introduction from his close friend and adviser, the truly distinguished poet, George Sterling.

This Anthology of Southern California Verse is undoubtedly the most significant all-poetry collection offered on this Coast since the publication, in 1925, of "Continent's End, an Anthology of Contemporary California Poets," which was edited by George Sterling, Genevieve Taggard and James Rorty, all of San Francisco, financed by a wealthy patron of the Book Club of California, Albert M. Bender, and finely printed by the famous John Henry Nash, at a cost of $15 a copy. That hand-tooled volume, however, was really an anthology of the north, as among its nearly 100 contributors appeared only three or four from below the Tehachapi. Since this new book forms a fair complement to that earlier one, perhaps we may one day look for a true all-California anthology under the able editorship of Mr. Jennings, now qualified by residence in both north and south to make a just survey of the State's current poetic output.

All the work on the present volume is local. The format—buff India paper, bound in terra cotta, and lettered in brown, with a packet of light sage green—was designed by a typographical expert with the firm of Young & McAllister, who have done the printing. The first edition numbers only 400, but as this is already mostly spoken for, an early second printing is confidently expected by Mr. Jennings and his business associate of the Primavera Press, Jake Zeitlin, who is also a poet. The sum underwritten by the Verse Writers on a sporting chance, is already canceled, so that congratulations are in order all around.

ROAD SHOW'S RETURN SEEN

Projected Comedy of George M. Cohan Visioned as Forerunner of Other Stage Plays

BY WILLIAM HAMILTON CLINE

Those of us whose memories extend back to those good old days when "the road" was our chief source and supply of dramatic pabulum may lay precious unction to their souls. For there are signs in the skies that that same "road" is again to function.

True, the signs are few and feeble, but that there are portents at all is most significant, after this so long time of dearth, this extended period of famine, during which the show business—speaking now of the legitimate in its once perambulating glory—has been very much—not.

For none other than that high priest of ocmedy, George M. Cohan, for the second time in as many years has packed his make-up box, his Taylor trunk and his personal wardrobe, commanded his company to do likewise, and all and sundry they have left the bright lights o' Broadway for a tour of "the sticks." The play they are presenting is "The Tavern," which has been doing a fine business (as do most hostelries there,) but which, he feels, may well cater to a new clientele elsewhere, and blaze a way for others to follow in its train. As a matter of fact, he will not venture west of Omaha, the twin cities and Sioux City, leaving the coast to our own muttons and such venturesome souls as Brock Pemberton, but during this tour he will invade the solid South, though only in a series of one-night stands in such places as Louisville, Nashville and Knoxville.

SECOND TRIP

The trip, it may be pertinent to remark, is a sequel to one Mr. Cohan made last season of more limited extent, in "Gambling," another opus from his prolific pen. In 1929 he cleaned up $125,000 out of town with this significantly named comedy, which wasn't so bad, even if he didn't go beyond St. Louis—which has been the ultimate west for this entrepreneur-playwright - actor - producer since 1910, when the Four Cohans, of blessed memory, toured the land in "The Yankee Prince."

"The Tavern," by the way, has been road-showed before in 1921, by three different troupes, in none of which Cohan appeared, as he confined himself to a Boston-to-Philadelphia terrain, but it never played stock or the films. In the places now to be visited much missionary work will be done in advance, including the direct soliciting of likely prospects by mail, the making of luncheon club and other like talks by Mr. Cohan, advocating a revival of the road, and so on. Having once indited a song, "You Can't Do Business Without a Band," he is evidently living up to his credo, for all such aids to publicity are depeded upon for lavish attention—a leaf out of the book of studio exploitation that might be commended to other (if any) venturesome souls who seek to tred along the same primrose pathway.

For, granted that Cohen again makes a financial success of this foray into the hinterlands—and who doubts that he does?—certainly it should and doubtless will encourage other New York producers to emulate him. The one-time road has been starved so long for good drama that a new generation has actually grown up, to whom a wise manager might well appeal on the sheer ground of novelty by presenting to it eastern casts in plays that are, outside the big cities there, only traditions. Thousands upon thousands, even in moderate-sized metropolitan centers, have never seen such and the field is fallow and ripe for the reaper—not to mix metaphors, as it were. Who'll be the next one to garner a golden harvest from it?

PROMINENCE STRESSED

Out on this coast we have been fortunate in that Hollywood has drawn to us the cream of the dramatic profession and they have not confined themselves and their art entirely to the silver screen, either. Los Angeles especially has become a drama-producing center largely on its own; names that light the other Broadway gleam in neons here; the northern cities share in our activities and the road means less out here by far than it connotes to the Middle West and South. Still, a pioneering Cohan or so may yet journey across the mountain barrier, to our great joy and advantage, and discover for himself that "thar's gold in them thar hills" of ours, all yet unmined.

And how welcome a few real Gotham shows might be, if brought out here in the Cohan manner, as originally presented, with production, personnel and ensemble all intact.

REQUISITES FOR PICTURE ROLES GIVEN

Phillips Holmes Lists Culture, Education and Refinement

Human voices reflect culture, education and refinement, or lack of them in an individual, thus making these prerequisites for a career in the talkies, according to Phillips Holmes, youthful film leading man who is now in New York, where he is essaying the featured lead opposite Nancy Carroll in Paramount's "Stolen Heaven."

Holmes asserts that the actor in the talkies, as in the silent films, cannot hold himself to one type role but must be able to portray characters of varying background and caste. While a cultured actor may portray a roughneck, it is hardly possible for an uncouth player to conduct himself with the proper manners and poise in a drawing room, he says.

Roles essayed by Holmes recently in his last few pictures bear out this contention, the actor says. In "The Devil's Holiday" he was a wealthy wheat grower's son; in "Her Man," a roughneck sailor; in "Barber John's Boy," the progeny of a professional haircutter; in "The Criminal Code," a youthful clerk charged with murder. Each character requires another approach, a different idiom.

Paramount has selected Holmes to essay the male lead in "Confessions of a Debutante." He will portray this role in the west coast studios of Famous Players immediately following the completion of "Stolen Heaven" in New York.

EASTERN STAR

A stated meeting of Acacia Chapter, No. 21, Order of the Eastern Star, conducted on the evening of the 6th inst., was brought to a climax when officers for the fifty-fifth year of the chapter's existence were installed.

The installing officers were Elisabeth M. Vaughan and Carl H. Fraser, Worthy Matron and Patron for 1930, assisted by Emma P. Anderson, Junior Past Matron, Jennie L. Jackson, Chaplain, and Reglida M. Fraser, Marshal. The installing musicians were Charles W. and Doris A. Hall, and the master of ceremonies was Earl A. Hoff.

The officers installed to serve for the ensuing year were Elizabeth M. Trebilcock, Worthy Matron; Clarence E. Anderson, Worthy Patron; Olive C. Hall, Associate Matron; Frank H. Jones, Associate Patron; Besse T. Wilmot, Secretary; Ardella F. Hall, Treasurer; Bernice H. Bidwell, Conductress; Bessie A. Detrick, Associate Conductress; Grace L. Spoor, Chaplain; Luella Z. Moore, Marshal; Dorothy Baker, Organist; Constance E. Vaughan, Adah; Mildred Harmany, Ruth; Clara Eva Finley, Esther; Catherine Bean, Martha; Maude R. Newell, Electa; Claudia Robinson, Warder, and Charles Hall, Sentinel. Rose Hopkins was appointed Flag Bearer. Jessie R. Hoff, chairman of flowers, and Charles W. Hall, in charge of lights for 1931.

Screen's Trickery Improved Upon

New Film Processes Involved

Three Ruth Chattertons, two whom talk to each other, hug each other and in general defy audiences to solve the problem of their screen intimacy, are soon to be seen in "The Right to Love." Former trick processes of the industry are said to be gone one better by the technicians for this picture.

DUAL ROLE MADE INTRICATE

Technicians Take Laurels for Unheard-of Effects in Interplay of Dialogue and Action

BY JACOB COOPER

The nimble minds on the Paramount lot went the industry one better in the matter of trick processes. They succeeded in making three Ruth Chatterton—two of whom talked to each other, hugged each other and acted at general cross-purposes. All of this takes place in "The Right to Love," which is due for release the 25th inst.

The roles played by Miss Chatterton are those of a young girl who later in the picture is the mother of an 18-year-old daughter—and the daughter is also Miss Chatterton.

It is in this mother and daughter situation that the double exposure process comes into play. Their simultaneous appearance on the screen, and their interplay of dialogue and action leave one breathless at consideration of the technical intricacies, even when one is more or less aware as to how it is done.

METHOD EXPLAINED

The process, perfected by Paramount technicians, has been in use for quite some time, but never to such a degree as in "The Right to Love." Roughly, any active background can be double-exposed on a film by means of this method. It is merely a matter of making a transparent duplicate of the background scene and running it coincident with the negative on which films the foreground action.

The color of the emulsion used on the "transparency" is contracted by a complementary color used as a backdrop. This allows the foreground action to penetrate the transparency and record on the negative, while the emulsion blocks the light rays emanating from the colored backdrop. This blocking forces the image on the transparency onto the negative in all those parts which are not taken up by the foreground scene.

A simple example of this kind is used in this same picture in a scene where the daughter is spooning in her boy friend's auto, sur-

WELL, WELL, IF 'TISN'T NORMA! WELL, 'TISN'T, BUT LIKENESS SELLS PLAY HIT FOR $110,000

Recognize the lady on the left in the picture on the right?

When this photograph was published in New York recently a lot of startled movie fans rubbed their eyes and thought they were looking at Miss Norma Talmadge.

It seems they weren't. The lady is Miss Muriel Kirkland, late star of "Strictly Dishonorable," now in the lead of the Zoe Akins play, "The Greeks Had a Word For It."

But, look sharp. For Miss Talmadge is shortly to be photographed in that self-same pose when she plays the identical part in the Pacific Coast production of the play.

The extraordinary likeness between the two young women is supposed to be one of the reasons why Joseph Schenck (husband of Miss Talmadge) was induced to part with the neat, round sum of $110,000 for the Coast and motion-picture rights to the play.

Schenck thought if Miss Kirkland could be a hit in it—Miss Talmadge could be equally so.

P. S.—Miss Akins, author of the play, one of the season's outstanding hits, and William H. Harris, its producer, will split the $110,000.

SCIENCE CONQUERS SOUND

Pictorial and Audible Realism Achieved Through Perfection of Talking-Picture Processes

BY CHARLES C. COHAN

Motion-picture experts, acoustic scientists and sound-transmission technicians have lately been stepping from their cubicles of scientific research with smiles on their faces. Corrugations deeply etched on foreheads by intense study of sound waves, voice recordings, vocal reproductions via the screen and a myriad other intricacies connected with the development of sound motion pictures, are being smoothed away.

Science has been triumphing over Old Man Sound. The vagaries of wave lengths have been brought within bounds. There has been more progress made in the last few months toward the perfecting of sound motion pictures than in the preceding two years. And the ensuing year is expected to see these good results offered for public approval to an extent never before attained since the motion pictures went talkie.

This is the news from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and other authoritative informants at Hollywood. It means not only a wide forward step in the art of motion-picture presentation, but has an enormous economic significance pertaining to the business side of the industry.

REALISM VS. MECHANISM

The nub of the scientific endeavors that have been going on so intensively the last year and just now have been announced, is to make the sound motion pictures so realistic that the theater patron will forget that the presentation is mechanical and see and hear it just as a real, living enactment is viewed and auricularly enjoyed.

To bring about this desired consummation, the motion-picture producers have been co-operating as never before on technical inquiries and developments. The problem has been attacked from various angles.

One of the most important developments now achieved is the far larger freedom of action for the screen artists and directors during the filming of a production. The most hampering phase of sound motion pictures at the start and for quite a time thereafter was the persistence with which outside and unwanted noises impinged themselves on the sound tracks. It was necessary for the artists to stand in certain positions with relation to the cameras. They could not get too far away nor too close. The cameras themselves could not be too near the sound-recording apparatus, for the hum of the cameras otherwise made itself unpleasantly noticeable in the reproduction.

NOTABLE IMPROVEMENTS

Some of the notable improvements that have been evolved by the technicians are:

Sound recordings that can be made anywhere instead of solely in specially prepared studios; even in airplanes. A specially devised directional or sound-catching horn can pick up the cries, the words or the song of a single man in a crowd and make possible a perfect recording. The hum of electric arcs and the like has been filtered out of generators.

The background tones that intruded themselves on to film sound tracks and have been unavoidably reproduced as scratching, grinding noises can be eliminated. In fact, one of the pretentious films now under production is designed to illustrate this fact for the first time in the most conclusive way.

For instance, it will mean that in periods during a film presentation when a perfect stillness is sup-

Actress's Looks Sell Play Rights

"The Greeks Had a Word for It" Purchased

The striking likeness of Muriel Kirkland, left, to Norma Talmadge, is said to have decided Joseph Schenck to pay $110,000 for the current New York success rights to "The Greeks Had a Word for It." Miss Kirkland is cast in the leading feminine role in the stage play.

GERMANY BANS "ALL QUIET"

Laemmle Withdraws Picture, Protesting That Aim Was to Portray Real Soul of Fatherland

Despite the favorable impression toward Germany and the Germans which Universal's "All Quiet on the Western Front" has created in America and other countries, Germany itself has turned thumbs down on the film.

Violent protests against the film's showing were entered by Adolph Hitler's Fascist lieutenants and riots marked several of the performances. Last Thursday, the German censorship board made the matter final by barring the picture altogether.

Claims were made by witnesses appearing before the censorship board that this film portrays the German soldier as a villain and a criminal and that he was pictured as being "brutal and cruel."

On the other hand, Carl Laemmle, producer of "All Quiet on the Western Front," made the picture with the idea in mind of creating good will and better understanding of the country in which he was born. Upon learning of the violent demonstrations, and before the film was officially censored, Mr. Lammle issued the following statement:

"The real heart and soul of Germany has never been shown to the world in all its fineness and honor as it is shown in this picture. The civilized world, outside of Germany, has seen it and accepted it as anything but anti-German. If you, the German people, say it is not all I claim for it, I shall withdraw it from exhibition in Germany.

"I yield to no one in my love of the Fatherland. The fact that I came to America as a boy and built my future in America has never for a moment caused any cessation of my love for the land of my birth. Therefore, when I read Remarque's book and saw the wonderful feeling of understanding and kindliness toward Germany which it aroused in the hearts of Americans and in the hearts of other nations outside of Germany, I determined to extend the good influence of his book by making a motion picture of it."

Two Backwoodsmen Hew Way to Front This Week

One Real and One Fictitious Character Appear on Screen Horizon

Richard Cromwell and Joan Peers, left, in "Tol'able David," which opened at R.-K.-O. Theater Thursday, and Walter Huston in the title role of "Lincoln," now at United Artists, appearing with Una Merkel who plays Ann Rutledge.

WHY DO THEY FAIL IN FILMS?

Much Imported Talent From Europe Screen Flops

Many Directors and Writers Come, Look and Return

Others Who Stayed Exert Influence on Pictures

BY PHILIP K. SCHEUER

During its comparatively brief existence, Hollywood, the film capital of the world, has played host to more foreign dramatists, literateurs and assorted genius than any city in America. Some leave and some stay; some succeed and some fail. Those who leave often do so as bitter critics, reviling the name of Hollywood wherever they go. And whose is the fault—theirs or Hollywood's?

Among those remaining are directors and writers who profoundly influence the American motion picture. Ernst Lubitsch is the outstanding example of a German who (it sounds almost patronizing to say it) "made good." So did his erstwhile scenarist and ring opponent, Hans Kraly. F. W. Murnau, director of "Sunrise" and "The Last Laugh," failed—as Hollywood measures success. But he is still here, and may prove himself, financially speaking, yet. Paul Leni succeeded and died close to the peak of accomplishment. Erich Pommer, UFA producer, came over to Paramount—and went back to Germany. Ludwig Berger, fairly successful in Hollywood, never duplicated his "The Waltz Dream" and has returned, at least temporarily, to the Fatherland. Berthold Viertel, after making four American pictures in Hollywood, has gone over to foreign versions. Fox and Alexander Korda have just parted company.

SOME OTHERS DEPART

Max Reinhardt, after looking over the local field, decided to stick to Berlin and environs. Ernest Vajda, the Hungarian author of "Fata Morgana," stayed to write many a script. Maurice Maeterlinck, a few years ago, came to Hollywood, snorted and left. And Maurice Tourneur, who made artistic silent movies in the early days, long since has returned to France.

Victor Seastrom, after doing very well for himself in Hollywood, departed soon after the screen began to talk, and is directing again in Europe. Paul Stein, who directed "Sin Takes a Holiday," is established here at Pathe. Lothar Mandes is with Paramount, Jacques Feyder with M.-G.-M. to make French versions. Frederick Zelnik has been doing foreign prints for United Artists.

Dimitri Buchowetzki crossed the sea for Paramount, but soon recrossed it. He is making a French film for Robert Kane in Paris. V. Tourjansky, forced to make a "western" after arriving, naturally failed. Benjamin Christensen's status is uncertain, as is Marcel Silver's. Mauritz Stiller, after a short sojourn in Hollywood, went back to Sweden, where they do say he died of a broken heart. Less affected was Author Karl Vollmoeller of "The Miracle," who is back writing in Berlin after teaching Anna May Wong to be a good actress in Vienna.

Sergei M. Eisenstein, champion of the Russian technique, is off to Mexico to make a picture after investigating the peewee-golf situation locally. Posthaste after him to Europe a year ago went Douglas Fairbanks, Jesse L. Lasky, et al., but their ardor seems to have cooled. Eisenstein may return.

CURTIZ GIVES VIEWS

Michael Curtiz is a Hungarian who has been quietly directing for the Warner Brothers these several years now. His latest picture, "A Soldier's Plaything," is showing at their downtown theater this week. Curtiz holds no brief for his departed confreres; his views are rather more sanguine than sanguinary.

"They come," he says, referring to the European parade, "with a traditional mental attitude that is against them from the start. They leave—not because of struggle with the language, or climate, or contracts, but because they are not satisfied with the possibilities that Hollywood offers them for self-expression.

"Is that Hollywood's fault?

"I can't see it.

"Art is universal; it has no boundaries. There is enough freedom, enough leeway allowed here for the artist who will to express himself and still be in conformity with American methods. The foreigners who have remained to succeed are proof of it.

"Those who leave, you may rest assured, are seldom really great artists. They have not learned a universal language of expression. Their followers are isolated groups; do not imagine that in their own countries they are understood any more than here. They are visionaries who deal in abstractions; either the world must change or they, and they will not.

"All European films are not like those that are shown over here. You see the six; you do not see the 600 others! Before I came to America, I was just as eager to look at an American masterpiece as one made over there. Europe has tradition, but America has youth and optimism. It will be time enough for the tradition—later."

LOCAL EX-BROADWAYITE SCORES IN SCREEN DEBUT

It can be done! Local boys do make good, evidently.

California's enterprising youth boasts one Robert Douglas Montgomery, born to sunshine and success. He had a career, it seems, before he had an education: for while he was still in school he was already trotting about our local artistic and professional stages preparing for a future.

Seven years ago before he was quite 16 years of age, he went to New York, to be known there on the best of programs as Douglas Montgomery. Now he is back in town with seven years of his future behind him as experience, and he has still another name and a new occupation.

Montgomery has a film contract; his first picture is now showing at the Criterion. And he is no longer Douglas Montgomery, but Kent Douglas. This changing of names, he finds, is just one of the devious devices of the motion-picture industry.

Signing a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and facing a camera were both sudden surprises in Kent Douglas's summer vacation. Coming out to visit his family in the country near here, he found himself called by the studio and requested to join the ranks of the screen's ex-Broadwayites. Another experience, he thought; and one too profitable to toss aside. Kent Douglas then went down on the dotted line and up on the cast of "Paid," in which Joan Crawford is starring.

AFRAID OF CAMERA

"I thought acting in pictures would be simple," stated this newest screen juvenile, still surprised. "After being on the stage so long, playing to hard and critical audiences, I imagined the camera would be a cinch. I have never faced anything so terrifying. I am still afraid of it—the lights, electricians, technicians all standing around. I didn't seem to know where to go or what to do with my hands and feet. My mistakes must have been terribly annoying to the others, but they were wonderful to me. I haven't seen the picture yet, but I don't suppose I'm much good in it: maybe you aren't expected to be in your first. I don't want to leave the stage, but should I go back I would like to know that what I did in talkies hadn't been a failure."

TASTE RUNS ARTISTIC

Out of his years at the Pasadena Community Playhouse where he was assistant director to Gilmor Brown as well as actor, and the seasons he has had on Broadway, Douglas has carved a niche for himself.

In nearly every play in which he appeared, there was at least one fellow-member of the cast who is now in Hollywood, Douglas has estimated. From "Hell-Bent for Heaven," there is Sarah Padden; from "The Copperhead," Lionel Barrymore; from "Desire Under the Elms," Frank McGlynn; "Silence," Bert Lytell; "God Loves Us" was directed by Gutherie McClintic and starred J. C. Nugent; "Crime" gave up Kay Johnson, Kay Francis, Sylvia Sydney, Chester Morris; James Cagney was in the cast of "Woman Go On Forever," with Mary Boland, and Miriam Hopkins and Douglas were together in "Garden of Eden." There was also a run in "Caprice," and a season in "Volpone," in which he followed Alfred Lunt. So it really doesn't look as though Kent Douglas would have much to fear from Hollywood.

TITLES COVER UP MANY THINGS IN STAGE PLAYS

BY PERCY HAMMOND

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (Exclusive) In the second and most dramatic act of William Bolitho's posthumous play, "Overture," we see the tragic flotsam of a minor revolution in provincial Germany. The frock-coated governors of Herfeld an industrial city, have decreed that the toilers shall work more hours and for less salary in order to restore the community and the republic to its prewar prosperity, whereupon the laborers rebelled.

Led by a swarthy, sentimental and socialistic young reformer, they capture the City Hall and with the red ribbons of secession upon their sleeves they take up the insolvable problems of government. "Not a penny off the pay, not a minute on the day," they shout, as they try to change the cruel, unjust and unalterable laws of civilization. Their triumph is cheap and empty and it ends pathetically in quarrels and the firing squad. A frigid, bloodthirsty and fanatic Communist (Pat O'Brien) double-crosses his associates in the movement and slinks wisely and intrepidly away as the crisis comes. The pink hero embraces the scarlet heroine with theatrical fervor while waiting for the death knell, and Levy, a gallant and conscientious Jewish journalist, goes into a dark corner and quietly shoots himself through the heart. All of it is interesting, intelligent and theatrical, founded on a serious idea and promoted by its sponsors with skill. Colin Clive, who is completely British, plays a tender Hun with what may be an Oxford accent, and the others in the case were well disposed and well directed.

Red Feathers: Miss Lynn Fontanne as Queen Elizabeth—the cowboy quartet in "Girl Crazy" singing "I'm Bidin' My Time"—Miss Anna May Wong's subtle suicide in "On the Spot"—Miss Libby Holman's harrowing torch songs in "Three's A Crowd"—the maniacal buffoonery of Jimmy Durante in "The New Yorkers" and Miss Hope Williams's azure obliquities in the same entertainment—George Gershwin's "I Got Rhythm" as sung by a honk-a-tonk soubrette in "Girl Crazy"—the German general of Carlos Zizold in "Overture"—William A. Drake's clairvoyant translation of "Grand Hotel."

Nomenclature: This column is beset by inquiries from mystified drama lovers who request it to tell them what Miss Zoe Akins meant when she christened her popular Broadway entertainment, "The Greeks Had a Word for It." The Greek had a word for what? they ask, and what is the word?

Since the play is intensely Manhattan, illustrating the comic devices of three New York harpies as they feed full at the urban troughs, there is a reasonable curiosity about the genesis of the title. I have asked many Times Square Athenians to interpret it, but all of them, from Mr. Winchell of the Mirror to Mr. Nathan of Vanity Fair, refer me to Miss Akins, who does not speak to me.

There are other plays in the tenderloin sector that have cryptic nicknames. "The Vinegar Tree," for instance, means nothing to anyone excepting its author, and Mr. Bolitho left us in the dark when he baptized his fine play "Overture," as Mr. Ziegfeld did in titling his newest musical romance "Smiles."

SUMATRA JUNGLE FILM DEPICTS ETERNAL STRUGGLE

BY ELENA BOLAND

Man and ape—against their common foe, the tiger! That is the story Ernest B. Schoedsack brings back from the jungles of Sumatra.

Last July saw Schoedsack back in civilization. He had been gone more than a year. For eight months he had been swallowed by the interior of an almost unexplored country. For eight months his only companions had been his wife, a cameraman and two natives. They built themselves a hut 3000 feet in the mountains. At their feet the equator cut the earth in two. Theirs was a world of apes, tigers and tropic treachery.

And Schoedsack got a story! No author wrote it; no man invented it. But nature tells it again and again in the wild outposts of the globe where man and beast must fight together for existence.

"Rango" is the name of the picture upon which Schoedsack has only now put the finishing touches. It is also the name of his central character, the ape. The film is silent, but synchronized with sound and music.

"Rango" is Schoedsack's first independent production for Paramount. With Merian Cooper he directed and produced "Chang," "Grass," and "Four Feathers." These were also adventures into the animal kingdom, the only one in which Schoedsack feels at home. And they, too, were Paramount releases.

WHERE TO NEXT?

Now Schoedsack is alone, and wondering where next he can find a far place dramatic enough to photograph. Distance itself does not assure drama, he declares.

"People are constantly saying to me, 'Why don't you go here? Why don't you go there?' When there is usually nothing but barren country and dull natives. I have to find a place with a story.

"Already I had made one picture about elephants; I didn't want to make another. And there is no larger creature than the elephant, nothing but more elephants. I decided on direct contrast. I chose the monkey. Sumatra is the home of the Rango; the highest and most intelligent of the ape family. It is also tiger country. It would have a story. So I went."

ONE OF STRANGEST CASTS

One of the strangest casts in film history Schoedsack assembled for his elemental conflict. Two Rangos are the featured players; a father and a baby. There is also an old man and a boy. Both man and beast Schoedsack found in the jungle.

"I had heard about the old man," explained the adventurous director. "He was a famous tiger killer in the country. He was 72, and still, for days at a time, he would disappear to return with his kill. He lived in the interior, up in the mountains, a village of three or four huts. I wanted to see him so I made the trip, and there I stayed.

"He was a canny old chap, and traveled. He had been across the island, it's sixty miles, and had seen a couple of Tom Mix movies. I had no trouble either with him or the boy. They weren't afraid of the camera and I didn't try to make them act. They just did what they would do naturally; that's the way you get a real story.

"And with the apes it was the same. They weren't trained and they weren't taught. What do you get from trained animals? Nothing! You only have then what man has accomplished; you know nothing at all of the beasts themselves."

Sumatra, with its heart still unexplored by man, lies behind Schoedsack. It gave him months of hardships and rain. It gave him only minutes of sunshine in which to "shoot" a scene that couldn't be looked at until the weeks had passed and the boat had brought them back into the world of men. But despite it all, Schoedsack is more than ever positive that his only pictures will be made outside studios, where time and freedom are entirely his—and his animal actors can do no more than growl or bite, or at worst, smash the camera.

Voice Student Gets New Role

Phyllis Barrington, a voice pupil of Harold Hurlbut, has been selected for the leading role in "Gold Diggers of Hollywood," which is being produced at the Tec-Art Studios. Miss Barrington made her initial appearance in pictures only recently, having the lead with William Farnum in the Tec-Art production of "Ten Nights."

Nita Mortan, another Hurlbut pupil, was recently chosen for the leading role in a second picture to be filmed at the Hal Roach Studios.

"PETER PAN" REVIVED HERE

Barrie Fantasy Given in English Manner

Many Old-Time Principals to Attend Opening

Marion Clayton Will Play Title Role

Twenty-six years have passed since "the boy who wouldn't grow up"—otherwise known as Peter Pan—first peeped across the footlights from the shores of Never-Never Land and flung the strange inquiry, "Do you believe in fairies?" at a credulous but willing audience.

That was at the Duke of York's Theater, in London, and the records say it happened on December 27, 1904, setting a vogue for an annual recurrence of Peter's peeping proclivities at that season when dramatic humans approach nearest to the philosophy of the lovable waif urchin and actually, or almost, believe in a Santa Claus.

"Peter Pan," as a footlights spectacle and a delightful visitation of Sir James Barrie's most fluent fancy, returns to Los Angeles tomorrow night for the first time since Maude Adams clinched her hold on public favor by presenting an ideal embodiment of the unquenchable spirit of youth and its riotous imagination which has made this nursery tale of the stage beloved of two generations of playgoers. It will be revived by the Civic Repertory forces at the Music Box for a three-week special holiday engagement.

Maude Adams made her local bow at the Mason Opera House in the role in 1907, on her first tour. Three of her troupe now reside here. They are Gustav von Seyffertitz, who succeeded to the direction of the play after the demise of Joseph Francoeur, its original stage director in America; Walter Robinson, the original American John Napoleon Darling of the play, and his sister Daisy, who succeeded Violet Rand in 1907 in the role of Tootles. They, in common with a dozen principals and directors of other American as well as British representations of the play, are to be guests of honor of the Civic Repertory Theater management tomorrow night.

CISSIE LOFTUS PRESENT

Foremost among these is Cissie Loftus, inimitable mime of international fame, who is at present in Hollywood for her talkie debut. Miss Loftus succeeded Nina Boucicault, original Peter, when the play started on its long journey of annual holiday recrudescence.

Miss Adams herself has been wired a request to time her return here for conference with John Colton, who is preparing a play for her return to the stage, to make her presence on the opening night possible. She arrived from England on the Adriatic the 1st inst. Her last was here in the spring, practically incognito. She saw Colton and a few friends—but no reporters. Maude, of course, doesn't need publicity.

The other old-time "Peter Pan" principals invited include Lionel Belmore, who directed the Charles Hopkins production at the Belasco Theater, Washington, D. C., in 1911 and Mary Miles Minter (then known as Juliet Shelby,) Lawrence Wheatcroft and Henrietta Goodwin, all members of the Belmore organization. Betty Bronson, who premiered the role, and Reggie Sheffield, who has just closed an engagement with "The Infinite Shoeblack" at the Civic Repertory Theater and who played Michael in the London revival of 1912.

Of these, to make the roster of the local "Peter Pan" colony complete, or nearly so, are to be added four members of the Civic Repertory organization concerned in the local revival. First of these is Donald Stuart, directing the production, who was associated with the annual Christmas revivals of the play in London for twenty-three years as actor and codirector and who staged the Marilyn Miller adaptation in New York. He has played every masculine role in the piece, and at its revival last Christmas was seen as Slightly. Then there is George Kirby, inventor of the flying effects introduced at the world premiere of the play and in use consistently since then, who is doing his stuff for the impending production. Maya Riviere, dance director and re-creating her famous Ostrich of the Eva Le Gallienne "Peter" production in New York, and Mickey McBan, in the role of John, who played Slightly with Betty Bronson in the picturization of the play, are others.

ORIGINAL BARRIE VERSION

Director Stuart doesn't refute rumors of a face-lifting operation which Peter is supposed to have undergone in anticipation of his comeback after a quarter of a century. Biologically, the process of rejuvenation won't be necessary, as one glimpse at youthful Marion Clayton, latest of a distinguished line of titular forbears, will demonstrate. But old-timers, who saw Peter as Maude showed him, will discover a remarkable congenital change. They are going to see Peter as Sir James conceived him—in seven scenes, and not a tune missing, rather than Miss Adams's mightily garbled version, according to Stuart.

So Stuart, being a stickler, and failing to extract from the New York office the unabridged playing version, sat down and dictated from memory the entire latter half of the play, replacing excisions, rightening transpositions, killing out interpolations, restoring dialogue the star took from Wendy's role and giving the emasculated manuscript a general and rigorous up-and-down revision. Furthermore, he hummed to the director for arrangement and insertion into the score such tunes as fell by the wayside when the adaptation that American audiences know as "Peter Pan" was made.

"I found," said Stuart, "that in America 'Peter Pan' is inseparably linked with the name of Maude Adams. In England, the play is loved for itself and is not significant of any particular star. I am convinced that the Civic Repertory production of Sir James's actual manuscript will for the first time present the actual Peter to the American public and will result in a wider and deeper appreciation of this everlasting epic of youth and happiness."

SOLE PUPIL IN HIGH SCHOOL

Rochelle Hudson Signs Contract Then Put to Work on Lessons

Rochelle Hudson's first act after signing a term contract with Radio Pictures was to enroll in high school, senior year!

The 17-year-old actress is the only student in her class and school. For the high school is located at the Radio Pictures' Studio, where the Los Angeles Board of Education provides a tutor for all minor players.

Miss Hudson recently came to Hollywood from Oklahoma where the State laws prevent minors from appearing on the stage. She had not been in the film city long before her beauty and ability attracted the attention of William LeBaron, vice-president in charge of Radio Pictures' production, who placed her under contract.

FOUR NAMES CHOSEN FOR 'DEVIL' PLAY

Several Changes Made in Title of Comedy to Open at Belasco

Southampton, one of New York's fashionable summer resorts on Long Island, was the birthplace of "Up Pops the Devil," which comes to the Belasco Theater on Christmas night under the banner of Belasco and Curran.

During the past summer the Henry Potter Stock Company of Southampton tried out several new plays, one of which was entitled "Let's Get Married," by Albert Hackett and Frances Goodrich. It was most favorably received. Reports of the play reached the ears of the ever-alert and watchful Lee Shubert. After viewing it, the impresario immediately obtained production rights, and via the well-known Asbury Park, Long Branch and Atlantic City route of preliminary pulse showings, proceeded to groom the Hackett-Goodrich opus for its New York presentation.

In the process, the offering underwent titular transitions. Title suggestions were tossed about by all and sundry. For a time the program people and the advertising men were distracted as the play changed its appellations from, "Day by Day" to "Everybody Welcome" and then to "Too Many Friends."

One evening in a private dining-room when the actors, authors and representatives of the management had gathered in a jolly conclave, a certain laggard did not arrive until an hour after his colleagues. When he entered, Mr. Hackett cried, "Up jumps the devil!" This was seized upon as a likely title and by a process of evolution finally became, "Up Pops the Devil."

It has been asserted that all the cogitation and agitation over a mere name was needless. Whatever the title, the comedy would have proved equally as amusing and scored as decisive a triumph when it was revealed at the Masque Theater, New York, and where, incidentally, it promises to remain for many weeks to come.

Raymond Hackett, who has won fame on the screen and who is a brother to the co-author of "Up Pops the Devil," will be a featured member of the Belasco Theater production. Ann Teaman will play opposite him. They portray two young "free souls," Steve, an aspiring novelist, and Anne, a dancer, who keep open house to a merry and irresponsible group of friends in the pseudo-artistic world of Greenwich Village. Other prominent characters in this assertedly human and humorous story will be in the hands of such players as Esther Howard, Johnny Arledge, Deyland Hodgson and Lex Lindsay.

A. Leslie Pearce, who directed "Caprice," "The Royal Family" and other Belasco Theater successes, is staging "Up Pops the Devil."

"Steppin' Out" Now at Follies

"Steppin' Out," opening last night at the Follies, promises to eclipse in point of scenic and costume novelty all former offerings. The modern trend in everything has been a great help in accomplishing this. Every item of laughing interest and every song and dance feature was evolved accordingly.

Then, too, the cast is a new one. Eddie Collins and George Clark are the two comedians upon whose shoulders will rest the major portion of the fun-making. Mary Sunde, Verne and Leona White share the featured soubrette honors and offer a trio of specialties.

"LURE" FILM STARTED

Production has started at Radio Pictures' studio on "A Lady for Hire," Wallace Smith's adaptation of the Guy Bolton-Robert Milton original, "Children of the Streets." Bertram Millhauser has assembled a cast headed by Betty Compson and H. B. Warner. George Archainbaud directs.

'Spring Song' to Be Given in Pasadena

"Spring Song" by Bella Spewack takes its place on the imposing list of plays which have had their initial production at the Pasadena Community Playhouse.

Among the plays which have had their premier performance at the Playhouse are "Dancing Days" and "Spindrift" by Martin Flavin; "Skidding," by Ourmie Ruberoe; "The Man Saul," which is running now on Broadway, New York, under the title of "This One Man," with Paul Muni in the leading role; "Devil and the Cheese," "Lazarus Laughed" the first translation of "The Main Thing," later produced by the Theater Guild; "Armoured Train," by Ivanoff, and "Heritage," by Mrs. Ludwig Lewissohn.

The production of original plays and the building up of original authors is one of the long-standing policies of the Playhouse and of Gilmor Brown, the producing director. "Spring Song" was selected for production through the fact that it deals with a universal problem, and among other things, because of the sincerity of its treatment of a section of humanity.

Africa Scenes to be Shown in New Film

Motion-picture studios are going in for accuracy to an extent never before reached in the industry!

Universal has employed a technical adviser for its feature comedy, "The Cohens and Kellys in Africa," to supervise costumes, settings and customs to conform with authentic historical data. Peter Shaw, a native of Yorkshire, Eng., who spent two years on the "Dark Continent" with a British botanical expedition, is transplanting Africa, at least a part of it, to Universal City.

On the back ranch of the studio lot a wooded area has been transformed into a jungle with a native village of some twenty straw-thatched huts in the center. The village will accommodate 160 natives when completed. This village has been patterned from a photograph taken by Shaw and was constructed in detail to conform authentically with the original.

Shaw has added a touch of realism to the setting by teaching several of the "natives" words and short sentences in a tribal language used in that particular section of Africa.

Shaw came to Hollywood in March and played the role of an Englishman in a production at the Vine Street Theater. He has been traveling about the world for the last ten years, having left Oxford the same number of years ago for a more practical education.

New Vehicle Finds Favor With Actress

"The right to love is every woman's birthright," is the opportune opinion of Ruth Chatterton, who finds the topic of her current starring Paramount production, "The Right to Love," an absorbing subject.

"Women who push love into the background until they have succeeded in careers defeat their original purpose," asserts Miss Chatterton. "The greatest work of writers, musicians, actresses and artists through the ages has been during the course of happy love."

The story of Miss Chatterton's present vehicle is the dramatic conflict between love and duty, against the moving background of middle-western farms and the exotic Orient.

"NO SMOKING" SIGN BANNED

Property Men Ordered to Puff Up During Filming of New Bancroft Picture

"No smoking" rules, strictly enforced and observed on the sound stages at the Paramount studios in Hollywood, have temporarily been lifted for the property man on George Bancroft's new starring picture.

Instead they have been ordered to smoke as hard as they can, with Paramount furnishing the cigars. An insert for the picture, "Scandal Sheet," will show Bancroft's hand in close-up, flicking the ash from the end of a panatella.

Director John Cromwell ordered all five men in the property crew to "smoke up" in order that there might be a plentiful supply of cigar ash for the scene.

DUFFY OPTIMIST OVER SHOW SEASON OUTLOOK

No matter what the future holds, Henry Duffy does not intend to enlist in the army of alibi experts of the show business.

"Ever since I have been in the theater producers have pessimistically groaned, 'It looks like a tough year ahead of us.' If it's not the weather, it's the stock market, or the season of the year or the temperamental public that makes the show business hard," declares Duffy, who, between managing his four Pacific Coast houses, is co-starring with Dale Winter in "Michael and Mary" at El Capitan Theater. "Talkies, too, have come in for their share of the blame, not to forget the miniature golf.

"I'm not a theatrical Pollyanna, but the theater has been going into a decline ever since I can remember. Yet I notice that the minute there is a good comedy, with a lot of laughs, it packs the house.

"Several seasons ago, after our production of 'Abraham Lincoln,' we might have decided that we were done for, that the stage was not wanted, that talkies had taken the place of stage plays. Instead, we snatched it off and shoved in another play, a comedy full of laughs and slapstick. They liked it and from that reaction we heeded the public warning and gave them what they wanted . . . indeed, what they demanded."

HANDICAPS OF SOUND SOLVED

posed to reign there will be no scratching, grinding noises audible. Intense emotional scenes thereby will be made the more effective.

The study of sound waves has revealed the fact that the ordinary way of constructing stage sets won't do. In real life, different kinds of rooms, different kinds of furniture reflect, as it were, their own peculiar sound effects. In other words, the sets are to be built so that when the scene takes place in a cellar the voices and other incidental sounds will actually seem to be in a cellar. When the scene is in a ball room, the same sort of auricular realism will prevail. A person shown on a witness stand will seem to be speaking in a real courtroom, so far as the voice sound also is concerned, instead of talking into a barrel, as sometimes has seemed to be the case.

Words spoken by a horseman as he rides swiftly along can now be caught and perfectly reproduced. Realism is the keynote.

TECHNICIANS TELL

At a meeting within the last week of the technicians' branch of the academy, highly technical explanations of the improvements effected were disclosed. For the layman the interest lies in the fact that the disclosures demonstrate a new high mark in sound-picture-making science after three years of research and experimentation and its practical application.

It is because of recently perfected booms carrying the microphones that artists formerly bound down to restrictive places before the cameras can move about with utmost freedom and directors can exercise their ability with a new freedom. Aside conversations in screen productions can be reproduced now even more realistically than on the speaking stage, where realism has been somewhat destroyed by the necessarily loud tones in which these one-side talks or soliloquies have had to be uttered. The development and commercial application of the panchromatic film has been another highly important advance by reason of permitting the use of nonnoise-making methods of lighting.

Acoustic control after the tones have been captured by the sound tracks is another decidedly important phase of the progress made. Screens prepared for the right acoustic resonance have been developed.

Three years ago the Paramount issue was the recording of sounds involving soundproof camera rooms and other cumbersome limitations.

The second year found various improvements, such as in portable soundproof cameras, better recording mechanisms, and the like.

The last year's efforts may be epitomised as the refining of sound.

The motion pictures have not been allowed to grow Topsy-wise.

All these advancements have grown from the burning of much midnight oil by the picture scientists. Technicians and acoustical experts, committees of research delvers and others have been working with formulae that would intrigue Einstein.

The developments have a direct bearing on an industry involving many millions of dollars and an army of workers comprising one of the foremost industries in the nation today.

MANY INDIANS IN FILM

It is estimated that 500 Indians were assembled by Paramount for the production, "Fighting Caravans," in which the frontiersmen of "The Covered Wagon" carry on.

LAURELS TAKEN ON DUAL ROLE

rounded by scenery of the Grand Canyon type. The background is an actual scene, but the filming of the foreground needed no trip away from the studio.

However, it was apparently no simple matter to film the double-exposure of mother and daughter. The element of timing played a large part in this, as did also the matter of camera position and distance. It must have taken an Einsteinian mind plus reams of mathematical formulae to figure it out.

In one scene, for instance, the daughter (Ruth Ghatterton) asks the mother (Ruth Chatterton) to help fasten a necklace around her neck. The mother walks over, puts her hands behind the daughter's neck and ostensibly makes the trinket secure. From a technical standpoint, this part was perhaps the most perfect in the entire picture. To work this bit out a priori must have been a ticklish job, but the layman (aren't we all?) encounters an equal brainstorm in trying to reason it out a posteriori.

SOLUTION HAZARDED

Hazarding a solution, we will say that the mother part was filmed first, with the usual dressed set as background. She goes through her action and dialogue, allowing the specified time lapses for the daughter's dialogue, which is to be included later. Acting on a split-second schedule, she then walks over to a spot next to where the daughter is supposed to stand, stretches out her hands to the back of an imaginary neck and manipulates her fingers.

The timing of this action is noted in detail and is used as a guide in directing the daughter's scene. The transparent duplicate of the first scene is placed in front of the negative in the camera in such a way that when action starts at a certain frame everything will synchronize. The daughter, however, uses but a portion of the set. The balance is all made up of the color background to allow that portion of the first scene to impinge on the negative.

The scores in which mother and daughter hug and kiss need no technician's help. The simple expedient of having one or the other with her back to the camera allows the use of a double.

NEW SOUND PROCESS

Another process came into play in this particular picture. In fact, "The Right to Love" is the first picture to make use of what is known as the Western Electric New Process Noiseless Recording System. The result of two years of experimentation, this invention achieves clarity of sound, elimination of mechanical noises and allows the natural inclusion of such sounds as breathing, rustling of clothes, buzzing of insects and anything else that would be heard by the human ear while on the actual scene.

This made it possible for the use of many subtleties in sound which added much to the realism of the film as a whole. As heard in the studio projection room, it is the nearest thing to nature which has yet been attained in sound recording.

Incidentally, and technical considerations aside, "The Right to Love" is more than a pleasing picture. The acting of Ruth Chatterton and Irving Pichel, together with the direction, have made this screen version of Susan Glaspell's "Brook Evans" one of the finest dramas put on the screen in many a moon.

FILM STAR GETS ROLE AKIN TO LIFE STORY

A decided link was forged between Ann Harding's latest screen characterization and her real life history.

In "Holiday," now having a popular run at Loew's State, Miss Harding has the featured lead as a young woman who rebels against the empty, meaningless life of the upper social world.

Ann Harding was the daughter of an army general and a prominent figure in the military and diplomatic circles of Washington. But she was never quite satisfied that this existence offered a sufficiently great return for the expenditure of the time and effort it demanded. She wanted to create a niche for herself, solely through her own efforts without the influence of her father's position.

An opportunity to affiliate with the Provincetown Players caused Miss Harding to adopt a stage career. Her success in such difficult roles as "A Woman Disputed," "Tarnish" and "The Trial of Mary Dugan" is now a tradition. For the past year the blond and beautiful Miss Harding has devoted her talents to motion pictures.

In addition to Miss Harding, the unusual cast includes Mary Astor, Edward Everett Horton, Robert Ames, Hedda Hopper, Monroe Owsley and other favorites.

On the stage Fanchon and Marco are presenting their "Tropical Tunes" idea, staged by Sammy Lee, and featuring Eddie Peabody.

Two Spanish Stars Now at International

In "Del Mismo Barro," Fox's latest Spanish super-feature which is now having its first showing here at the International California Theater, there are two dark-haired, dark-eyed beauties of Spanish blood among the leading figures of the cast of Spanish-speaking artists of the stage and screen.

MONA MARIS

One is Mona Maris, seen at this theater recently as the dancer heroine of Jose Mojica's "El Precio de un Beso." In this new feature the little artist from the Argentine portrays the role of Ellen, heroine of the picture, which is the Spanish adaptation of the dramatic hit "Common Clay," in which Constance Bennett scored. Miss Maris also will be remembered for her work in Warner Baxter's success "The Arizona Kid," and Victor McLaglen's "Sez You, Sez Me."

The other girl is Luana Alcaniz, daughter of Madrid and Havana. She also has become a favorite with the patrons of this unique theater due to her work as the heroine of the Spanish version of "The Big House." Her new role is said to give her even greater opportunities to display her artistry as an actress.

Besides these two young senoritas the cast of Spanish and Mexican-speaking players includes Juan Torena, Carlos Villarias, Vicente Padula, Roberto Guzman, Rafael Valverde, Rene Cardona, Maria Calvo, Agnes Aranis and Marina Alcaniz.

Boleslavsky Preparing Own Story Version

Richard Boleslavsky, under contract to Radio Pictures, is preparing his own treatment of the first picture assigned him by William LeBaron, vice-president in charge of production. Boleslavsky is to do "High River" and he is adapting the novel to motion picture requirements.

While under contract to Pathe, this director of the theater created and executed many showmanship features of Pathe pictures, including the ballet sequence in "Paris Bound," sequences for "This Thing Called Love" and others. He recently completed "The Last of the Lone Wolf," with Bert Lytell and Patsy Ruth Miller for Columbia. He founded the American Laboratory Theater and directed Otis Skinner, Basil Rathbone, Dennis King and other stars before coming to Hollywood.

Miss Dietrich Has Two Roles in 'Dishonored'

Marlene Dietrich is one woman of the screen who is not unwilling to sacrifice her beauty for the sake of her art as an actress.

In her current picture for Paramount, "Dishonored," being directed by Josef Von Sternberg from his own story, Miss Dietrich has one sequence in which she plays a Russian peasant—a chambermaid in a second-rate hotel.

With her make-up kit and the aid of an expert hairdresser, she accomplishes a transformation, emerging as plain a creature as could possibly be found in all of rural Russia.

Victor McLaglen is featured with Miss Dietrich in "Dishonored," which follows her triumph with Gary Cooper in "Morocco."

NAMES DO NOT ALWAYS COUNT

Will Burn, Chief of R.-K.-O. Studios Fire Department, Hasn't Burned Yet

Believe it or not, Will Burn is the fire chief at R.-K.-O. Radio Pictures studio!

But that's the only thing about the studio that "will burn," for Will Burn's twenty-four years' experience with the Los Angeles Fire Department has not been in vain.

Retiring from the city department as a captain, he joined R.-K.-O. one year ago. Since then he has supervised the installation of an automatic fire-sprinkler system in every studio building to eliminate all possibility of fire.

FILM ACTING LIKE GOING TO SCHOOL, STAR AVE

"Working in the talkies is just like graduating from high school and going to college," says Marian Nixon, who plays one of the featured leads in "College Lovers," the new First National picture now showing at Warner Brothers' Hollywood Theater.

MARIAN NIXON

Miss Nixon was already prominent in pictures when the talkies came along, but so were a lot of other actresses who haven't been heard from since. She played with Reginald Denny in "I'll Show You the Town," with Charles Rogers in "Red Lips," and with Jean Hersholt in "The Symphony."

She got her first talking role in a picture called "Geraldine." She was glad to get the microphone experience, but she was even happier when the Warner Brothers heard her talk and immediately put her under a long-term contract. She appeared with Grant Withers in "In the Headlines," and then opposite Al Jolson in "Say It With Songs," and John Barrymore in "General Crack." Miss Nixon also scored with Richard Barthelmess in "Young Nowheres."

"It's like growing up—to be a talkie star," she says. "You think you have really reached a pinnacle when you graduate from school, and then you find there are other steps. So you go to college—the talkie college."

"College Lovers" features Dorothy Whiting, Frank Richardson, Kenneth Williams, Russell Simpson and others. John Adolfi directs for First National.

Breese, Now in "Tol'able David," Talks of Pictures Made in Orange Groves the old Famous Players-Lasky was in a barn off Vine and Sunset, when orange trees grew where the Taft Building is now, in 1913, Edmund Breese remembers Hollywood.

BY ELENA BOLAND

One of the sensational achievements of silence was "Tol'able David," Henry King's mountain romance which he made for Inspiration Pictures. Breese recalls it and the fact that he was offered a part in it. Fortunately, that was but one of two opportunities in a lifetime. for Breese was asked again and accepted. At the R.-K.-O. Theater he is seen in the talking version of "Tol'able David," which this time was directed by John Blystone.

FEW CHANGES

The story has not been changed, the script is practically that of the original. There are only new characters and the addition of as little dialogue as possible.

"I should like to have seen the first version with just the sound 'duped' in," discussed Breese, adhering to his preference for silents. "Of course, as a talkie, it rates 100 per cent, but with only the sound effects added, to me it would have rated at least 90 per cent. However, with its tendencies toward realism accepted, I don't think speech has destroyed the story's romantic flavor. And that so often happens, you know, in second versions."

Breese is in California to stay. When he arrived the second time four years ago, he put behind him forty years on the New York stage. He would like to do a play here, but he will not return to the East. He was tired of learning lines, he says, and so decided to turn pure pantomimist. With his decision came the talkies and for them he has had to learn more speeches than he ever did in the theater.

Edmund Breese's distinguished background in the American theater places him much in demand in the talkies. As soon as he finishes "Millie," he will start in "Mother's Millions," with May Robson.

CHAPLIN TO SHOW NEW FILM SOON

Latest Production of Picture Comedian to Open in January

A production absolutely void of dialogue, but with musical synchronization and sound effects, "City Lights," Charlie Chaplin's latest vehicle, has its world premiere coincident with the opening of the beautiful new Los Angeles Theater on Broadway early in January.

More than two years were spent in making the production. The story, an original idea, was written by Chaplin, who, besides being the star, also directed and produced it and wrote thematic music as well.

Although a human voice is used at no time in the picture, the unique manner employed through instrumental music, it is declared, is a revolutionary step in synchronization. Chaplin's music for the picture was arranged by Arthur Johnston, associated with the Irving Berlin Company.

An entire city was constructed within the Chaplin Studios in Hollywood for "City Lights." This was made necessary because it was found impossible for the comedian to work in the streets while garbed in his famous attire. More than any previous Chaplin production, it is the most extensive, with some of the massive settings including a city business district, slums, a theater, a prize-fight stadium, a river and its embankment, and a millionaire's manson.

'Mike' Mixes Up Pronunciation, Lang Asserts

"Demand," says Walter Lang, "always results in supply. Consequently, we shall have in the near future," he adds, "an authority on the proper pronunciation for talking pictures. To date we have been making our own decisions, groping in the dark for standards."

Lang, who finished the direction of "The Command Performance," a James Cruze production, favors a middle course between the best American diction and the softer inflections of the English accent.

"The mechanical aspects of talking pictures are such that the question is deeper than obtaining the correct pronunciation of words. The microphone plays tricks with certain words and often clouds and compromises their meaning," he states. "One must always have a synonym in readiness. Speech must above all things be natural. The time must come when there will be universal agreement on diction and a practical handbook is bound to come." Lang concluded.

ACTRESS SEEKS VINDICATION

Mary Duncan Wonders if Gold and Glitter of Film Work Worth Leaving Stage

BY JOHN SCOTT

Mary Duncan, the wickedly beautiful Poppy of "The Shanghai Gesture," is determinedly working out a career in motion pictures, despite some false starts, miscasting vexations and tempting offers from stage producers.

The actress leaped into fame overnight in the John Colton melodrama, although the part kept her on the stage only seven minutes. After two years of being diabolically attractive in the role she reached for the golden bait Hollywood proffered. Now she wonders—should she have done so?

Miss Duncan has come to the conclusion that the answer is yes. Yet many times she has wished she had said no. She has not enjoyed the results of a smash hit so far in pictures, but the chance to play in one is always "around the corner"—and it is alluring.

"The name of the actor who becomes successful on the stage is heralded by a comparatively small percentage of persons in the world," she said. "He wins favor in, let us say, New York or London. The successful star in motion pictures is universally known. What stage player, no matter how loyal to the theater, would not trade?

MUCH ALIKE

"In one sense the stage and screen are alike, since a performer can go on in both years playing parts and receiving very little attention, even though he may deserve more. Critics in New York almost wore out their typewriters wondering where I had come from after 'The Shanghai Gesture' proved a hit. As a matter of fact, before I appeared in the Colton drama I had played several roles in New York, and with Leo Dietrichstein in London. And it's much the same here in pictures.

"However, there are other things to consider. My stage contract brought me about $500 a week. Fox offered me $1000. It seemed a fabulous sum; it was, as far as money is concerned, worth the change."

Following Miss Duncan's transfer from footlights to films she found herself typed as a "vamp," much to her distaste. F. W. Murnau convinced her that the role of the Russian menace in "Four Devils" would prove a stepping-stone to fame. She now says that he built her characterization in the picture in detail around a Russian lady of his acquaintance. The production was made as a silent and was held up for some time. Buddy Erickson, Murnau's assistant director, put in some dialogue scenes and the picture was not acclaimed a smash by any means.

KILL THE VAMPIRES

"The sooner I live down these vampire roles the better," Miss Duncan said. "In 'The Boudoir Diplomat,' at the Orpheum Theater, my character is not strictly a menace. It was an interesting role and an interesting picture, but both could have been made more outstanding. I have been told that different casting would have helped considerably."

In "Among the Married," which Miss Duncan is slated to do at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer with Robert Montgomery, she will be given the opportunity to really display her gifts as an actress. She hopes so, for she wants to prove not only to others, but herself, that the increased pay check wasn't the only attraction pictures offered.

In other words, Mary Duncan wants to vindicate herself. Her ambition is to build her name in filmdom as she did on the stage in the Poppy role. She feels sure, however, that a mere seven minutes on the screen won't turn the trick.

Miss Duncan's stage career includes roles in "The Egotist," "Bill of Divorcement," "New Toys," "Nervous Wreck" and "Human Nature." Her film appearances thus far have been in "Four Devils," "The River," "Through Different Eyes," "Our Daily Bread" and "The Boudoir Diplomat," currently on view.

TIFFANY SIGNS HAMILTON

Hale Hamilton, whose performances as the lawyer in "Common Clay," the commandant in "Beau Ideal," in "The Devil's Battalion," and "Dance, Fools, Dance," have won him new recognition as an outstanding character artist, has been signed by Phil Goldstone, Tiffany's chief studio executive, for one of the principal roles in "Drums of Jeopardy." This is the Harold MacGrath mystery thriller which George B. Seitz will direct. Warner Oland, June Collyer and Lloyd Hughes previously were cast.

Film Player Seen in Many Uniform Roles

A policeman and a police captain, a private in three different armies, a sergeant, a first lieutenant, a major, a British general, a naval commander, a Coast Guardsman, a city fireman, an elevator operator, a traffic cop, a ship captain and a supercargo, a captain of marines and a customs officer. These are some of the roles that have been played by Warner Baxter, who is seen as a member of the famous Foreign Legion in "Renegades" at Pantages Hollywood Theater. When he completed this picture Baxter remarked, "The only thing left is a deep-sea diver's costume."

WARNER BAXTER

Action, excitement, treachery, heroism and a strange romance are combined in "Renegades," in which Baxter is surrounded by a cast which includes Noah Beery, Myrna Loy, George Cooper, Bela Lugosi and C. Henry Gordon. The picture was directed by Victor Fleming.

Slim Martin adds a distinctive orchestral novelty to "The Dance Idea," the current stage offering which accompanies the screen feature. Produced by Leroy Prinz, the show is said to include all the requisites for a successful Broadway revue.

"Playboy" Film to Be Seen at Bard Theater

A kitchen force that would make any cafe famous, no matter how obscure the location or poor the food, is now on view at Bard's Eighth and Broadway Theater in the Maurice Chevalier comedy, "Playboy of Paris."

STUART ERWIN

In this joyous, singing film Chevalier is seen as the waiter, Eugene Pallette as the cook, Stuart Erwin as the kitchen boy and O. P. Heggie as the owner of the cafe. Naturally, in a cafe scene there had to be food and this comedy quartet, it is said, made life a burden for Ludwig Berger, the director, and the Paramount property department.

In addition to Chevalier, Bard's offers several unique short novelties. "Laughter" opens Thursday.

NEW COMEDY TO APPEAR CHRISTMAS

"Stepping Sisters" to Be Holiday Offering by Henry Duffy

Heralded as one of the most hilarious plays of the season in New York, "Stepping Sisters" opens Christmas matinee at the Hollywood Playhouse as Henry Duffy's holiday offering to theatergoers of Los Angeles.

What happens when "sisters under the tights" get together forms the basis for the comedy situations in "Stepping Sisters," which deals with the meeting, years after, of three queens of the world of burlesque.

Two of them have risen above their first means of livelihood. One is the wife of a wealthy Long Islander, her greatest ambition in life to be elected president of an exclusive women's club. The second, twice married and with her name properly hyphenated, also lives in opulence and has palmed herself off as the greatest Juliet that ever graced a moonlit balcony. The third is still a burlesque queen at heart and proud of it.

Featured in the Henry Duffy production are May Boley, who plays the role of Rosie O'Toole, outspoken, rough and loyal to burlesque; Kathryn Givney, who is cast as the pseudo Juliet; Frances Woodbury, who is the domesticated member of the trio, and Irving Fisher, song writer and former co-player with Marilyn Miller in "Sally." Others in the cast are Robert Adams, William Macauley and William Lloyd.

Million-Dollar Showing Film Drama of Sea

"Derelict," Paramount drama of the sea, on view at the Million Dollar Theater, provides George Bancroft and William Boyd with roles paralleling the memorable creations of Capt. Flagg and Sergt. Quirt of "What Price Glory?"

WILLIAM BOYD

Coincidentally, it was Boyd, one of the noted stars of the spoken drama, who created the role of Quirt in the original stage play, playing opposite Louis Wolheim as Capt. Flagg. The play achieved a record in performances both on Broadway and throughout the nation and won stardom for both principals.

Boyd, now definitely engaged in pictures, makes an arch rival for Bancroft in this story based on a romance of the sea ports.

A list of vaudeville favorites offer a stage entertainment at the Million Dollar.

ACTOR MAKES DEBUT

Martin Burton, star of "Death Takes a Holiday" on Broadway, makes his film debut in Paramount's "Ladies' Man," with William Powell.

"MOROCCO" HAILED AS TRIUMPH FOR DIRECTOR

Upon the preparation it receives in the pre-production period, depends to a greater extent than is generally realized the success or failure of a motion picture, according to Josef Von Sternberg, the director of "Morocco," now at the Chinese Theater.

"A director must prepare for a picture just as a general does for a military campaign," declares Von Sternberg.

Von Sternberg puts his theory into practice by taking to himself the responsibility for a picture from the day he is assigned to it.

He watches the development of the story, studying its strength, probing its dramatic possibilities and visualizing the star in the various situations. By the time the screen play is finished, he has sharply defined mental pictures of each scene and knows what effect he intends to get in each.

He picks the members of the supporting cast with infinite care to conform with his mental pictures of the characters they are to portray. Even bit and extra players are chosen with equal care. The reactions of all are then proved as the time for "shooting" approaches.

He knows exactly what he wants in settings, costumes and properties.

He goes over each phase of the preparatory campaign with the individual members of his technical staff.

The result of Von Sternberg's care is seen in the finished product of "Morocco." It has been hailed as a distinct directorial triumph. Marlene Dietrich is starred, and Gary Cooper and Adolphe Menjou are featured.

"Morocco" is being supplemented by a Fanchon and Marco atmospheric prologue at the Chinese.

JAPANESE STARS SHINE

Oriental Maidens Step Forward in Tricks of American Terpsichoreans

BY MARY MOYER

It may take a magician to turn a Cherry Blossom into an American Beauty. Or another magician to produce a Pekinese from a thoroughly English top hat. But all it takes is a few good old American dancing lessons to transform the doll-like maidens of Japan into the most entrancing buck-and-winging, tapping, and boop-boop-a-dooping young women that ever decorated the boards of a stage or gave the bald-headed row a thrill.

"Strange As it Seems," or "Believe It or Not," young Japan, in Los Angeles at least, has gone in for dancing in a big way. Not only have they danced for their own amusement, but they have migrated to New York and other points east, and have walked away with some of the plum roles in musical comedies and variety productions.

One of the outstanding instructors who has trained numerous dancers for the stage, among them several Japanese stars, who form a portion of his class is William B. Ramsdell. Ramsdell, who, with his sisters, conducts a studio here, has made some interesting observations during his career as a teacher and a vaudeville star. He has, at the present time, in addition to his American students, seventeen Japanese girls who are studying for the stage and making unusual progress.

"The reason for the rapid progress of the Japanese in dancing, is their power of concentration," he said. "The Japanese have the happy faculty of thinking about just one thing at a time. They are deliberate and very particular about detail. It's not that they are any quicker or smarter than the American girl, but they have been taught to concentrate.

"The strict home surroundings of the oriental are another reason for their aptitude," according to Ramsdell.

"Practically every Japanese student I have practices from three to four hours a day. They take their lessons seriously and they never come to class without their previous week's work letter perfect."

An unusual discovery made by Ramsdell in his contact with Japanese students of the dance, is their aversion to anything Japanese in dancing. They want to be thoroughly American. They want acrobatic, tap, buck-and-wing, and everything that the American girl does on the stage.

Among some of the Japanese students trained by Ramsdell are Patti Kawahata, who is said to be the greatest high-kick dancer New York has ever seen. According to noodles, her controlled kicks are not equalled by any other dancer. At the present time she is dancing in one of Broadway's musical successes.

Others include Yaeko Okamoto, who is considered to be one of the outstanding acrobatic dancers in the city; Ruth Kadamatsu, who specializes in oriental and whirlwind dances, is taking audiences by storm in many of the leading hotels and clubs. Tsuyuko Mayeda is another youngster who is said to be the Japanese Marilyn Miller.

These, however, are but a few of the youthful orientals accomplishing outstanding feats in terpsichorean lines under the direction of Ramsdell and his sister.

HOLIDAY EVENTS SCHEDULED

Holiday events at the McAdam Normal and Professional School of Dancing will be climaxed Christmas week by two juvenile parties given for the children's class. Scores of the pupils of the school, including many little radio and screen favorites, will appear in clever recitations, songs and dances. Older students also will be presented in solo and group dances.

DANCE TAPS

A resume of dancing in the last decade, according to Maurice L. Kusell, brings to light some startling facts. If our old dancing stars of twenty-five or thirty years ago were alive today to witness the elan in which the present-day youths of dancing arts perform their routines, their eyes would open in amazement, says Kusell.

Mr. Kusell, who has studied and helped develop the art of tap dancing, as well as produce many spectacles for stage and screen dancing successes, in the past few years, looks back to the days of George Primrose, who was the famous soft-shoe dancer of that era, and to the famous Loie Fuller, international dancing sensation. Their dancing in those days "way back in the '90's was considered the utmost in dancing art. Today the dancing youngsters start where they left off and dancing has progressed much further in the past few years, than it ever has before, Kusell maintains.

Kusell announces a new beginners' class under his personal direction Tuesday.

The Ernest E. Ryan School of Dancing is wearing a festive look with the large ballroom and lobby decorated with Christmas greens and preparations under way for the annual holiday parties which are to be held during Christmas week in honor of the various classes in dancing. Christmas Eve an affair has been planned for the members of the adult classes. A Christmas tree laden with gifts for all will greet the guests and the evening will be spent in dancing.

Through the R.-K.-O. vaudeville booking exchange an arrangement has been made for a unit of Bud Murray's California Sunbeams, comprising fifty girls, to appear at the Annandale Country Club. Two units of Murray's Sunbeams are now in rehearsal with the first of these opening last Monday at the country club, with several other bookings to follow through the R.-K.-O. offices.

Mr. Murray announces that special evening classes for beginners in tap and ballet are now in formation under the personal direction of Mary Frances Taylor, ballet directress, and Bud and Gladys Murray and Byron E. Cramer in the tap and acrobatic classes. A special boys' class on Saturday mornings in tap and acrobatic is also another new idea at the school.

The Major School of Acting announces a full program for the holiday weeks at the studio. Next Wensday marks the date for the annual dance, party and reunion of the Major players. The Major players is an organization of the school consisting of the graduates and professional students. All of the scholars not yet eligible for membership in the organization will be guests of the alumni at this time.

The annual Christmas party of the school will be held in the Major theater the 23rd inst. A Christmas tree and presents will be a feature of the affair. Entertainment will include vaudeville acts. This party is confined to students only and is one of the big events of the year.

DANCE STUDENTS PRAISED

Western Girls Superior in Talent and Enthusiasm, Teacher of Dancing Announces

Los Angeles furnishes the dances—New York the opportunities, is a statement made last week by Albertina Rasch, recently returned from Broadway, where she staged three musical comedies for production, and placed a number of her girls in other current musical successes.

"There is no doubt that western girls are superior in talent and enthusiasm," Mme. Rasch said. "They are much easier to work with. They apply themselves with vigor and interest. They use every opportunity as a stepping stone to bigger things, while the New York girl is satisfied with a position in the chorus and her weekly pay envelope."

STUDIOS CUTTING DOWN

Mme. Rasch explained further that while the films furnished ample occupation for dancers a short time ago, the studios are cutting down on musical productions. Stage shows are few and far between west of Chicago, which is making it difficult for dancers to obtain work outside of that offered in prologues. California, being primarily a "home" State, she continued, "there is little likelihood that the musical show will ever gain great popularity, because residents of the West are perfectly willing to spend an evening at home rather than running from one place of amusement to another, as is the case in New York."

The dancer, however, has made a number of interesting plans which are to be carried out in the near future. Since her return from the East she has arranged to take capable girls back to New York with her and place them in shows. So that she will be able to obtain the best talent obtainable she is planning for a series of try-outs from which a group of girls will be chosen.

STUDIED FROM MANY ANGLES

Mme. Rasch has been doing some interesting and novel work for both stage and screen for the last several years. She has studied dancing from every angle, but, strange enough, has come to the conclusion that an entire production of dancing for the screen is impossible, in spite of the many who believe that the screen ballet is a coming feature.

"From three to four minutes of dancing is all that an audience wants," she said. "The American audience must have variety. As a whole it is not interested in a concentration upon one phase of any art."

"Even for the stage a ballet of more than ten or eleven minutes is almost out of the question," she continued. "This time does not include entirely ensemble numbers, but ballets, punctuated with solo selections of various descriptions. The modern audience finds that ten minutes of dancing, or anything else in a variety or revue line, is quite sufficient."

Mme. Rasch is planning to return east for the holidays, after which she will return to her Hollywood studio to prepare numbers for several New York stage shows and a number of motion pictures.

Enterprise to Be Launched by Lon Murray

The following announcement comes from Lon Murray. After the first of the year, a subsidiary of the Lon Murray School for Stage Dancing and Dramatics, at 3416 West First street, of which he is head, will come into being and be known as the Lon Murray Theatrical Enterprises. In association with Murray in the producing department, which will be incorporated under the laws of the State of California, will be Edward Mendelssohn, former general stage director for Sam Harris's Music Box shows in New York for the past seven years. Mendelssohn is at present general director for the "Little Show" in New York, and is expected to arrive here in January.

Three original operettas and musical comedies are now being composed by several of New York's librettists. The first one is slated for San Francisco, opening in February, and to be brought to Los Angeles for a run later. Murray will begin casting for the first operetta next month. Chorus men and girls will be used again, as is usually the custom with Lon Murray. The first show is slated to go into rehearsal in three weeks. Murray requires medium height girls who do toe and tap work, show girls who sing, and boys over six feet in height who sing well.

DEBUT SCHEDULED AT THEATER MART

Harriet E. Huntington

Making her formal debut to Los Angeles dance circles, Harriet E. Huntington of the Michio Ito studios will present her first public concert tomorrow night at the Theater Mart. A series of dance interpretations, originated by Michio Ito, will make up the program.

Scriabin, Yamato, Sarasate and Albeniz will be among the various composers to be interpreted by the young danseuse, who has also won a name for herself in musical circles as a harpist.

Nine Parties Will Be Given

Nine separate and distinct Christmas parties for nine different departments, are on schedule for the near future at the Elisa Ryan Studio of Dancing, according to report from Miss Ryan. The parties are to be given for the Collegiate and Terpsichorean clubs, the business girls' class, tap and acrobatic classes, children's ballroom class and also the private afternoon ballroom classes. Special favors and stunts are being prepared for each of the nine parties.

In addition to these a general members of the school are invited. Christmas assembly, to which all will be held the 20th inst.

Pupils Seen in Dance Program

One of the week's interesting dance programs was held last Friday afternoon at Cumnock School, and presented by dance pupils of the Misses Velma and Selma Lytell. The program took the form of a miniature revue and all types of dancing were introduced.

Colorful costumes and specially designed settings, added to the picture created by the dancers who ranged from 3 years of age to young women in their 'teens. This is one of a program series planned by the Lytell Studio.

ARGENTINA RECITALS DRAW NEAR

Innovations Mark Coming Appearance of Spanish Dance Star

Three recitals will be given by La Argentina in the Philharmonic Auditorum January 20, 22 and 27.

A novel feature on her program this year is the addition of a vocal accompaniment for several of her dances. The vocal accompaniment, sung off-stage, gives the full Spanish flavor of dance and song.

The "queen of the castanets" has added many new dances to her already large repertoire and shows this year an entirely new wardrobe of dazzling creations.

Recently the Cross Chevalier de la Legion d' Honneur was conferred on La Argentina by the French government in recognition of her genius. With Sarah Bernhardt, Cecile Sorel and Mme. Curie, Argentina is one of the few women to receive this decoration, and the first and only Spanish woman thus honored.

Another Spanish-dance program scheduled will be the appearance of Juan Lucay and Anita, South American dancers, who come with the Tipica Orchestra of Mexico to the Philharmonic Auditorium January 23.

Annual Revue to Be Given by Students

The annual Christmas revue of the Beattie School of the Theater and Dance will be conducted Thursday afternoon and evening at Miles Memorial Theater in Santa Monica. "School Days," a one-act children's revue with singing, dancing and dramatic numbers, will be presented. Following this a dance program has been arranged combining ballet, tap and acrobatic numbers.

Appearing this year as featured artists will be the Krummil twins in their acrobatic offering called "Stumble and Tumble," also the juvenile artists, Betty Bolen of the Hal Roach studios, Gwyneth Verdon and the little Floyd sisters, known for their comedy eccentric dancing.

Mme. Beattie, directress of the school, is appearing in Spanish dances and will also give Brahms Hungarian Dance No. 6 with Mme. Flora Bonfanti Russell, distinguished ballet artist.

Lafe Page will be seen in a tap rhythm dance, and has arranged all of the tap dances for his students appearing in the show.

Proceeds of the performance will be used in packing backets for worthy families at Christmas time.

Japanese Actor in Leading Role

Teru Shimada,

Talented young student of the Katherine Hamill studio, who will appear in the leading role of "The Flower of Edda," a one-act drama featuring Japanese dancing and the customs of Old Japan. The production is to be given the 29th inst.

ROONEY STUDIO TO OPEN

One of the week's most interesting announcements to the dance world comes from Hollywood with the statement that Julia Rooney, daughter of the famous Pat Rooney, has arrived to open a studio in the West.

It was only recently that Miss Rooney, who hails from a family whose name has meant dancing for many years, arrived from New York, where she recently closed an engagement with a Broadway production.

"When I used to play vaudeville in Los Angeles with my sister, on an act known as the Rooney Sisters, I always felt that this was the only place in the world where I would really care to live. When I closed with the show this year I made up my mind that I would carry out my threat, go west and establish another school in the Rooney chain."

The opening of Julia Rooney's studio makes the Rooney dance schools a coast-to-coast proposition. There are two schools in Long Island, one in Freeport and one in Baldwin, headed by Josie Rooney. Pat Rooney heads the New York establishment. Mattie Rooney presides over another terpsichorean institution at San Diego.

All of these schools teach the Rooney method, a style originated by the family and used in no other place. Julia Rooney plans to add all of her classes personality and curriculum technique to the art of buck and wing, toe, and ballet dancing. Every branch of the art will be taught in this one institution of entertainment.

She plans to confine herself wholly for those interested in following the stage as a career, including such necessary subjects as make-up in the course of study.

Julia Rooney is well known in the United States and Europe as a dancer. She was for years one of the team of Rooney and Bent, and Julia Rooney, and her sister was known as a favorite vaudeville headliner. She has toured Europe and appeared before royalty, and is the possessor of a medal presented by the Princess Marie of Coppage, Germany.

The late Pat Rooney, father of them, will be remembered as the man who made world-famous "Little Annie Rooney" song. It did for "Sweet Adeline" and what his father did for the old musical selection. The Rooneys are vaudeville partners, and will be seen at Orpheum houses in the country.

Liebling Will Be Soloist at Concert Today

George Liebling, pianist, will be the soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra at the fourth Sunday afternoon concert of the season this afternoon at the Philharmonic Auditorium at 3 p.m., playing his own piano concerto, "Eroica." Other numbers programmed for this concert are Dvorak, Overture, "Carnival," Op. 92; Scriabin, "The Divine Poem" (Symphony No. 3, in C minor, Op. 43;) Chabrier, Rhapsody "Espana."

French Drama Carols to Be Heard Here

Grace Wood Jess, actress-singer, who gave the Christmas program for the South Pasadena Woman's Club recently, will sing rare old French drama carols, "Legends of the Nativity," at the Westminster Presbyterian Church in Pasadena this evening.

GRACE WOOD JESS

When Yvette Guilbert was given special permission to delve into the libraries of old monasteries of France in search of religious folk songs, her efforts were rewarded by the finding of some rich material which she compiled into a valuable collection entitled "Songs of the Life of Jesus." From Guilbert, Grace Wood Jess learned these songs, some of which she will sing tonight.

ROTH GIVEN PRAISE AS SEBASTIANO

German Critics Declare Singer to Be Best Ever Heard in Role

The engagement of Max Roth with the German Opera Company which comes to the Shrine Auditorium January 29 to February 2, next, is said by German critics to take away from Germany the finest Sebastiano in all Europe. The role of Sebastiano in Eugen d'Albert's opera, "Tiefland," was created by Roth for German audiences. "Tiefland" was first sung in Prague in 1903. Since that time it has been one of the regular operas in the German repertoire throughout the operahouses of Europe.

The opera was written by d'Albert, well-known musical authority, as a love offering to his wife. The book is by Rudolph Lothar. Max von Schilling, the conductor with the German Grand Opera Company considers this opera one of the gems of the group to be presented here.

Roth for the last six years has been the leading baritone with the Staatsoper in Berlin. Not only has he made himself famous for the role in Sebastiano, but he has achieved fame as an interpreter of the leading baritone roles in the Wagnerian Ring.

Klaire von Kullverg has also been imported especially by the German Opera Company to sing the role of Nuri in "Tiefland." Mme. Kullverg has sung the role with Roth at the Staatsoper and other leading operahouses in Europe.

New Buildings and Equipment School's Need

The Los Angeles Music School Settlement of 2607 Mozart street, is endeavoring to meet a need for new buildings and equipment with various money-raising entertainments.

The school is maintained for serious students of music whose circumstances do not permit them to pay the usual rates. A sliding scale of prices based upon ability to pay is used.

Pupils' recitals are given on the last Sunday afternoon of each month at 3 o'clock.

Los Angeles is struggling with this helpful idea while San Francisco's school has large headquarters and nine branches.

Mrs. Charles J. Hubbard is president, Mrs. C. C. Craig, first vice-president; Mrs. J. P. Schieleln, second vice-president, and the other officers are Mrs. Ben Wesley, Mrs. Norman S. Hall, Miss Margaretha J. Kearns and Mrs. Nuncie S. Bittman.

STUDIOS OPENED BY VOICE TEACHER

Mme. Grace Whistler

Mme. Grace Whistler, vocal diagnostician and teacher of singing, since her return from the East a short time ago, has established a studio at her residence in the Evanston Apartments and is engaged in the training of a number of promising students, among them Miss Melba Griswold, contralto, of Seattle, and William Spaulding, lyric tenor. Mr. Spaulding, who hails from Bishop, has already had European experience.

'Messiah' Music Will Be Played by A. Butler

Alfred Butler, organist and composer, will play during the rendition of Handel's "Messiah" at Philharmonic Auditorium on Tuesday evening.

ALFRED BUTLER

The oratorio will be sung by 200 picked singers from forty-seven choirs of Southern California and will be directed by Prof. J. B. Trowbridge.

At 8 p.m. preceding the singing, Mr. Butler, who is a pupil of Guilmant, will give a recital which will include his teacher's fifth sonata.

Assisting Mr. Butler will be Louise Woodbridge and Juanita G. Taylor, pianists, while soloists will include Helen M. Steinel, soprano; Alma K. Moss, contralto; Howard S. Swan, tenor, and Gordon Weatherill, bass.

Orpheus Club Will Present First Concert

The Orpheus Club will present its first concert for this season at Philharmonic Auditorium, Wednesday evening, under the directorship of Prof. Hugo Kirchhofer with Inez Jacobson at the piano and Dr. Ray Hastings at the organ.

The Orpheus Club is one of the few male singing organizations in which every man memorizes his music. The program follows:

A Song of the Sea.....Stebbins
Talisman.....Shuman-McKinney
Good King Wenceslas.....Lefebvre
Musical Trust.....Stevens-Clokey
The Little Sandman.....Brahms
The Sea.....McLeod-Borschejn
When Song is Sweet.....Bana-Souci
Dance of the Gnomes.....MacDowell
The Sleigh.....Baldwin-Kountz
Hallelujah.....Handel-Protheroe

The soloist will be Hazel Rhodes, soprano. She will sing an aria from "Faust," by Gounod, and other selections.

This is the twenty-sixth season for the club.

Glendale Unit Will Be Heard in Auditorium

Glendale Symphony Orchestra, now in its seventh year, continues to introduce musical novelties to the western musical public at almost every concert. On its program for tomorrow night at the Herbert Hoover Auditorium, Glendale, is listed the first performance west of the Rockies, of Scriabine's First Symphony, and the delightful "Irish Rhapsody" of Victor Herbert.

The concert also marks the last appearance in America for a prolonged period of Olga Steeb, who has chosen Saint-Saens second concerto in G minor for piano with orchestra accompaniment, as her farewell offering.

Quartet Gives Third Concert

The Bartlett-Frankel String Quartet will give the third concert of the Sunday evening popular series at the Beaux Arts Auditorium this evening at 8:30 p.m. Program follows: Haydn—Quartet in E-flat Major, No. 2, Op. 33; Mary Carr Moore — Scherzo; Tschaikowsky—Andante Cantabile; Cherubini—Scherzo, program closing with Quartet in D-flat Major, Op. 11, by Suk.

Ensemble to Be Heard in Concert Here

The Liebesllieder Ensemble, which will be heard in a concert January 3, next, at the Philharmonic Auditorium, is a new organization. Unique in the form of its programs and in its personnel, it offers a variety seldom found in a single concert.

Esther Dale, soprano; Fernanda Doria, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Jerome Swinford, baritone, are the notable vocalists of the organization, and with them is joined the De Maria Ensemble, a small orchestra of twelve instruments, directed by Rosolino De Maria.

The programs, carefully chosen for their artistic merits, consist of concerted works in which the entire ensemble participates, a solo group by each of the vocalists, and several orchestra numbers. At each concert the major work presented is the "Liebesllieder Walzer" ("Love-Song Waltzes.") by Johannes Brahms, one of the most beautiful of that master's compositions, rich in melody and sentiment.

Church Choir to Celebrate Dawn of Year

The dawn of the New Year will be signalized by the choir of the First Baptist Church of Los Angeles, Alexander Stewart, director.

Beginning at 11:50 p.m., Mendelssohn's tenor aria, "Watchman, What of the Night," will be sung by J. Malcomson Huddy. As the hour of midnight is approached and the soloist intones for the third time, "Watchman, will the night soon pass?" the chimes will peal out the hour of 12, a soprano solo voice will answer from the balcony, "The night is departing," and as the lights in the church auditorium flash on, the choir will break forth in the majestic chorus, "The night is departing; the day is approaching."

This will climax the presentation of Mendelssohn's great symphonic-cantata, "Lobgesang" or "The Hymn of Praise," which the composer wrote in celebration of the 300th anniversary of the discovery of printing. Some commentators have said that Mendelssohn in this work endeavored to depict "the triumph of light over darkness."

The oratorio will be presented beginning at 10:45 p.m., the evening of the 31st inst., by the chorus choir of 100 voices, with Mabel Adsit, organist; Nellie Walker, soprano soloist; Fannie Lou Reed, contralto soloist, and J. M. Huddy, tenor soloist.

Quartet Will Give Concert

The Classique Quartet, with Helen Ledger as soloist, will give the regular Sunday evening musical program in the Cortile Ado of the Hollywood Knickerbocker tonight.

Helen Ledger, soprano, is a native daughter of California. She is known through her radio work and her German songs have won especially high praise.

"The quartet is composed of Elizabeth Drake Proehl, pianist, who is also manager of the KNX radio staff orchestra; Ethel Averil, the only professional feminine oboist; Helen Meade Little, flutist, who has played with the Los Angeles Philharmonic many times, and Eugenie Egloff, solo 'cellist on the KNX programs.

ORCHESTRA WILL PLAY WEDNESDAY

Symphonia Praeceptorum to Be Heard in Concert During Week

The Symphonia Praeceptorum, an orchestra of instructors, of which Henry Svedrofsky is conductor, will play Wednesday at Bovard Auditorium. Zaruhi Elmassian, soprano, will be the soloist.

Symphonia Praeceptorum is an orchestra composed of the professional and experienced musicians who are teaching in the Los Angeles city schools. Many will remember this organization from its first appearance last May in the festival concert for music week. Most of the band and orchestra directors in the schools have had a large amount of professional experience and some teachers of other subjects are excellent musicians. There are about sixty members.

Henry Svedrofsky is an excellent conductor and musician. When the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra was organized in 1919, Svedrofsky was brought to Los Angeles as assistant concert master, which place he has held continuously, and now is in the twelfth season with the orchestra. He has been soloist with this orchestra upon a number of occasions.

The soloist will be Zaruhi Elmassian, who is remembered for her work with the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association. For three years she was soloist with the Girls Glee Club, University of Southern California. For four seasons she has sung minor roles with the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association. She sang with the Columbia Grand Opera company in Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Samoiloff to Sing on Radio

On one of Lazar Samoiloff's visits to San Francisco, where he teaches two days every two weeks, he was engaged to sing and speak on the Shell happy time hour.

M. Samoiloff had his repertoire class open to the public on Thursday.

Seven of his students made a radio appearance last Friday night and he is arranging weekly radio appearances for his class of advanced students.

ROLE OF "GILDA" WILL BE SUNG

Bernice Van Gilder

Leading a cast in the first presentation of the opera "Rigoletto" by the Civic Opera Association of Hollywood, January 14, at the Wilshire-Ebell Theater, will be Bernice Van Gilder, who will sing the important role of "Gilda."

In support will be a cast of good caliber with Maestro Aldo Franchetti as musical director, together with a full symphony orchestra, opera chorus, complete mechanical and technical equipment.

Edwin Bower Hesser and Allan Cahill, co-directors of the Civic Opera Association of Hollywood, will announce the other members of the cast within the next few days.

OPERA INTEREST STIRRED

Music Lovers Becoming Enthusiastic Over Winter Season of Song in Los Angeles

BY ISABEL MORSE JONES

With opera plans for 1931 being discussed in three ways; the newly formed Hollywood Opera Company beginning in January; the advent of the Chicago Civic Opera late in February, and the German Opera Company January 29, Los Angeles is certainly becoming opera-minded. New opera recordings are aiding and in the latest list is the hauntingly beautiful Santa's ballad from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," sung by the great soprano, Elisabeth Rethberg.

...enough and a favorite of opera-lovers, the number of singers who stood too close to the microphone or forced their voices makes its tone hard.

Mme. Rethberg's recent concert here re-established her in the minds of the discriminating as one of the few perfect singers and the new recording by Victor upholds that conclusion. With its opening call so like the arresting tones of the cry of the Valkyrie, Rethberg sings this melody of the famous daughter of the sea with undeniable appeal. The orchestral accompaniment fairly breathes with her. Although the orchestra is not mentioned on the record, it ought to be, for it is truly Wagnerian and Rethberg's clear, powerful voice floats over it without strain.

SCHORR MAKES RECORDS

Frederick Schorr, another great Wagnerian, sings "Mad! Mad! All the World Is Mad!" and "An Imp Wove the Spell," from the same composer's "Meistersinger," in a Victor European recording with Leo Blech conducting the accompaniment by the Berlin State Opera Orchestra. Schorr has a truly magnificent voice, his German enunciation is so clear that one could take a language lesson from it and his rich voice is so evenly tempered that it never, in its most impassioned fortissimi flatters against the microphone. The arias are so fine in a contemplative mood that they bear continued repetition.

A colorful Metropolitan Opera chorus recording of the "Faust" Kermess is issued this month by Victor and, although it is spirited

Stokowski's Brahms

Leopold Stokowski is evidently conducting a series of Brahms symphonies for the masterpiece albums of the Victor company. This time it is the second in D major. The splendid sonority of the Philadelphia band is given full play with the lower orchestral registers prominently set forth.

The Nordic giant of the orchestral world takes a deliberate tempo for the opening Allegro and the beautiful tone quality of the Philadelphia wind section is immediately apparent. The first orchestral recordings by this organization marked a step forward in record making but they were not so fine tonally as these later ones.

Koussevitsky

The Boston conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, has enjoyed making some records of his double-bass playing. While they are notable as examples of the expressiveness possible to the slow-speaking bass viol the limitations of this instrument, which at best sounds like a heavy 'cello, preclude any great beauty.

Byrd's "Little America," Sullivan's "Our Times" and "The Blacksmith of Vilno" Have Wide Appeal

BY LILLIAN C. FORD

Rear-Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd's "Little America," rushed through by Putnam's in time for Christmas buying, is more than up to the mark. Excerpts from his diary give Byrd's account of his aerial exploration in the Antarctic and his flight to the South Pole the freshness of the morning's news. Wisely he takes his readers into his confidence in the very beginning, where he recounts the difficulties of financing and organizing the expedition with its eighty-two men and two ships, its airplanes, aerials, scientific apparatus, equipment and supplies.

At his hotel in Los Angeles on October 7, 1928, he recorded a few quiet hours before boarding the Larsen, the Norwegian whaler that was to take some of the party to the Antarctic, "where wealth and fame and power count for nothing, and where men will not strut because there are no women about." On board, his mind was busy with a thousand problems, including finances, landings, weather, his scientific program, plans for wintering, cooling the health of the men, the care of the dogs and all the rest.

The enterprise was a race against time, and yet his two boats, the "City" and the "Bolling," were unbelievably slow. The danger was that they would fail to reach the gateway to Ross Sea while ice conditions made a passage possible. The reader becomes tense with anxiety as Byrd balances the chances of success and failure, becomes elated over the passage through the ice-pack and shares with Byrd the problems of establishing a base, the discoveries by flight, the thrill of at last flying over the pole.

Byrd puts much of his magnetic personality in the book. That it is the story of the expedition, with maps and illustrations, and not a scientific report on the contributions of the expedition to human knowledge, makes it a book to delight all readers.

Pre-War America

Mark Sullivan in "Pre-War America," the third volume of "Our Times," (Scribner) is mostly concerned with life in America during the two Roosevelt administrations. The volume opens with a consideration of two friends—Roosevelt and Taft—who later became foes, "their relationship changing the direction of history to a degree of which the consequences would be difficult to estimate." Mr. Sullivan is friendly to both, but it is Roosevelt who makes his heart beat faster.

Between the two administrations he sandwiches in a chapter on the Equitable Life scandals, under the personal management of James Hazen Hyde, who was really an arbiter of styles rather than of finances. Here is where Charles Evans Hughes becomes a national figure, well limned by Mr. Sullivan. Roosevelt's crusades, railroad regulation, fiscal and other problems, are given much space. Leaving the Taft administration to take care of itself, Mr. Sullivan turns to the bookworm crusade led by Dr. Charles Wardell Stiles and thence to an account of popular songs. Follows a running comment on the highlights of the three years beginning with 1906, playing up such one-time front-page figures as Marshall Field, "Mr. Dooley," Harry Thaw, Dowie, Thomas W. Lawson, Senator Tillman and Bellamy Storer, whose Maria got him into trouble with Roosevelt over the appointment of an American cardinal.

Changing styles in dress, magazines, books, means of locomotion, murder trials and scandals are all followed to the enlightenment of old and young. The former will find this a book to reminisce over; the latter will chuckle and wonder about those queer people before the war.

The Blacksmith of Vilno

Another book to interest the whole family is "The Blacksmith of Vilno" by Eric P. Kelly, author of the Newbery Medal winner "The Trumpeter of Krakow." (Macmillan.) Eric Kelly has spent months in historical research in Poland and has gotten its tragic story into his system. In "The Blacksmith of Vilno," classified as a juvenile, he tells the story of the dread days in 1832, following the unsuccessful revolution against the Czar of Russia. He makes young Stefan, adopted son of the blacksmith, the hero. His foster father was the leader of the revolutionary group that had possession of the crown of Poland, sought for by the emissaries of the Czar. Tradition said that without that crown no monarch could rule Poland successfully, the Poles said: "Get it if you can."

Mr. Kelly weaves plenty of mystery and surprise into the tale, with the young girl Lilia joining Stefan in his flight from a prison into a forest made impenetrable by magic. The book is beautifully written, with a poetic quality that makes it a delight for young and old so young.

Science, War, Poetry

A book that thoughtful people interested in science are reading is "The Mysterious Universe" (Macmillan) in which Sir James Jeans discusses the shift from the mechanistic to the mathematical view of the universe and ends with a chapter on the significance of life as it appears to a scientist.

Two of the best war books appeared this fall. The first is "Soldiers March" by Theodore Fredenburgh and the second is "Memoirs of an Infantry Officer," by Siegfried Sassoon, which is as good in an entirely different way as his popular "Fox-Hunting Man."

Nathalia Crane's admirers, who have been watching her grow up, will like her new book of verse, called "Pocahontas," which Dutton's have recently published.

Of great moment to lovers of poetry is the new Centenary Edition of the poems of Emily Dickinson, just issued by Little, Brown, to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of the birth of America's greatest woman poet.

A historical romance that is to be noted is Frank Spearman's "Spanish Lover" (Scribners.) It is a tale of high adventure in that glamorous period when all knighthood was opposing the Turk. The hero is Don John of Austria, illegitimate son of Charles V of Spain and half-brother of Philip II. As a boy Don John caught a glimpse of the lovely Princess Carmen, the last of the House of Arcos, and her image stayed with him long after fate parted the two. When the dark Miriam, daughter of Ali Pasha, crossed his path he found in her a beauty and nobility that surpassed that of all others. After his victory over the Turk off Lepanto and the pageant celebrating it, Don John found the reward he sought. It is done with all Frank Spearman's perfected technique and with a glamour that belongs with true romance.

NOVEL DISCLOSES WASHINGTON LIFE

Janet Ayer Fairbank
Author of "The Lions' Den," a story of Washington (Bobbs-Merrill.)

Gossip of the Book World

Hollywood Anthology

"Harp Strings Swept by Many Hands" is an anthology of Hollywood verse compiled and edited by Emmy Matt Rush and written mostly by professional people—doctors, lawyers, educators, bankers—who in their hours of ease turn to poetry. Included are poems by Walt Mason in that form he has made his own, and with all his wit and philosophy. The poems are gathered under four heads: Harp Strings, Trees, Benedictus, Hollywood, Songs of the Sea.

A Carrie Jacobs-Bond Juvenile

Very gay with its colored illustrations by Kurt Wiese is "The Little Monkey With the Sad Face," by Carrie Jacobs-Bond, with its four stories for children about a monkey, a puppy, a raccoon and a squirrel.

Bourbon Classics

Three recent additions to the "Bourbon Classics" are "Memoirs and Correspondence of Madame D'Epinay," translated with an introduction by E. G. Allingham; "The Adventures of a Man of Quality," by the Abbe Prevost, the creator of "Manon," who went to England as a fugitive in 1728 and wrote there this account of his experiences and impressions; and "The Memoirs of Marmontel." The series is a notable one with each volume attractive in format, and worthy of a permanent place in that library that so many readers are building up. Lincoln MacVeagh is the publisher.

The Vagabond Library

The latest addition to the Century's "Vagabond Library" of attractive reprints of popular travel books, is Frederick O'Brien's "Atolls of the Sun," telling of a white man's life among the natives of the Pacific coral islands. Other notable books in this series are "Beyond Khyber Pass," by Lowell Thomas, "Spanish Sunshine" by Eleanor Elsner, and "The Venture Book," by Elinor Mordaunt.

In Dutch Guiana

"Jungle Gold," (Bobbs-Merrill,) is another of those "told to" adventure stories so numerous this year. In this case it is "Dad" Pedrick who tells the story of his experiences in the jungle of Dutch Guiana in 1896, where he went to build a railroad to haul out the gold that was indisputably there—and is still there. In everyday life Mr. Pedrick is a well-known Philadelphia business man.

All About Weddings

In "The Bride's Book of Etiquette" (Harper's,) Anna Steese Richardson gives full and explicit instructions about the correct wedding, new style. Whether the wedding is to be simple and inexpensive or the most elaborate allowed by good taste, its details are here given. Directions for Jewish and Catholic weddings are included.

Michelangelo Drawings

William Edwin Rudge issues twelve drawings of Michelangelo's, with explanatory text and introduction by A. E. Popham. They afford an opportunity to study his work in detail, and in a way impossible when looking upon any of his great productions in its entirety.

"California Gringos," by H. A. Van Coenen Torchiana, published by Paul Elder & Co., of San Francisco, a volume of reminiscences of the cattle ranges in the nineties, written in informal narrative form. It gives many sidelights on California and its people in evolution during the times when the Gringos were pushing the Hidalgos out of their way. The author is a member of the California bar and for the last two decades has served as Consul-General of the Netherlands.

CHEER-UP POEMS

THE RASPBERRY TREE. By Stoddard King. Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York.

As apt and lively as the other collections of his "poems of sentiment and reflection" is Stoddard King's current book. Best of all is "A Hack Writer's Child is Sung to Sleep." Second best is "Side-tracked," which happily describes the completeness of the poet's library and ends thus:

The greatest minds of every age
Abide within my easy reach;
Their writings are profound and sage,
And I could cull the best of each.
But man is weak: I idly cast
A glance toward "The Crimson Vulture."
Read the first page, and that's the last of Culture!

Poems on the piano tuner, the salesman, the economist, the critic and what not make this a jolly book to cheer up most any one.

A Group of Recent Books

THE LIONS' DEN. By Janet Ayer Fairbank. The Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis.

"The Lions' Den" is a novel that almost any woman will like. It is by Janet Ayer Fairbank, whose "The Smiths" was widely read a year or so ago. She is a sister of Margaret Ayer Barnes, author of "Years of Grace," just now among the best sellers. The Ayer home is in Chicago, but Mrs. Fairbank has lived in Washington, has been a member of the executive committee of one of the greatest parties and has keenly observed the ways of politicians.

The lions' den is Washington. There Daniel Carson was sent as Congressman from a rural Wisconsin district. He was a progressive, a bachelor, a farmer, a good speaker and was handsome and socially inexperienced. Before he left home he got engaged to Erma Schmultz, the nice, intelligent young school-teacher who had campaigned for him.

In Washington he was lonely, bewildered, unnoticed. Not until an efficient young woman secretary took him over did he even begin to click. Then he attracted the wandering eye of the devastatingly fascinating Corinne Miller, wife of a standpat Senator of dominant influence.

BARBED THRUSTS AT MOVIES

ONCE IN A LIFETIME. A Comedy. By Moss Hart and George S. Kaufman. Farrar & Rinehart, New York.

Hollywood and the movie studios have been pelted often enough by disillusioned authors who, inveigled out here by tempting offers, have found conditions intolerable and have gone back home disgruntled. But never has the studio set-up had such a trouncing as that given in "Once In a Lifetime." Produced by Sam H. Harris at the Music Box, New York, late in September, it was hailed by the critics as a hilarious comedy and "the cruelest, gaudiest assault against the movies and their makers ever to emerge from an embittered mind."

Published now in book form, it affords rare entertainment, well spiked with malice. That its burlesque plot is absurd does not make it any the less effective. Only by overstatement can such wholesale criticism as this be put over. As a start-off, the authors send an unsuccessful vaudeville trio to Hollywood when first the talkies appear. Jerry, with his promoter's mind, sees vague opportunities there, the practical-minded May decides that a school for voice training is the thing; poor dumb George, who never has an idea, agrees.

By a stroke of good luck the trio get to the great Glogauer, who installs them in his studio, where May does her best to make the illiterates of the silent drama passably vocal.

In a swift succession of scintillatingly clever scenes, perhaps that in the Gold Room of the Hotel Stilton, Los Angeles, is best. It is unparalleled in its malicious parody of the movie world, with the bell hops and chauffeurs and cigarette girls all trying to edge in. The whole thing is delicious. And it has dynamite in it. It is drastic enough and has sufficient truth in its exaggeration to cause more than a ripple in the production centers of the cinema world. Is it just? That's for their efficiency experts to decide.

SELECTED POEMS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

EARLY MOON. Carl Sandburg has made a happy selection of poems for young people and James Daugherty has illustrated them.

SHORT POEMS FOR SHORT PEOPLE. By Alicia Aspinwall. Little rhymes for little people, illustrated from drawings by Fanny Y. Cory.

MAGIC WORLD. An Anthology of Poetry. Edited by Margery Gordon and Marie B. King. Classified groups of verse, including "Far Away and Long Ago," "America the Beautiful," "Brothers All," "In the City," "All Seas—All Ships" and "Songs of Life."

THE "PRIX BRENTANO"

BURNT OFFERING. By Jeanne Galzy. Brentano's, New York.

The "Prix Brentano" choice for 1930 is "Burnt Offering." It is a simply told story revealing the love of a French teacher for one of her pupils, the small and appealing Annette. All her latent mother love went out to this child, whose mother was commonplace and worse, until at last it became an obsession that threatened ruin.

With gravity and precise psychological understanding Jeanne Galzy tells her story, in which the frustration of enforced spinsterhood is shown without being misrepresented.

A SHEAF OF NEW JUVENILES

TOLD. By Compton Mackenzie. D. Appleton & Co., New York.

Compton Mackenzie now and then turns his deft hand to the writing of a children's story. Now a collection of these is offered in a volume that is gay and gaudy and is rich with stories of individuality that can be offered the quite fastidious girl of 10 or 12.

The first one tells us of a tiny Miss Kimpton who patters along the London streets in goloshes purposely bought big enough to fit her mother. All the time she talks to herself and wishes she dared spend her money for a ticket to the Pantomime. Of the astonishing bit of good luck that supplied the ticket and much else, many little girls will read with pleasure, as they will the other stories.

THE TWILIGHT OF MAGIC. By Hugh Lofting. Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York.

The creator of the Doctor Dolittle stories turns to the Middle Ages, with its pageantry, and tells the engaging story of Anne and Giles, to whom an old woman accused of being a witch gave the whispering shell. It was endowed with such magic that it saved the young king from a wicked plot and thus brought honor to the children and prosperity to their worried parents. A splendid juvenile.

THE WONDERFUL STORY OF INDUSTRY. By Ellen Friel Baker. Illustrated by Carle Michel Boog. Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York.

Stories of how the small Charlie learned about the world of industry by visiting mill and field and factory. Thus he came to know how the newspaper gets on your doorstep, how matches are made, about hats and flax and shoes and rubbers and many other every-day materials.

A HUNDRED TRIPS TO STORYLAND. By Mary Graham Bonner. Illustrated by Hildegarde Lupprian. The Macaulay Company, New York.

Miss Bonner tells bedtime stories about all sorts of things, such as the old quilt, the cockles of the heart, the andiron, ice cream soda and fashionable fish. The youngest readers, aided by Miss Hildegarde Lupprian's illustrations, will be able to read them.

SHOWS LANDSCAPES

Landscapes by Hazel Boehme are on exhibition at the Hollywood Bookstore. Miss Boehme has evidently studied to advantage with Millard Sheets from whom one judges she has learned to seek out finely harmonious grays. She shows fresh pictures of farmyards, boats at Fish Harbor, and kindred subjects.

political astuteness in regard to the church.

Married to the mean-spirited Margaret of Valois, sister of Charles IX, he gave her as good as she sent. He saw straight ahead of him the crown, awaiting the man strong enough to take it. Wars, discord with relatives, alliances and political schemes occupied him, along with many amours, until at the assassination of Charles II he was made King. Ten more years of warfare, during which Henry was converted once more to Catholicism, ended with the Edict of Nantes.

His second wife, Marie de Medici, proved little better than his first, but he found lovely ladies to console him. When he was assassinated by Ravaillac in 1610, Marie's flock of children entitled her to the regency. Two of his grandsons, Louis XIV and Charles II of England, were to inherit his high spirits and his belief in himself and were to rule as monarchs of brilliant and merry courts.

Mr. Sedgwick has steered a nice course in following all the complicated events of the life of the first of the Bourbons, giving us enough of background and politics to clarify, but concentrating on the life and bold enterprises of that most successful abjurer.

THE DIVORCE CASE OF QUEEN CAROLINE. William Dodgson Bowman, E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

This circumstantial record of the divorce case of Queen Caroline is preceded by an account of her royal husband's previous life. Considering the worth of that life to Great Britain or to the world at large, readers will question with Thackeray, whether it has been worth, while "for a good dog to hunt down such poor game." It is true that George IV possessed more shrewdness and intellect than any other reigning member of the house of Hanover, except Edward VII, but such wisdom as he possessed was put to such ignoble uses that it counted for nothing, as Mr. Bowman shows in his painstaking and interesting narrative.

After urging Mrs. Fitzherberdt into a clandestine marriage, which if acknowledged would have cost him his sucession to the throne, he deserted her for Lady Jersey, who remained his favorite for some years. He was finally forced into a marriage with Caroline of Brunswick in order to have his debts paid by his father, who refused further advances on any other terms.

The evidence adduced in his attempted divorce is minutely and fairly presented, and this author's verdict, the result of careful study of the case, is that Queen Caroline was quite innocent of the charges brought against her. The dramatic account of the legal effort to carry against her the so-called "Bill of Pains and Penalties" is at once moving and effective. How infinitely superior to "fictionized" history and biography is plain truth presented with classic clarity and simplicity.

RECENT BOOKS UNDER REVIEW

She opened doors to him and saw that he was placed on a good committee and was given a chance to speak in the House.

Mrs. Fairbank makes us fully aware of the lobbying and of the sinister forces behind the scenes and shows how the upright Daniel's eyes were slowly opened to the facts of life. That the poor innocent fell hard for the sophisticated wistfulness of the lovely Corinne and otherwise got in wrong is understood. But his good sense and integrity brought him through. Thus we have a good story of Washington with its log-rolling and wire-pulling, with a hero who develops under the author's skillful handling.

THE PICK OF THE BIOGRAPHIES

NORTHCLIFFE. By Hamilton Fyfe. Macmillan. An intimate study of that amazing publisher whose whirlwind energy made him one of the most influential men of his period.

THE ADAMS FAMILY. By James Truslow Adams. Little, Brown. An enlightening study of representatives of America's foremost family through five generations.

THE STORY OF SAN MICHELE. By Axele Munthe. Dutton. The autobiography of a Swedish doctor in Paris and Italy. Best seller this year.

BYRON. By Andre Maurois. Appleton. A biography written to be a best seller—and it is one.

ROOSEVELT. By Owen Wister. Macmillan. In this story of a long friendship Owen Wister gives new light on our most spectacular President.

MORGAN THE MAGNIFICENT. By John K. Winkler, Vanguard. An honest, dynamic presentation of the many-sided life of our greatest financier.

R. v. R. By Hendrick W. Van Loon. Liveright. An imaginative re-creation of the life and times of Rembrandt.

MOLIERE. By John Palmer. Brewer & Warren. A brilliant critical biography of Moliere.

NICOLSON. Portrait of a Diplomatist. By Harold Nicolson. Houghton Mifflin. An authoritative study of the diplomatic threads that tied the knot of war.

SIXTY YEARS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA. By Harris Newmark. Houghton Mifflin. A new edition of a volume invaluable to all interested in the early days of Los Angeles.

EMILY DICKINSON. By Genevieve Taggard. Knopf. A poet digs into old records and brilliantly reconstructs the life of Emily Dickinson, whose frustration in love made her a recluse and a poet unsurpassed by any American.

DANIEL WEBSTER. By Claude M. Fuess. Little, Brown. An authoritative two-volume biography of Webster that disproves many ancient slanders.

NEW BOOKS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

YANKEE GIRL AT RICHMOND. By Alice Turner Curtis. Penn Publishing Company, Philadelphia.

A little girl from Maine who lived in the Confederate capital and had exciting times during the Civil War.

YELLOW KNIGHT OF OZ. By Ruth Plumley Thompson. Reilly & Lee, Chicago.

The never-ending Oz tales take a new twist in this, the latest story. That children love them all is something for the psychologist to explain.

THE MEN OF BALLYWOODEN. By Arthur Mason. Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York.

Unusual adventures in fairyland told in the way children love. Nice illustrations by Robert Lawson.

THE APPROPRIATE GIFT

THE LIFE OF CHRIST IN WOODCUTS. By James Reid. Farrar & Rinehart, New York.

Bound in ivory with decorations in black and suitably boxed, the appropriate gift is here indicated. If we are to have books in woodcuts, surely such a subject as the life of Christ is the most appropriate. James Reid has sympathetically pictured it all in a succession of grim scenes that light up the story that has been told and retold for centuries.

"It is beyond any reasonable comparison, the most characteristic and accurate composite picture we have ever had of the old, brave, human free and distinctive life . . . It is the very mirror of who and what the people were that laid the real foundation for a community which is now the wonder of the historians."—Charles F. Lummis.

SIXTY YEARS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

PAINTERS OF THE WEST

Organization's Annual at Biltmore Proves Lively, Varied and Well Selected

BY ARTHUR MILLIER

But first—before breathing the closer air of the galleries—let us signalize a monumental achievement in local art, a collective creation of world importance—the Los Angeles General Hospital.

We have become so used to the pretty (in residences,) the clever or pompous or clammily imitative (in business buildings) and, in public buildings, the chilly attempt at magistry, that this mighty hymn in poured concrete, first seen above its terraces and the long curving sweeps of its ramps, catches at the throat. We had almost forgotten that a great building could be so beautiful.

"Yes," says one, "it makes me dizzy wondering where that money went." And we remind him that even so the Athenians groaned as their money built the Parthenon; and wonder who skimmed the cream off the Roman aqueducts and the Gothic cathedrals. But these things got built and served man. And now this most beautiful sign that the building art is not entirely prey to false classicism, false modernism, or, to coin a word, expositionism.

This building—unquestionably one of the great buildings of the modern world—designed by the Allied Architects, triumphs visually through the sheer rightness of its proportions and the honest exposure of its structural flesh—concrete, that most beautiful and typical modern building material. Without any obvious attempt to imitate, it recalls a great abbey. It is at once so direct a response to its purpose, and, through its proportions and honesty, so genuinely classic, that it need fear nothing from future fashions.

The only break in its exterior harmony occurs in the sculptured porch. Here a light-colored stone is used. Perhaps this will weather into harmony with the concrete, but now it lacks the appearance of strength of the dominant material. Scarpitta's sculptured figures of noted men of medicine, flanking the angel of mercy, have a sweetness that scarcely matches the grave beauty of the building itself. Perhaps weather will help here, too.

On your list of important current art exhibits be sure to place the still unfinished new General Hospital.

"PAINTERS OF THE WEST," in their ninth annual exhibition at the Biltmore Salon, present one of the most satisfying exhibitions in their history, with the sparkle that a good leaven of capable original painters can inject into a group showing. The professional level is fairly well maintained throughout.

Here are the honors, awarded by a jury consisting of Charles Hamilton Owens, Times staff artist; Reginald Poland, director of the Fine Arts Gallery, San Diego, and David Tausky, well-known painter: The gold medal to Charles Reiffel of San Diego for his landscape "Banner Gorge;" the silver medal to Frank Tenney Johnson for his picture of a stage coach going "Across the Big Divide;" the bronze medal to Ernest L. Blumenschein of New Mexico for "Legend," a brilliant picturization of an Indian ceremonial dance. Pruett Carter received honorable mention for "Mexican Shacks."

The exhibition occupies the large inner gallery and all of the Galeria Real except a portion in the center. This center portion contains a group of paintings by early California painters, and is part of a retrospective exhibit, the rest of which will be found in the small exhibition gallery. An interesting historical showing, we withhold comment upon it until another Sunday.

The north wall of the Salon's main gallery is particularly brilliant. Bluemenschein's "Legend," a mosaic of minute detail cleverly stylized, containing a multitude of figures in its design the theme of which is the form made by an Indian wearing a blanket, occupies the center

News of the Art World

Taft Lecture Today

Lorado Taft, noted sculptor and lecturer from Chicago, will give his lecture, "My Dream Museum," accomplished by lantern slides, at the Los Angeles Museum this afternoon at 2:15. In this lecture Mr. Taft presents a universal course in the world's sculpture together with his idea of a museum of sculpture, which, in the form of plaster casts, will bring to Americans the sculptural heritage of all the pasts.

Pasadena's "Oil" Annual

The Pasadena Art Institute announces its fourth annual exhibition of oil paintings open to all artists residing in California, to be held January 4 to February 1. All works must be received by the 27th inst. Entry blanks may be obtained at the institute. The judges—presumably of both entry and awards—will be Hanson Puthuff, Paul Lauritz and E. Roscoe Shrader. Details of prizes will be announced later.

Dog Etchings and Portraits

Edith Derry Willson's recent portraits of dogs and a new group of her etchings of dogs are on exhibition at Cannell & Chaffin's until the 20th inst.

Entry Blanks Avialable

Entry blanks for the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts Annual Exhibition may be obtained by artists from the art department of the Los Angeles Museum.

New Museum Exhibits

Paintings, oils and water colors by Carlos Merida, regarded as the foremost Guatemalan painter, form a new exhibition at the Los Angeles Museum. Another consists of the work of Millard Sheets, Los Angeles artist attaining national fame. German posters form a third new exhibition.

Shows in Cafe

Vernon Morse is holding an exhibition of oils and water colors at the Dyas Carleton Cafe. His works aim at harmony with California Spanish homes.

Preston Duncan Photos

Photographs by Preston Duncan of Hollywood form an exhibition ending tomorrow at the Fine Arts Building, U.C.L.A.

Screen on View

Brian Desmond-Hurst is exhibiting, at the Hollywood Book Store, a five-panel screen portraying the "Coronation of the Madonna." Some of Mr. Hurst's paintings were purchased by the Luxembourg in Paris.

Ecclesiastical Art

An exhibition of ecclesiastical art from the collection of Victor Merlo opened yesterday at the Central Library. Those who remember the Greek and Etruscan art objects from this collection will expect to see an exhibit of unusual interest.

Palm Springs Gallery

The art gallery in El Paseo, Palm Springs, opened under the direction of Atanas Katchamakoff, sculptor, on the 6th inst., with a collection of American and European paintings and works of sculpture by the director. An old master exhibition is announced for the New Year.

Artists and Craftsmen

The Southard Studios, at Fifth and Maple, are holding an exhibition this month of work by "Contemporary Artists and Artist-Craftsmen." The showing is open afternoons and evenings.

Book of Woodcuts

"Twenty-five Woodcuts" is a book of prints by Prescott Chaplin, with an introduction by Edward D. Venturini, just published in Los Angeles by Murray & Harris. The cuts vary in interest. At their best, especially in the solid pieces like "Tortillas," "Decoration" and "Workers," they maintain Chaplin's unique ability in this medium. Mr. Venturini, however, gets his art history badly mixed. It is news that Morris, the Rousseaus and Millet were Pre-Raphaelites opposing the naughty outsider, Burne-Jones. But the cuts are good.

In Sierra Madre

Paintings by Jean Mannheim of Pasadena will be shown in the Little Gallery at Sierra Madre City Hall this month, opening tomorrow evening.

Taft Dinner Guest

Lorado Taft, noted sculptor who is in Southern California for a series of lectures, will be an honor guest at the California Art Club's Christmas dinner meeting, Thursday December 11.

Entry Blanks Available

Entry blanks for the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts Annual Exhibition may be obtained by artists from the art department of the Los Angeles Museum.

SMALL CANVAS FINDS PLACE IN HOMES

Dana Bartlett, himself a well-known painter, always enjoyed the small paintings produced by his brother artists and liked to paint small things himself. But he found it exceedingly difficult to sell small canvases, despite the fact that some of the freshest work the artists do is often found in the more condensed size of the sketch-box panel.

Then he got an idea. Why not open an art gallery of his own and concentrate on the small painting? That was the idea behind the Bartlett Gallery on West First street which has succeeded in opening up an entirely new field of art patrons.

"Banner Gorge"

From the painting by Charles Reiffel awarded the "Painters of the West" Gold Medal at the Biltmore Salon.

Woodcut by Eric Gill at Zeitlin's Book Shop.

WE NOW have an opportunity to complete our view, here in the West, of that individual figure, the late Arthur B. Davies. His oils and his very personal aquatints and lithographs we know; now the Dalzell Hatfield Galleries show a large group of his water colors, most of them done during the last two years of his life before his lonely death in Italy, and in these his feeling for fugitive beauty finds its clearest expression.

Davies, as a youth, loved classic symbolism. As a mature artist, mountain and grove were abodes of spirits, gods walked on the margins of lakes and God animated the limbs of men and women. So the white oxen in the green field are sacred. We feel it. And the peaks, rising in such unexpected beauty of color, are sacred, too.

His power to evoke a complete landscape with a few slight washes of color recalls Turner. The quality of his color is as cooly delicious as the tone color of Debussy, the musician.

In addition to the large showing of his water colors, impressions are here from all the Davies plates now available.

IN SEVENTEENTH century Holland man was not, as in Renaissance Italy, an audacious grasper of power, a near-god, defiantly attitudinizing on vast frescoed walls, a magnificent giant dwarfing nature to fill in the empty spaces between his limbs. Freed of Spain, separated from Flanders, winning commercial supremacy through business sagacity, the new Holland, remembering tyrannies of a foreign aristocracy, was obstinately democratic, bourgeois and protestant. Such a state will like decent portraits, realistic or romantic landscapes, and will suspect the ecstasy of love and religious feeling in the unpopular later works of Rembrandt.

But such a state will also like wholesome air, pleasant depictions of scenes it knows. Here, then, modern landscape painting was born.

The Beskow Galleries are showing, this month, an interesting group of pictures from this century which offers so many parallels with our own.

The landscapes are the immediately impressive part, Allaert van Everdingen's "Winter Scene" delighting at once by its careful treatment of the most delicate details of this romantic Scandinavian scene. It was Everdingen who created the mode for those northern gorges and waterfalls which appealed to the romantic side of the flat-landed Dutch, a mode that even the great Jacob van Ruisdael was compelled to follow in his embittered old age. It is interesting to compare these two, Ruisdael having here a little picture, probably a Dutch scene. The Everdingen is a jolly picture, a magnificent example of this artist in full power. The Ruisdael is modest, yet even its modesty reveals this artist's immeasurable superiority in the knowledge of form and space. Ruisdael is one of Holland's real artists. Everdingen is one of her host of good reconteurs in paint.

There is another artist in landscape here. Phillips De Koninck, whose Dutch sense of air and space fuses the details of a valley, filled with roads, bridges, people and houses.

Among the portraits is the large Jan Pourbous portrait of an elderly couple, a good small portrait of a man by Karel Fabritius, one of the best of Rembrandt's pupils; and a very good portrait of a man by Michiel Janaz van Mierevelt. Jan Breugel and Lucas van Valckenborch, both pupils of Breugel the Elder, and properly belonging to a day when the distinctively Dutch school had scarcely emerged from the Flemish, are both represented.

Space will not permit mention of the other genre and landscape pictures here, but the show throughout, while scarcely composed of masterpieces, does justice to the time in which Rembrandt, Hals, Vermeer and Ruisdael were supported by a host of good painters in a small country.

ERIC GILL, a group of whose wood-cuts and original drawings are on view just now at the Zeitlin Book Shop, occupies a position in England, relative to the printed page, analogous to that of Rockwell Kent in America, though Gill is more subtle and less athletic in his art. For his style he is indebted much to medieval English art, that of the churchly illuminators and the cathedral sculptors. He himself is a sculptor.

Gill celebrates love and religion and draws like an angel, having eyes only for the significant lines and shapes. His typography, like his drawing, is vigorously chaste and distinguished. Like the medieval artists his design is at once conventional and infused with, because springing from, life.

PRESTON DUNCAN

Photographs by Preston Duncan will be on exhibition in the Fine Arts Gallery, U.C.L.A., from the 9th to the 19th inst.

HEARTH EVOLUTION TOLD

A nice sense of the historic sentiment behind the modern fireplace is cherished by the craftsmen at the Colonial Shops who carve mantels and design dogs, tongs, screens and all the other useful or decorative objects that contribute to man's enjoyment as he sprawls comfortably before a massive Elizabethan hearth or sits discreetly before a more refined fireplace of eighteenth century English design.

If you talk with these craftsmen they will point out that the hearth is man's most cherished possession. Is it not the descendant of that civilizing flame poor, tortured Prometheus heroically brought to our ancestors! Does not all our development date from that audacious piece of heroism?

A black smoky cave. Savage figures, clad in skins, coughing and grunting in the eerie shadows, ever watchful of the precious flame. Later, in a rude hut a desperate woman, choking, pokes a hole in the roof. Feudal barons build a metal hood out from the wall and the chimney evolves. The lintel grows with Elizabethan peace into the decorative mantel.

Then in the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries came the full development of the elaborate chimney piece and overmantel and what was already the most important feature of the room became the most beautiful feature also.

Now, say these Los Angeles craftsmen, when we go into a house our first look is toward the fireplace. Is it beautiful and cheerful? If it is we feel the presence of a pleasant family life.

And, being creatures of sentiment, we feel behind the actual fireplace the long dim history of man, cherishing fire, the civilizer. Small wonder we hold the hearth in almost religious veneration.

MUSEUM WING TO OPEN

In the new wing of the Los Angeles Museum, to be formally opened November 7, four galleries will be available for the display of art.

ERICH GILL SHOW

Wood cuts by Erich Gill, regarded by many as England's foremost stone cutter and wood cutter, are on exhibition at the Zeitlin Book Store.

ELIE FAURE SUMS UP

His History of Art Given Finale in New "The Spirit of the Forms"

Never has the world been so inquisitive about art as it is now. What is it? Whence does it arise and why? How should it be looked at? The multitude of critical essays, excavations, histories of art, have filled the world's libraries with volumes on the subject.

Among art histories that of Elie Faure remains unique. Through the medium of rhythmic prose this Frenchman sought to parallel the rhythms of fecundity and sterility, of effort and exhaustion, that underlay the world's creative periods. "The Spirit of the Forms," indeed, might well have been the title of the entire history, of which this, published by Harpers and translated by Walter Pach, is volume five; for it is precisely that which Faure regards as of value in art. The form, except for the purpose of its period and in the hands of its creator, is useless, lifeless. But what made the spirit that molded it give it precisely that form and no other?

Here then we shall expect or receive no pedantic series of measurements; shall, in fact, find this author mistrustful of formula that pretend to measure and explain Greek, Egyptian or any other art. But we shall feel the very current of life itself quickening those forms into being, shall see the ever-recurring decay of the forms just at that moment when their beauty matches their vitality.

On his title page he places two lines from Montaigne:

"I do not paint the being,
I paint the passage."

and there is the essence of his method.

If you want precise information regarding the painted output of Titian or Teniers, this is not your man. But if you would trace the analogy between a skeleton and a ship, a Roman building and a fac-

ART AND THE AVERAGE MAN

His Art Judgment Is Keen in Respect of Inventions of Our Day

BY ARTHUR MILLIER

The late Arthur B. Davies, one of America's distinguished artists, once defined art as "Anything the hands of love have touched" seven words he expressed the craftsman's secret and brought us close to the elusive essence of art.

We live in one of the great fermentation periods of civilization. Under our eyes the face of the world is changing. And now—as at all times—it is the artist, the one who works lovingly with tools, who is fashioning the forms of the new world.

We live in a century, which, by comparison with its immediate predecessor, is a stupendous Renaissance of art. Not that we can necessarily claim greater artists than certain individuals of that century. In France, England and America it produced a succession of giants, particularly in the fields of painting and literature. A century that can claim Constable and Turner in England; Ingres, Delacroix, Courbet, Corot, Degas, Renoir, Daumier, Cezanne, Monet and Seurat in France; Ryder, Homer, Eakins and Inness in America—to mention only outstanding painters—automatically takes its place among the great periods of that art. How great they were the world is only now beginning to realize.

ART WAS DEBASED

But they were officially unrecognized in an age that had so completely lost sight of the essential principles of art that, in retrospect, it can only be regarded as the lowest art period in history. In the academies and the factories the basest imitation crowded out every attempt at imaginative creation. The pictures of Alma Tadema and Watts, of Gerome and Bougereau, of Bierstadt, claimed the fervent admiration of the people, high and low, echoing the debased products of the factory—the bad furniture, the nightmares of cast iron, the dead architectural ornament that came from the so-called lower planes of art.

We are not yet free of these things. The multitude will still prefer a painting by Bougereau to one by Cezanne; and it is quite possible that the Cezanne was never meant for the multitude. Not everyone can find the time to be a connoisseur of painting which is a highly specialized art. It was one of the faults of the nineteenth century that people who had no sense of fitness in the things they used every day, pretended to an interest in the fine arts. They really had none. They were interested in fairy tales, pretty girls, pictures of their homes—anything but the proportion, the harmony, the balanced movement, the fitting fulfilment of need which are the marks of art.

It is in this regard that our century shows a rebirth of art sense. Our popular art is returning to first principles. For this we can thank the machine, the incalculable new tool so feared and hated by the false artists and false prophets of the century which gave it birth. As they used it it was a hateful thing indeed for they tried to make it imitate the hand work of the past.

AVERAGE MAN KNOWS

The man of today who is interested in the art of yesterday or even pretends to such an interest. There is a very good reason. The average person confronted with a picture will ask himself: "Does it look like?" a question that is foreign to his real interest in things. He is much more interested in how things work than in how they look. Confront him with one of the things that belong to Dan Cupid's records for the past week reveal a number of entanglements and erasures that bear repeating in this column. We note that Time has carried forward in his books the names of Constance Bennett and the Marquis De la Falaise, while a question mark appears after the names of Constance's youngest sister Joan, and John Considine. The Marquis is so faithful that he writes his lady fair while she is on location at Yosemite, while Mr. Considine is seen in Hollywood escorting Jeannette Loff to Cinema-tional functions.

Dorothy Mackaill occupied a box recently in front of us with Tom Gallery of the U.S.C.-Notre Dame game. Where was Zasu? But Dorothy is fickle. A few hours later we were seen at the Mayfair dance with Marshall Duffield, the U.S.C. coach. June Collyer attended the game with a collegiate-looking youth. She never did go in for actors. Marty Brill, the Notre Dame halfback, was seen casting admiring eye on Jean Harlow at the Mayfair dance.

Unofficial information has leaked out to the effect that Rita La Roy and Ben Hirshfield, actors' agent, are engaged.

Joel McCrea, Blackton's attractive leading lady Gloria stole a march on Beverly the 6th inst. and eloped with Cornell Woolrich, youthful playwright. They are still waiting their father's approbation.

Announcement was made recently of the engagement of Mae Clarke to John McCormick, erstwhile husband of Colleen Moore. They entertained a group of friends at the Mayfair dance, including Carmelita Geraghty, Estelle Morrison, H. W. Swanson, Benjamin Glazer and Carey Wilson.

Jewels Worn by the Cinemalite

Mrs. B. P. Schulberg, Mrs. Albert Levino and Rosalind Shaffer received the guests at another delightful affair given at the Ambassador Tuesday of last week. It was the benefit bridge-tea for the Progressive School of Hollywood. This was essentially a Cinemaland affair whose outstanding feature was the jewelry worn by lovely young stars of Hollywood.

MRS. B. P. SCHULBERG

Dorothy Jordan modeled in several gowns, a black net evening dress, a white satin formal dinner gown among them. But the jewels she wore were resplendent as well as quaint. With one gown she wore a necklace of diamonds more than 200 years of age. The diamonds were set in clusters, each cluster of seven diamonds overlapping the next one on the semi-long chain of white gold. Indeed, the brilliant jewels were so closely set together that they gave a heavy look, almost too heavy and too mature for the girlish beauty of Miss Jordan. Hedda Hopper's necklace was even more gorgeous. It, too, was more than 200 years of age with emeralds and pearls set in platinum. The emeralds were arranged in the shape of shamrock leaves with five emeralds to each leaf in the group of three. The pearls were in pendant clusters like grapes between the emerald shamrocks. Others who displayed jewelry were Lois Wilson, June Collier, Joyce Compton, Frances Dee and Carmel Myers. Lois Wilson's jewels were rose point diamonds, so many and so close together that the casual observer would think they were rhinestones. Mrs. Adela Rogers St. Johns Hyland was the sparkling mistress of ceremonies introducing the stars.

Nearly 1000 women were present at the bridge tables.

Sunday Evening Affair

Barbara Weeks, former New York actress now residing in Hollywood, was an honored guest Sunday evening at the home of the Carl Laemmles in Canon Drive, Beverly Hills. A new motion picture, not yet released, was shown in the private projection room, among those in attendance being Mr. and Mrs. Laemmle, senior, Carl Laemmle, Jr., Joan Marsh, Jerome Horwin and several New York friends of the hosts.

Dinner and Dance

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Page, 425 North Sweetzer avenue, entertained with a dinner party recently honoring Mrs. Jewell Hicks and her daughter, Miss Mabel Hicks, who were then guests at the Hollywood Knickerbocker and are now en route to Oklahoma City where they will pass the holiday season with relatives.

Following the dinner the group motored to the Ambassador and enjoyed dancing in the Cocoanut Grove. The guests were Dixie Lee, "Bing" Crosby, Kenneth McKenna, John Rutherford and the honorees.

In Chicago

Nick Stuart and Sue Carol will pass the holidays with Sue's mother in Chicago.

Entertain in New Home

Mr. and Mrs. Paul N. Boggs, Jr., (Dorothy Dwan) entertained in their new home last evening, the first affair to be given since their marriage last summer.

The invited guests were Mr. and Mrs. James Gleason, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hargraves (Helen Ferguson,) Mr. and Mrs. William Davey (Alice Mills,) Mr. and Mrs. Hoot Gibson (Sally Eilers,) Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hillman (Marion Nixon,) Dr. and Mrs. Harry Martin (Louella Parsons,) Mr. and Mrs. Hal Wallis (Louise Fazenda,) Mr. and Mrs. Walter Morosco (Corinne Griffith,) Mr. and Mrs. Sam Bernheim, (Evelyn Francisco,) Mr. and Mrs. Everett Dunlap, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Mansfield, Mr. and Mrs. Orlando Martin, Mr. and Mrs. George Thomas III, Mr. and Mrs. Monte Blue, Miss Elizabeth Boggs and Messrs. Harry Joe Brown, Campbell Bradt, Russell Gleason and A. C. Galbraith.

Mr. and Mrs. Boggs reside at 1010 Selby avenue, Westwood. The house and furnishings were gifts from the groom's parents at the time of the wedding.

Benefit Dinner

A number of screen celebrities will assist in making 600 orphans happy at the annual Christmas orphans' dinner party which members of the Sea Breeze Beach Club will give Christmas for the Santa Monica homeless and friendless children.

Among those who will assist in helping Santa Claus deliver his presents at the Christmas tree and entertain the children during the dinner will be Mmes. Ona Wilson Brown, William E. Keefe, Finis Fox, Auguste Blanchard and Frances Dee, Betty Boyd, Billie Dove, Elaine Baker, Charlotte Merriam, Ethlyne Clair, Pauline Starke and Nancy Drexel.

Writers' Club Plays

Society will be out in full force at the Writers' Club on play nights Wednesday and Thursday when the winter season will be opened with an especially brilliant group of plays, preceding which will be a number of dinner parties on both nights.

Mr. and Mrs. William Cowan (Lenore Coffee) have made reservations for fifty guests. Others who are entertaining are Messrs. and Mmes. E. Manchester Boddy, Rufus McCosh, Mark Larkin, Seward Cole, Charles D. Hall, Scott Darling, Fred Stanley, Philip Hurn, Paul Weidl, J. C. Shea, Irving Metzler, Ralph Joannes, De Witt Harlow, Waldemar Young, E. P. Heath, Alfred Reeve, John Jasper, Charles Dillon, Joe Sherman, Harold Howard, Joe Jackson, Paul Percy, R. J. Newton, J. F. Goodrish, Julian Josephson, William May Garland, Victor Potel, O. C. Kingsley, Charles Dunning, Mmes. Eugen Roth, L. L. Storrow, Madeline Brandeis; the Misses Belle Mitchell, Frances Marion, Katherine Van Blom, Edith Ryan, Mary Kitzelman, Agnes Leahy and Marie Gresham and Messrs. Paul Irving, Edward Clark, F. P. Harris, Edward Nock and S. S. Storrow.

Entertain at Luncheon

Mrs. Tom W. Bailey entertained at luncheon at the Writers last Monday in honor of Miss Lavinia Brown of Salt Lake City. The table was decorated with lavender and yellow sweet peas with corsage bouquet for the guests of the same flowers. Those present in addition to the honoree were Mmes. Creighton Brown, John Henderson and A. R. Bradshaw. Following the luncheon they played bridge at the home of Mrs. Bailey.

Charles West was host to eight friends on Sunday night at the Writers.

Dance Recitals Feature Season

During the Christmas season at the Norma Gould studios, two outstanding events are scheduled. The first will be in the form of a recital given in the school's studio-theater Saturday afternoon, the 20th inst. The program will include some new and appropriate dance compositions for children characteristic of Miss Gould's method, and will serve to present some potential artists. Among these are three granddaughters of L. E. Behymer. They are Lynn Moody, Enid Jean Malcom and Barbara Lee Behymer. The public is invited to this program.

The second event will be a children's party to be given at the studios on the afternoon of the 23rd inst. Two hundred invitations have been issued to the children students and their guests, who will all participate in fairy-like ceremonies, surprises and social dancing.

Motion-picture people of France are protesting that the proposed tax reductions will not benefit their trade sufficiently.

Sunday School Lesson

"The International Sunday School Lesson for December 21 is, A Christmas Lesson.—Luke ii:1-20.

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

It was in late January, a few years before the war, when my bitumen-bellated kelek, or goat-skin raft, reached ancient Asshur, on the Tigris River, the one-time capital of Assyria. Still the dining table of the genial German archeologists was adorned with a Christmas tree, in a land where no Christmas greens grow. There was something pathetic as well as beautiful about that touch of home and childhood memories, the little tree that was as a bridge stretching between the Tigris and the Rhine. During that visit I saw the steles and other monuments of the oldest Assyrian monarchies, and heard read the boastful inscriptions of the kings who reigned thousands of years ago. Nevertheless the wee, dried Christmas tree represented a greater and more significant sovereignty.

Two rules and deliveries that are as one are symbolized by all the far-flung preparations that are being made for the keeping of Christmas at this present moment—the child and the Christ who was Himself once a child.

FRESH WATER FOR STALE

Children are the real deliverers. They are the fresh springs that cleanse life's old pools. Existence would grow stale and intolerable without the bubbling newness and vitality of childhood. Fresh from God and free, the little ones come to do the great tasks of restoration.

We have to look to the young for our deliverances, for the old are not free. The silken cords of convention and relationship and association have bound us as by steel cables. That is why the world has known so few elderly reformers. Tradition and use and personal ties palsy the hand that would hold the sword of new service. Every person interested in social progress understands this full well. "Society" has slain more crusaders than the Saracens. A man cannot be "in society" and at the same time free to smite its sins.

So the unfettered youth must go forth to slay the dragons. When God planned a making over of the world, He sent a Babe to be its Redeemer. A myriad of poets have struck their lyres to the music of "Unto Us A Child is Born."

A SON AS SUCCESS

As of old the prophet exulted over the birth of a son, so our time is appraising with a new sense of value the child in our midst. All the superb educational equipment of the twentieth century, all the transforming legislation for child welfare, all the vast contributions of medicine and hygiene to the health of childhood are born of the Christmas spirit. Modern economics and philosophy are beginning with the babe.

One of the many messages that Christmas has for our overwise time is that a son is a success. Mary is the world's greatest woman, because of her Son. Nowadays we ask that a man make money or get his name into "Who's Who," or figure in the newspapers, if he is to be called a success. Whereas the truth, which is older than Christmas, is that whoso has handed on the torch of life to the next generation, and whose name has been kept clean and bright as the flame, is a success of the first and highest order.

Wherein is the world's hope of peace today? There is but one adequate ground for a peace that will last and rule mankind. That peace is according to the Christmas program: "Peace on earth, among men of good will." Nothing but the new mind of good will which the Bethlehem Babe has brought can establish peace among men. It is futile to look for it anywhere short of this.

When good will comes—and it comes as fast as the real rule of Christ—there will be no more hymns of hate no more sowing of jealousy by professional diplomacy; no more intrigue and double-dealing; no more terror in the hearts of the little peoples lest they be devoured; no more crushing weight of militarism upon the shoulders of the poor; no more secret and sinister designs upon a neighbor's rights and privileges. All the world will live forever in the sweetness of the Christmas spirit when Christ reigns and His good will is the law of life.

The present influence of the revolutionizing Infant is vividly suggested by a Christmas conversation once reported in the Sunday-School Times. A rural Illinois storekeeper is talking to a salesman in a Chicago wholesale house.

"I came down State street and seems to me I never saw it jammed so tight before. Department stores, toy stores, candy stores, music stores—every one packed to a crush, and the whole street filled up besides. Trucks of mail order houses piled high up like loads of hay. Take all millions of people. I don't believe there's one of them that Christmas doesn't make a difference to—railroad, street car, seller, buyers, manufacturers, postoffice, Board of Trade, newspapers—I mean fixt in a business way. And it is the same all over. How Christmas business does shake up the earth!"

The keen alert eyes of the general salesman looked the young man in the face.

"It does change the world," he said. "And how wonderful it is to remember that it all began 'way back there with the Baby in a manger."

Medals Given Piano Pupils

A number of medals and scholarships have been awarded to students of Phillip Troniz, pianist, within several months, the most recent being a Juilliard Fellowship, which was won by Helen Nagin, and a $400 scholarship which was given to Armando Loredo.

Mr. Troniz will present his students in recital at the Biltmore some time in January. On the 19th inst., the associate teachers of his studios, Rosalyne Asner-Lesser and Eva Law, will present their junior, intermediate and advanced pupils in a recital at 643 South Berendo street, and on the following day, Miss Law's 14-year-old pupil, Marjorie Kroll, will give a program there.

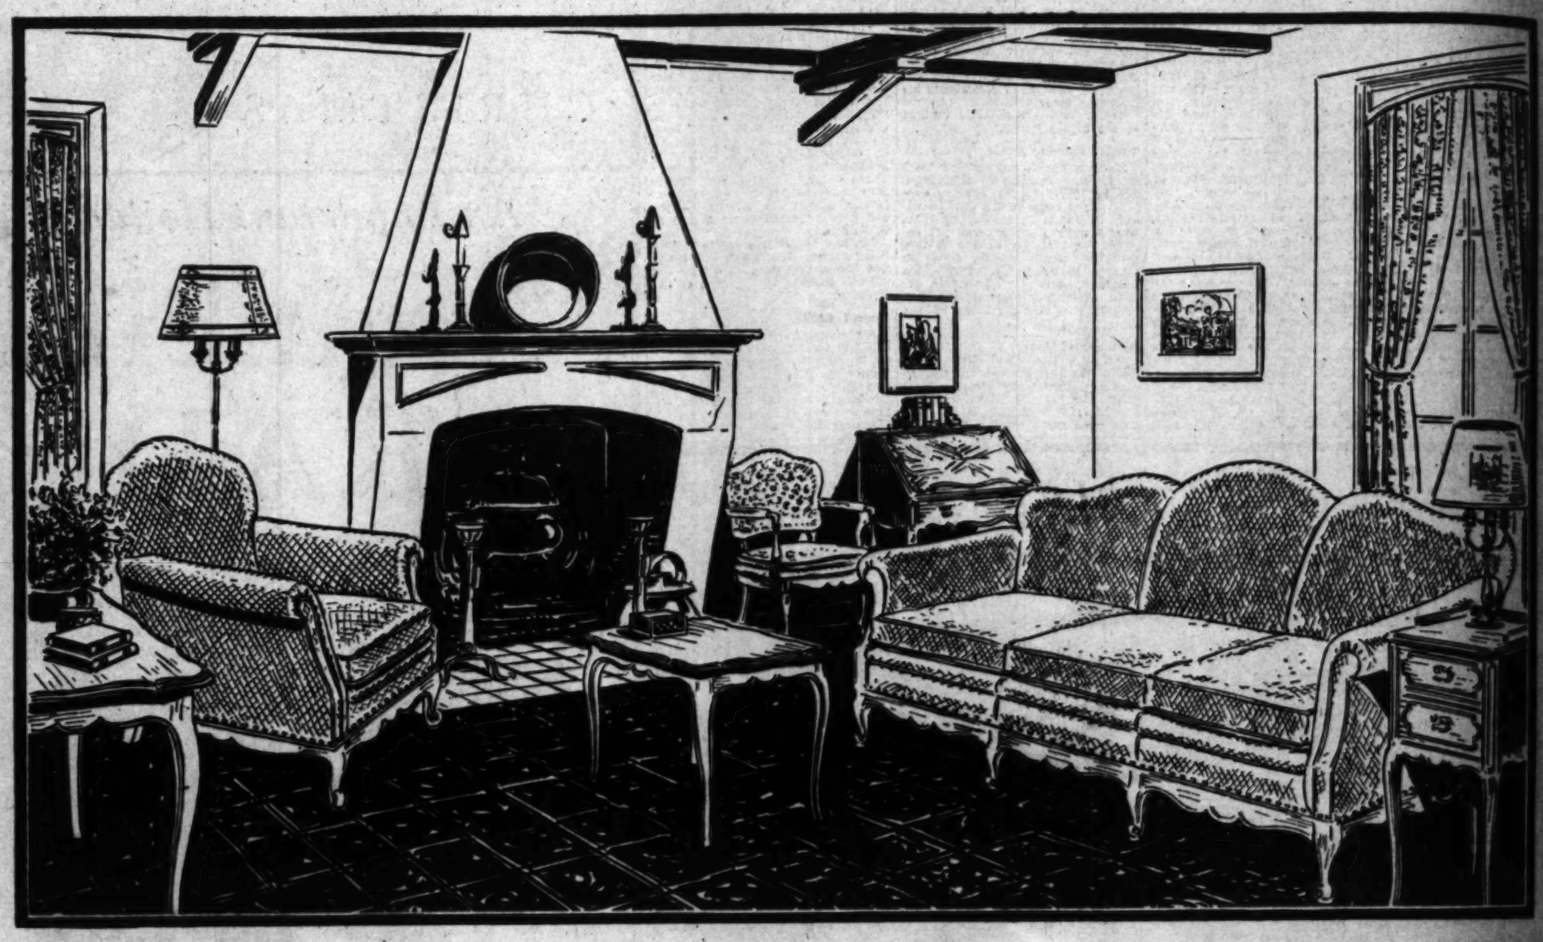
"The Provence" ... a new French Provincial ensemble by Barker Bros.



Sofa, $169; Easy Chair, $89; Occasional table, $34.50; Coffee table, $19.75; Commode, $39.50; Desk, $59; Occasional chair, $49.50

"The Provence" Living Room

Again Barker Bros. have created a furniture ensemble planned to meet a special California need . . . "The Provence." A style that is graciously charming, sophisticated, informal . . . a perfect expression of our modern living, yet an adaptation of eighteenth century French furniture as it was interpreted in the provinces of France.

It is easy to trace the influence of Louis XV designs in the grace and sophistication of the charming living room pieces of the "Provence" ensemble. Yet its provincial simplification makes it delightfully informal. It's the perfect background for the modern costumes of today—it has the same feeling—a subtle combination of elaborate grace and modern simplicity. The coverings introduce 18th century fabrics: toiles, chintzes and damasks. It is made of genuine walnut, rubbed down and waxed to give it a soft patina. Only a few of the lovely pieces can be shown here. See the complete ensemble for the living room . . . you'll find the prices very moderate.

SIXTH FLOOR

'Provence' Accessories

Bedspreads of toile with matching comforters, bed spreads, $6.95; comforters, $12.50; rayon spreads in shaded peach or green at $8.95 and $9.85.

Table linens in natural crash—printed effects, colored Chinese grass linen or even the more formal damasks may be used in the dining room.

Mason's "Oakmont" in rich cream complemented by deep ruby glassware for the dining ensemble. 46-piece service, $68.75; ruby tumblers, $10 dozen.

Lamps in toile, old copper or brass—Dresden, too, for the more formal ensemble. Toile shades, print decorated shades and tailored silk types.

"The Provence" Bedroom

For those who love the satiny surface of well-rubbed wood grains, "Provence" is made of genuine walnut, rubbed down to a soft mellow finish. For those who prefer color, it is shown in a charming combination of green and warm ivory enamel in an exquisite crackle finish with decorations that follow the feeling of the 18th century style . . . In three-piece combination: Bed, chest, dresser or vanity; the price in crackle enamel finish is $229 . . . the 3 pieces in walnut, $179.

$179

"Provence" Dining Room

Very simple and very charming . . . "The Provence" dining group is delightful for California homes. Its Louis XV influence is evident in the graceful cabriole legs, the flowing curves of the shaped apron. It is made of genuine walnut with a beautiful rich finish. The decoration is achieved by simple carved motifs and a tiny moulded edge . . . very effective. Excellently constructed throughout and impeccably styled, it is a remarkable value . . . the 8-piece combination: Table, buffet, 5 side chairs and arm chair, $249.

FILM CHIEFS CEMENT DYNASTIES

Royal Heirs and Heirs Apparent of Screendom Being Groomed to Succeed to Thrones of Fathers With Carl Laemmle, Jr., Outstanding Young Success to Date

Our ruling monarchs of the screen industry, having achieved the pioneering, are now making the beginnings of establishing dynasties. Royal heirs and heirs-apparent are, like the Prince of Wales, being groomed to succeed to thrones. Heiresses, as is usual in monarchies, don't come off so well.

Of course, Carl Laemmle, Jr., is the outstanding heir of the Laemmle dynasty to date, only 22 years of age now, and prince-regent for his royal papa in the capacity of general production manager at Universal City, a $30,000,000 corporation, for over a year now. Carl, Jr., is an April baby of 1908, and April babies are always smart and ooze executive ability. Carl, Jr., was born the very same year that Papa Laemmle made his first picture, the first step toward becoming the Napoleon of filmdom. Junior was through school at 15 and went to Universal City instead of to Pennsylvania University. He decided that was the best university for him, and he learned the business without the slightest encouragement from the personnel, who rather resented this youngster being thrust upon them.

PRODUCER IN TEENS

At 16 years of age, Junior was making the Collegian series of forty shorts, which proved big profit makers. At 21, when the advent of talkies threw the studios into a panic, Papa Laemmle made young Carl general manager, and went off to Europe. Carl, Jr., read and bought stories, hired directors and actors and supervised every detail of production. "King of Jazz" and "All Quiet on the Western Front" more than justified Papa's faith in sonny boy. And the resentment at Universal turned to awed admiration. So much so, that they almost deify him now.

His office, done in regal reds and dark mahogany, is a veritable throne room. He looks such a babe sitting in his big chair behind his great desk. Like his dad, he is only about five feet tall, and is very slender and youthful. Universal pictures are his whole life. Next year, he says, they will only put out twenty first-class pictures instead of the usual forty, of which a percentage were of indifferent value.

Out at Paramount studio, there is a conspiracy of silence anent Jesse L. Lasky, Jr., and the professional interest she is taking in production. Positively no personal publicity. Nevertheless, this 21-year-old Jesse has been active in the foreign department, criticising pictures, etc., and is obviously being groomed to succeed to responsibility.

At Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Arthur Loew, 30-year-old son of Marcus, is in charge of all foreign business outside of the United States. In fact, he is already losing a little hair over it. He is well liked, even if his wife, daughter of Adolf Zukor of Paramount, has just divorced him.

Louis B. Mayer himself has only daughters, but he has done his best by marrying them into executive circles. Thus Edith is married to Benjamin Goetz, who assists production with Sol Wurtzel at Fox studio, and Irene is married to David Selznick, assistant general manager of Paramount.

Joseph Schenck, president of United Artists, and Nicholas Schenck, president of M.-G.-M., are brothers, but so far no Schenck offspring appear as heirs-apparent.

RELATIVES DEFENDED

Universal has often been joshed unmercifully on account of the number of Laemmle relatives who hold jobs there. At a banquet in honor of Papa Laemmle recently, some naughty wags showed a picture of marching thousands, described as Laemmle relations.

"But they are all good workers and not a detriment to the organization," defends young Carl.

These relations include William Wyler, director, second cousin to young Carl; Ernest Laemmle, director of German versions of pictures, son of Siegfred Laemmle and cousin to Carl, Jr.; Eddie Laemmle, son of Joseph Laemmle and cousin to Carl, Jr., is another director; Alfred Stern, a youngster of 20, son of Carl, Jr.'s aunt, is an assistant director. This list is particularly interesting as it has never been published before on account of the persistent joshing, but young Carl now declares he's proud of 'em, so there, and they are a pretty smart family.

Feminine appendages of executives are rare, or else kept incommunicado. Couldn't verify any of the dark hints about sisters-in-law and female cousins in the stenographic and cutting departments of the various studios.

Young Adolph Zukor, Jr., is said to work in the New York office of Paramount, but has not been considered old enough to intrust with any real responsibility yet.

The fact remains that the film capital is governed by less than half a dozen families, who are intermarrying and generally cementing their dynasties. Outside of Joseph Schenck, who was once a barker on Coney Island and rose to great power and respect in the industry, who married Norma Talmadge; Irving Thalberg, who married Norma Shearer; the late Harry Warner, who was married to Lina Basquette, they rarely marry actresses. Hal Wallis, general manager at First National, is married to Louise Fazenda, but that happened before he became an executive.

INTERESTING POINT

An interesting point is that, while most of their dads were ordinary civilians in very different walks of life to begin with, Laemmle, Sr., having managed a clothing store, William Fox having been a furrier, Jesse L. Lasky a musician, this rising generation of executives were born to the film purple, cred and reared in the industry, essentially descendants of the founders of their family trees. If many of them prove as triumphantly capable as Carl Laemmle, Jr., these dynasties may easily prove glorious. So far, however, Papa Laemmle can crow the loudest.

RECORDS ARE PROGRESSING

excellent addition to the record library. It is an abrupt reading but very, very clean, technically and taken at a sparkling tempo.

Columbia records are also enriched by the "scenes Alsaciennes" which make a miniature light opera without singing. Did Massenet intend these delightful sketches to be incorporated in an opera? The playing is done by a good French orchestra and is well done.

Stock

The Chicago Orchestra, which has been conducted for several decades by Frederick Stock, makes a Victor recording of "The Bat" Waltzes, the famous Johann Strauss "Fledermaus." It is precise conducting but not particularly graceful or Viennese.

Budapest Quartet

The Budapest string quartet which is well liked in Europe, has made a new Victor recording of the Borodin "Nocturne." It is colored by a prominent bass, but moves smoothly along withal. Personally, I prefer the phrasing of the Flonzaleys in this. The Budapest group give it a less definite interpretation with a hardly breathing stillness in the finale.

Samaroff

Mme. Samaroff has retired from the arduous work of music reviewing and has entered once more the concert field. Her Debussy "Engulfed Cathedral" and Prelude interpretations are rather hard for overtone production. "Malagueana," by Ernesto Lecuona is more to her talents. Having lived near the border in Texas she catches the Spanish swing.

Mischa Elman would do well to play something else than "Traumerei" and the Franko arrangement of Schubert's "Valse Sentimentale." The performance for Victor is not remarkable, but it is adequately and deliberately done.

Popular arias from "Samson and Delilah" are sung for Victor by Sigrid Onegin, contralto. The rich quality of her voice redems rather banal phrasing.

The versatile Yehudi Menuhin has made two new records of modern Spanish composers for violin. "Chant d'Espagne," by Gustav Samaseuilh is seasoned with piquant dissonance and Yehudi plays it sadly with a richly resonant tone. In contrast on the other side he plays an arrangement by Louis Persinger, his teacher, of "La Cancion del Olvido," by Serrano. It is melodic and short and embellished with harmonics. Persinger's arrangement of the Spohr Rondo completes the record with attractive musical fireworks which are delightful.

OLD INSTRUMENTS

The Henri Casadeus Society of Ancient Instruments has made recordings of two delightful old numbers: "Plaisir d'Amour" and "Land of Love" Minuet. They are astonishing records of strange string sounds of unusual beauty and they offer the fragrance of a more graceful day.

Handel's "Yea 'Mid Chains" and "I Press Thee The Bosom," are quaint old arias sung by splendid Wagnerian bass. He has a flexible voice and fortunately does not sing fortissimo continuously. The grandiloquent arias are well accomplished. The second one has an especially good piano accompaniment. It is not the oratorio type but a difficult old ballad eminently fitting to display a wide range and magnificent quality of voice.

Issay Doborowen, the Russian conductor, who is to take up the baton in San Francisco for the second half of the season, sends over a Columbia recording of Sinding's "Rustle of Spring," and Dvorak's Slavonic Dance No. 1. Naturally, the second is better than the first because Sinding's piano composition was never meant for orchestra, and because Doborowen trasses it off rather lightly without due regard to the demands of recording. It blurs, and is too fast. The Dvorak has the Russian flaire.

A GOOD BOOK FOR GIRLS

GOLDEN RIVER. By Margaret Young Lull. Harper & Brothers, New York.

A first-class school story for older girls. Marta at an exclusive San Francisco school, where her country clothes and her lack of ease prevent her from making friends, is doubly unfortunate in that the most popular girl in school is the daughter of an enemy of her father. That it all comes out right, with Marta's character strengthened and new roads to happiness opening, is one reason why it is sure to delight girls.

to our age and he reveals something close to connoisseurship. Of an automobile, an airplane, a speedboat, a bathtub, he is an excellent judge. He will not be put off here with meaningless ornament, with unsuitable design; or at least not for long. The trend in all these things has been toward the utmost fitness of purpose. The appearance of them automatically expressed that fitness more perfectly, and therefore more beautifully, as the problems of fitting these machines to their functions became better understood and solved. And the man in the street hailed with enthusiasm each new improvement in closely it reflected improvement in appearance because he realized how performance.

In these fields the creative artist has been at work in our time. We may not know his name. Often he may not have thought of himself as an artist. But he was and is, known or unknown, someone who delights in so organizing things that they work easily and well. That is the essence of any problem and an artist is one who solves problems. To make a machine work or to make a design work require the same kind of creative imagination. Glancing backward we discover that the great Renaissance painters and sculptors were also engineers and architects.

Our age is moving rapidly toward a similar understanding. Architects—who for so long have countenanced the false division of the art of building into "art"—which was their province—and essential structure—which was the province of the scientific engineer—are at length beginning to realize that architecture is still what it always was—the art of planning and raising edifices. The plan is the functional problem, the raising is the structural problem—the same problems and in the same order in which they appear in any human activity.

To the ordinary man this would seem axiomatic. But to the artist, architect and designer, slowly emerging into the light of common sense from the darkness of false education, it has not seemed so. In consequence the term "artist" calls up in the mind of the average man a vision of a shiftless, visionary being who, lacking any grasp of the actualities of life, takes refuge in an effeminate realm of flowing ties, pink teas and paint. This false conception made it all the more difficult for the man in the street to recognize a true artist, because of course, the true artist bears no resemblance to such a vision. There have been cases where a true artist, who is really a fine workman solving real problems in his work, has affected the manners of the popular image described above in order to win sufficient recognition to provide him with a living.

It is another straw in the wind that the artist in our day has practically discarded all marks of professional distinction. He looks like a workman, a business man or a professional man. If he is tricked out in a queer manner it is usually because he wishes to sell himself and hence sell his product. Many a pompous ass gains currency for his uninspired wares in this way.

But these things are waning. The clear dictum of Louis Sullivan, the Chicago architect, uttered many years ago, has found responses around the world. "Form follows function," said Sullivan, simply restating a principle that the humbler sort of craftsman and the great artist has always unconsciously followed. Gradually the truth expressed by those three words is becoming the principle upon which our age is building. With the art of ancient Greece—to which we still refer as classic because of its measured proportion—before his eyes, Socrates, reputed the wisest man of that civilization, said the same thing when he declared that what was useful was, of necessity, beautiful.

The New in Stores & Homes

Novelties, Ideas, and Suggestions

By OLIVE GRAY

One button gone! A link misplaced! When the man hurries home from office to don dress clothes for the dinner or evening function, how cross he is, and how he blames his better half, and still worse, both are starting to the happy affair in anything but a happy mood. But, if she will present him with one of those dress-suit cabinets, the holiday festivities will be all that they should be. Contained in a set of drawers are the dress shirts, waistcoats, ties, hose, handkerchiefs, mufflers, and, oh blessed! buttons for tuxedo and for full evening wear, all there together and all in authentic mode.

No wondering what or where. With purchase of these accessories a certain one of the high-class stores presents the cabinet, free. Truly a useful, a beautiful and a happiness-providing gift, from her to him.

Formality For Him

Using that formal dress cabinet as a criterion. With the tuxedo suit, which still prevails for all save the most ultra-formal occasions, the shirt with white pique bosom, in one of several designs. The same shirt, with either one or two studs, is correct for either tuxedo or full dress. Black bow tie, of course, for either. With tuxedo the black waistcoat, single or double-breasted; white with formal dress. With tuxedo, black onyx links and buttons or studs, with white pearl centers; with full dress, white pearl, or perhaps crystal buttons, of like design. The handkerchief, in fine white linen, with hand-run threads in black, for either dress. A white silk muffler, with threads of black in border. Hose, of black silk with white clocks, or black silk-ribbed hose and, of course, black patent-leather pumps.

All or Any

All, or any of these accessories make excellent gifts for men; and gifts which would be highly appreciated and especially so, by busy men who feel that they have no time for selecting the right articles for occasions more or less infrequent; but who like to appear well dressed when they accept invitations, and especially for the gayeties incidental to the holidays. Accessories may fit in well with the gift budget, since prices are very flexible.

His Christmas Tux

If, for the holiday season, he needs a new tuxedo, he or you may be glad to learn that one of the leading stores where men's wear in authentic styles is dispensed, is holding an opportune sale of tuxedo suits. Excellent in quality, these suits are appreciably lowered in prices at present.

Little Change

Happily for men, and for wives who guide their husbands' clothes adventures, men's clothes are not subject to the frequent changes in mode, which affect women's attire. Tuxedos, for example, have met with very slight, in fact, quite unnoticeable change, in several seasons. However, those little accessories, which make for correct appearance, do change from season to season; hence, the opportunity for gift-giving, along these lines.

Russian Influence

The Russian influence, so strongly evinced in clothes for women, has broken into the realm of men's wear. Russian pajamas, in high colors, and bearing the coat-of-arms of the country from which they were derived, are among the worthwhile gifts for men. Bright blues, reds, yellows and other colors vie with all black in these pajamas, which may be used either for the lounge, or for nightwear.

The embroidered coat-of-arms, in black and gold color, lends a sumptuous air. Quite inexpensive are these suits, and warm, since fashioned from a rather heavy weave in cotton, with a glossy surface.

On Tick

Remember the phrase of our grandperes, "On tick"? They did not think so well of this term, however, as we do, in the present era. A great boon to many, is the installment plan, or to put it more diplomatically, the deferred-payment plan.

What more convenient to the young man who wishes, above all else, to present his "her" with a wrist watch for Christmas? He cares to select a really good watch; one which will, every minute in every day, throughout the entire year, tick his name to her. And now, "tick" comes to his rescue, since he may not have at hand the full amount for the gift. A high-class and reliable jewelry house, providing this convenient credit plan, appears as a real friend in such an instance. He pays while the watch watches his interests with the girl. And every girl does love a good watch.

The Engagement

The same credit plan applies to the engagement ring. For time has not robbed this love-tie of its significance, or its importance. Usually the very first of worthwhile gifts from him to her, it should be truly as worthwhile as possible; and through modern selling methods this possibility has been greatly extended.

The Right Step

A pair of comfy slippers for the man is a step in the right direction toward Christmas joy. Yes, and joy throughout the entire year. For what more restful to the tired business man than the thought of home with a pair of welcoming slippers by the fireside? And, for this season, men's slippers are more than ever giftsome, it seems. Whether in black, tan or in one of the brighter colors, slippers are among the most pleasing of personal gifts for the man.

And Lounging Robes

A gift as important to the man as is the negligee to woman, is the lounging robe. This season's robes of this character are truly sumptuous. Fashioned not only from fine flannels, but from rich silks and satins, either in plain colors or in handsome, colorful brocades, these robes are finely gifty.

"PLUGGER" FILM AT TOWER

Winnie Lightner in her latest and most hilarious Vitaphone color picture, "The Life of the Party," is to be the attraction at the Tower Theater starting today.

WINNIE LIGHTNER

In this production Miss Lightner is seen as a typical song - plugger who aspires to successful gold-digging. Her adventures carry her to Havana, where she becomes involved with a bogus millionaire and, through a series of amusing events, rides a race horse to near victory and almost lands in jail.

Irene Delroy, who recently appeared in "Oh, Sailor, Behave," plays the role of Winnie's accomplice.

Others in the cast are Jack Whiting, Charles Judels and Charles Butterworth, who displays his comical "dead pan" on the silver sheet for the first time.

Short subjects and news reel complete the bill.

EARLY STRUGGLES SHOWN

Paramount's "Fighting Caravans" shows the struggles of a huge freight caravan journeying for nine months over mountains, rivers, plains and desert, through all kinds of weather, for 1500 miles from Independence, Mo., to Sacramento, in 1863.

Young English Author Writes Play for Star

Ruth Chatterton's next talking vehicle will be "New Morals," an original story written especially for the star by John Van Druten, author of "Young Woodley." The author is now at work on the screen treatment at the company's Hollywood studios, where the picture will be filmed.

Van Druten, one of London's best-known playwrights and novelists, came to the film colony unannounced several weeks ago to learn the technique of talking pictures. Following the completion of the script, he will return to England to produce a new play.

Soprano Joins American Unit

Juliette Lippe, the American dramatic soprano whose singing of the foremost roles with the German Grand Opera Company in this country the last two seasons proved the outstanding feature of the performances, has cabled her American manager, S. Hurok, that following a number of successful appearances in Central Europe during which she was heard by the eminent maestro, Bruno Walter, she has been engaged by him to sing the leading dramatic roles with the Royal Opera at Covent Garden, London, beginning next April.

Meantime Miss Lippe will shortly return to this country to fulfill a number of engagements with the International Grand Opera Company, a new Hurok organization, also a series of important concert and recital dates. Miss Lippe announces that she will not be heard with the German company this season.

Director Gets Over Troubles

Director Louis King declares his troubles will be over when his current Columbia production, "Desert Vengeance," is completed. When King took his troupe to the desert for exterior scenes, a slow drizzling rain chased him back into the studio. Another location trip was made in the worst wind and sandstorm of the year, and even ordinary minor obstacles surmounted into twenty-four-hour delays.

King recalls an old adage of the movies: The more trouble a director may have in making a story, the better the finished product will be. On that basis, "Desert Vengeance" will be the greatest picture ever made, solemnly avers Director King.

NEGRO PLAYER'S RECORD LONG

Tom Carter Was Seasoned Trouper in Days of Late Nineties

The old Negro whom you will see regulating wheel-chair traffic in the Palm Beach sequence of Paramount's "Stolen Heaven," in which Nancy Carroll is the star, is Tom Carter, who played in an "Uncle Tom's Cabin" company as far back as 1896.

Tom is 52 years of age, and back in the "late nineties" he appeared as a pickaninny in the Ernest Hogan version of the Harriet Beecher Stowe story. For twenty-five years after he was, in his own words, "a seasoned trouper" of the Farrell Taylor Trio, a Keith vaudeville act, in which he was the "wench," or an impersonator of a female comedian, to quote Tom's own description.

He had a part in the Greenwich Village Follies of 1924 and in various other shows in town, including "The Yogi." "Stolen Heaven" is his first motion-picture engagement and the role calls for him to be seated, half asleep, in a wheel chair at the side of the road, regulating a boardwalk traffic with the aid of a palm leaf fan.

Personalities Being Sought by Film Fans

"Hard times have taught motion-picture fans to shop for personalities," is the statement of Edward H. Griffith.

The director of such pictures as "Holiday" and "Paris Bound" believes that never have names counted for so much as today.

"People are not going to pictures every night," he says. "They look at the papers and decide which theater to attend before starting, and they determine the picture by the cast. So it is imperative to have well-known names in the productions today."

The latest movement among producers has been to sell the picture, not the star; but if Griffith is correct, this plan has not been a success.

"The public wants to know that Robert Montgomery, Ann Harding, James Gleason, Helen Twelvetrees, or other popular actors are in the picture," he believes. "The fact that the film was a success on the stage before being made into a picture, or that it is from a famous book, or that it is from the pen of the popular writer of today, will not take the public eye during this period of depression."

Griffith has delayed the starting date of the next Ann Harding picture, "Rebound," until he can obtain certain well-known names for the cast.

Two Head Cast for New Film

The complete cast of the Tiffany special, "The Command Performance," was announced recently by James Cruze. He stated that filming will begin shortly with Walter Lang directing.

Nell Hamilton and Una Merkel head the cast as prince and princess of the two mythical kingdoms in which this sophisticated, modern play is laid. Lawrence Grant, Helen Ware, Albert Gran, Vera Lewis, Thelma Todd, Burr McIntosh, William Von Brinken and Murdock McQuarry complete the cast of principals.

Clara Bow to Wear Uniform

For the first time since "Wings," Clara Bow is to wear a snappy military uniform in one of her starring pictures.

In "Wings" she wore the short skirt, jacket and Sam Browne belt of the women's unit of the American Ambulance Corps. In her newest picture, "No Limit," she will wear a more resplendent outfit; that of an usherette in a metropolitan motion-picture palace. Her commanding officer will be Harry Green, who plays the manager of the theater.

Others in the picture, which is being directed by Frank Tuttle, are Norman Foster, Stuart Erwin and Dixie Lee.

STAR RESUMES WORK

Following a vacation trip to Europe, William Powell is now preparing for his next Paramount vehicle, "Ladies' Man," by Rupert Hughes.

DIX BECOMES INDIAN CHIEF

Film Star Inducted Into Osage Tribe During Work on "Cimarron"

There's a new chief in the Osage Indian tribe.

He is called White Hat, although on the screen he will continue to be known as Richard Dix.

Forty Osage Indians, headed by Chief Big Tree, who appear in R.-K.-O. Radio Pictures' "Cimarron," inducted him into the clan at an elaborate ceremony staged at R.-K.-O. ranch.

The title is merely an honorary one, and the name was inspired by the famous white Stetson the star wears in "Cimarron."

This is the second time such an honor has been conferred on Richard Dix. After his appearance in "Redskin," a few years ago, Dix was created a chief in the Apache tribe of Arizona.

MAGAZINE ORATORIO TELLS OF

Alexander Stewart in Article Tells About Music Form

"Oratorio: A Lost Art" is the subject of an article in the November issue of "The Music World," by Alexander Stewart of the college of music, University of Southern California and director of the semi-centennial chorus of S.C.

"Either because of their own ignorance of oratorio, or failure to recognize its inherent and peculiar values, voice teachers today are educating a race of singers who lack background and balance; who are 'opera and ballad-minded;' who are singers but not musicians," Mr. Stewart writes.

Concluding his article with suggestions for creating more interest in this form of music, Mr. Stewart states: "If we are to revive interest in oratorio we must first have more interest in and better knowledge of this form on the part of vocal teachers and students. Second, more conductors trained in the traditions and interpretation of oratorio music. Third, a more broad-minded attitude on the part of public school administrators and teachers toward the use of religious music in the schools."

Art Director Obtains Rare French Work

Max Ree, art director at Radio Pictures' studio, has obtained a valuable addition to his art, costume and architecture library, already of impressive proportions.

Ree's new treasure is a rare old vellum-bound manuscript of colored drawings, reproducing French and Italian court costumes of the seventeenth century.

It was compiled, it is declared, by a monk of the Carthusian monastery at La Grande Chartreuse, near Grenoble. All the drawings are by Carthusian brothers, and they are reported excellent in detail, accuracy and color.

Ree has already put some of the costume sketches in his manuscript to good use in the filming of "The Royal Bed," in which Lowell Sherman was actor and director. The story, based on Robert E. Sherwood's play, "The Queen's Husband," deals with a kingdom in Central Europe, where old-fashioned, colorful court costumes are still in vogue.

A new genre of the Russian films is seen in "The Lash of the Czar," the latest soviet cinema to arrive at the Filmarte Theater.

This picture is based on L. Andreyev's book, "The Governor," which deals with a soft-hearted official torn between his desire to please the government and at the same time to be sympathetic toward the people.

In revealing the theme of "The Lash of the Czar," the director, L. A. Pretoszanov, has selected and emphasized those elements of the general idea that might interest and appeal to the modern spectator. He treated the recent past as it would be interpreted by the post-revolutionary onlooker in the light of present philosophy. It is a social, as well as a psychological study.

"The Lash of the Czar" introduces the foremost actor of the Moscow Art Theater, V. I. Kachalov, whose unforgettable stage portrait of the Emperor Nicholas I aroused a storm of applause throughout Russia. He has created in the figure of the vacillating governor a portrait equally significant, displaying his knowledge of emotional reactions through the art of pantomime.

A unique cast surrounds Kachalov, headed by V. E. Mayerhold. Others are A. P. Petrovsky, Ivan Chuvelev and Anna Stenn. Miss Stenn has already been seen on the Filmarte Theater screen in two pictures.

Director Will Play in Film

When Joseph Santley, who is to direct Helen Twelvetrees in her next starring vehicle for Pathe, signed a contract with that studio it read, "As player, writer and director." It was no uncommon occurrence in the days of silent pictures for an actor to fulfill agreements of this kind.

In "This Marriage Business," Santley will undertake to follow out the terms of his contract. He wrote the story, will direct the picture and, in addition, enact a prominent part in it.

COLLYER, HUGHES TOGETHER

The team of June Collyer and Lloyd Hughes, previously employed by Tiffany Productions in a modern dramatic story, "Extravagance," will appear again on the same program in "Drums of Jeopardy." So will did Tiffany like the teamwork of Miss Collyer and Lloyd Hughes in the romantic roles of the first picture that when they received assurance that Miss Collyer could play in "Drums of Jeopardy," they immediately sought Hughes for the masculine romantic role.

Joan Crawford Wears Dress of Glass in Film

People who wear glass dresses shouldn't have any stones thrown at them. Thus Joan Crawford might have paraphrased the adage of old.

For in the dancing scene for "Dance, Fool, Dance," her new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle, Miss Crawford wore a daring costume made of 16,000 tiny mirrors, strung so tightly together they formed a sort of coat-of-mail fabric. The mirrors were made from silver-coated discs that flashed dazzlingly under the bright studio lights.

The unique costume was the creation of Gilbert Adrian and required three weeks to make, eight seamstresses being kept busy stringing and sewing the tiny mirrors upon the transparent lining.

Harry Beaumont is directing the new Crawford picture with Lester Vail playing opposite in the romantic lead.

BALLYHOO RESURRECTED

Insinuations of Sex Employed to Stimulate Theater Business at Expense of Long-Sought Dignity

BY NORBERT LUSK

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—A stroll along Broadway these days brings to light the rather amazing discovery that theaters are reverting to old-fashioned ballyhoo in an effort to stimulate business at the cost of the dignity for which the motion-picture industry is forever striving, particularly, that branch of it concerned in appealing to what is called "the better public."

In proof of this we find the Grecian front of the Rivoli transformed into a close approach to a burlesque theater, with Marlene Dietrich the innocent means by which this doubtful effect is achieved. The casual passer-by is led to assume that "Morocco" is an unusually bold leg show because of the huge portraits in color of Miss Dietrich in the scant costume she wears briefly in the picture. That these pictures suggest despised musical comedy is a point that the management of the theater apparently overlooks.

However, "Morocco," is doing well and will remain until the 19th inst. when it makes way for "The Royal Family." Incidentally, Miss Dietrich made a personal appearance one night last week with Frederic March, her sponsor on the stage.

CHILDREN WARNED

At the Strand "Scarlet Pages," is exploited as a film that no child should see, though the warning displayed outside the theater gives no inkling that an adolescent would be bored by another courtroom melodrama. The big sign that is supposed to attract the unwary adult reads "Because of the delicacy of the theme this picture is not recommended for children."

The Central Theater, which is housing the waifs and strays among films, is showing a German one of ancient vintage called "Chained," first seen here some years ago and more recently exhibited on Fourteenth street accompanied by a "lecture." Since it moved uptown, however, a major domo stands outside the theater informing the peasants over from Jersey for the afternoon that the picture is "A man's 'Well of Loneliness.'" The effect of this revelation upon those who pause to hear is not at all electrifying. And justly so for the film is slow and dull and as free from sexual implications as a travelogue.

POPULARITY DESERVED

The big attraction of the week is "The Blue Angel" with Emil Jannings and Marlene Dietrich, directed by Josef Von Sternberg for UFA. It is packing the Rialto, where it will remain for several weeks. The reasons are not obscure, either. First because of interest in Mr. Jannings's voice; second, the sudden popularity of Miss Dietrich, and last, but not least, because it is a gripping picture that provides two of the most extraordinary performances the audible screen has so far yielded.

Though the recording is inferior and Mr. Jannings is often unintelligible, his acting loses not a whit by this handicap, and Miss Dietrich demonstrates anew the welcome fact that she is not an imitation of Greta Garbo and that her success in "Morocco" was not an accident due to casting and directing. On all sides she is hailed as an amazing actress, the most important addition that the screen has had in years and one whose ability to create character is such that she could magnetize and vitalize any reasonable role. She is utterly fascinating as the cruel cabaret girl, who inspires fatal passion in the middle-aged professor played by Mr. Jannings.

From this it will be surmised that the story of "The Blue Angel" is along lines already made familiar by the German actor. In fact, the narrative is reminiscent of "Variety" and "The Way of All Flesh," not overlooking "Sins of the Fathers," but it doesn't really matter so long as the drama of infatuation, degradation and death uncoils with the slow certainty of a snake preparing to strike. The direction of Von Sternberg cleverly combines the imagination and authority of his pictures filmed in Hollywood with the German viewpoint which, in this case, means leisurely pace with much detail, some of it honestly vulgar, all of it completely revealing and engrossing.

Enthusiasm for Mr. Jannings's performance has shaken the more conservative critics out of their reticence. "Marvelous," "perfect," "the finest of all actors," are the "opinions most frequently voiced. This, together with public response, indicates without a doubt that the place still open to Mr. Jannings on our screen is a high one, if not the highest.

GRATIFYING PERFORMANCES

Though not sensational, "Scarlet Pages" is interesting, even though it comes too late in the procession of courtroom activities to be as important as the first appearance of

FILMS REQUIRE MANY TAILORS

Costumes of Various Periods Necessary to Dress Players in Numerous Pictures

The enormous part played by textile workers and costumers in talking pictures is strikingly indicated by figures released by Radio Pictures in connection with "Cimarron," dramatization of Edna Ferber's epic story, and by Herbert Brenon's colorful sequel to "Beau Geste."

In connection with the first, the wardrobe department, employing 128 people, the majority of whom are tailors, dressmakers and seamstresses, turned out 5067 costumes, representing six periods in American history. In addition, thousands of costumes were rented from various costume agencies.

Lavish and elaborate oriental costumes, 3500 of them were made for Brenon's Foreign Legion picture. These also were augmented by rented outfits.

Economically, these two pictures alone brought employment to hundreds of workers, it is declared.

Serious Roles Preferred by Film Player

Harking back to her first screen role, Helen Twelvetrees declares it has always been a mystery to her why she was cast as a comedienne, when all of her stage parts had been of a dramatic nature.

"It certainly was not by choice that I had the lead in a comedy," she says. "My preference has always been for serious roles. On the New York stage I had many opportunities to act in light parts, but always declined them.

"Naturally, I was anxious to make my first picture and did not demur when cast as a comedienne. Had I been wise enough to do so, perhaps I would be much farther along than I am today."

Since signing a long-term contract with Pathe studios, Miss Twelvetrees has been kept in the kind of parts that were hers on the stage. This undoubtedly accounts for the popularity that is now hers.

Cawthorn Uses Little Make-up

Joseph Cawthorn, who confesses to many years service as an actor on the American stage, is dependent on very few make-up aids. More often he uses no make-up at all, effecting his transitions from one role to another through psychologizing the part with correct realism.

Clothes to him are also eloquent and he can ring in 100 changes through such simple items—though they are not simple to him—as collars and ties. Hats are highly important, he declares; so are shoes, waistcoats and different kinds of jewelry. He has found that costuming is not a matter of extremes and extravagances for comedy effects, but those slight variations from a current style.

Cawthorn was garbed in the smartest tailoring for his last picture, "Kiki," when he played a straight role as the impresario. Usually on the screen he is seen in character.

Joan Bennett Takes Vacation

Joan Bennett, whose recent appearances on the screen have been in "Moby Dick," "Maybe It's Love" and "Scotland Yard," has completed her latest picture, "Many a Slip," for Universal in which she is costarred with Lew Ayres.

Miss Bennett is now enjoying a brief vacation before starting her next picture, "Doctor's Wives," for Fox. In this she will be costarred with Warner Baxter.

Comedy Team to Make Film

Olsen and Johnson, comedy team of vaudeville and more recently of the screen, have succeeded in rearranging their national tour schedule and will return to Hollywood February 1 to feature in Warner Brothers' picture, "Red Hot Sinners."

For a time it was believed that Olsen and Johnson could not fit another picture into their program until late next summer, but a wire just received advises the executive that they will be on hand to start production as originally scheduled.

HOLLYWOOD IN PERSON

BY MOLLIE MERRICK

THE close of 1930 reveals the year passed as the most successful one stage artists have had before the camera.

Our first year of talkies was filled with doubtful ventures for stage players. But the past twelve months have robbed the theater of so many celebrities that a visit to New York is like dropping into a strange land by parachute. The names in the theaters are new.

The first stage people brought here included Muni Weisenfreund, the young genius who created such a furore in "Four Walls." Under the name of Paul Muni he made an unsuccessful series of pictures.

The best example of stage actors succeeding in Hollywood is Robert Montgomery. He is now pointed to as the outstanding juvenile player in the colony.

Ann Harding is the shining light of the motion-picture year. The screen revealed her in "Paris Bound." Then she went straight to the top in "Holiday."

When "Laughter" was released it represented the full triumph of the stage faction. Glenn Anders gave one of the most excellent characterizations of the season. Also Frank Morgan, star of "Topaze," made the role of the stock broker distinguished. Then there is Fredric March, who was the big moment of this picture.

Rose Hobert and Genevieve Tobin arrived in Hollywood simultaneously. Through one of the strange tricks of fate, Miss Tobin clicked instantly with producers and got a fat contract. Rose Hobart, an excellent actress and a stunning woman, failed to make the contract grade.

It has been a year for the stage actor. The cinema stars of ability have held their own also. There is plenty of room for both.

Musician Keeps His Distance

George Gershwin, writing the music for Janet Gaynor's new picture, is having quite a social time of it in Hollywood. He has not "gone village" at all, but lives inconspicuously in a large apartment-hotel. The spacious mansion and swimming pool may come with the spring, tra-la. Just now it's all New Yorkerish and conservative.

Success Expensive

Studio retrenchments are including some minor economies which fall heavily on the heads of the younger players. One large organization which once gave its promising contract players instruction on voice development and singing, has now placed the burden of these lessons on the students.

Harding Hardens

Ann Harding is having a few tantrums about stories, I am told. She wants future pictures to come up to those she has been doing of late. That isn't easy. But if Ann Harding holds out, and I'm betting on her, she is the swellest gal in the colony for brains, character and beauty. She'll get what she wants.

Bandit's Deeds Will Be Put in New Film

Roy William Neill will direct the next Buck Jones picture for Columbia, according to announcement made by Jack Cohn. This marks Neill's first return to this studio since he directed "The Melody Man," nearly a year ago.

The story of the new opus, temporarily entitled, "Joaquin Murietta," is based on the adventures of a famous California character of 1840. The original Joaquin Murietta, whose exploits have been published in book form, was a sort of California "Robin Hood."

The title role affords Buck Jones an opportunity to portray a type unlike anything he has done before. In order to characterize it correctly, he will be forced to speak in broken English, and wear a mustache.

Miss Moorhead in Comedy Role

Natalie Moorhead is still puzzled over her screen metamorphosis. When she was on the stage, she was a smiling lady comedienne, a polite, refined comic, but still a funny one. She stepped out of the stage comedy, "Baby Cyclone," into a film role, and presto, found herself a lady villain.

Refined, but naughty, she was given some of the most important villainess, assignments of pictures the past year. She was in "Shadow of the Law," "Office Wife," "Ex-Mistress," and several other pictures. The more "bad" the role she plays, the more popular she seems to be with the producers. At present she is working as a feminine menace in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," the new Buster Keaton-Charlotte Greenwood picture at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Lang Studies Gangster Ways

From research into royal manners and customs for "The Command Performance," which he has just finished directing, Walter Lang has passed to studies concerned with the gangster situation for a James Cruze production which he will shortly commence. His investigations have taken in many economic aspects of crime, for he has found it necessary to have a thorough understanding of the background of the enemies to organized society.

Lang plans to be candid with his portrayal of the gangster, for he believes that truthful pictures that do not heroize the criminal will be a powerful force in restraining those anarchistic elements at war with society.

LANGDON OWNS MANY HATS

Harry Langdon wears a hat in "A Soldier's Plaything" that cost the studio $1500. It seems that Langdon has 100 hats at home that he searched through to get just the right type for his role in the picture. After trying on each hat carefully, one was finally selected which met the approval of both Director Michael Curtis and Langdon.

MUSIC "STEALING" ON WANE, SAYS TIOMKIN

Of all the writers, declares Dimitri Tiomkin, Hollywood composer, those who are the least protected are the writers of music. At all of the international conventions held years ago, at which time protective measures were discussed and applied, the first favored were the literary contributors with little or nothing done for the music minds of the world, he says.

"As an example, 'Scheherazade' and 'Song of India' made the makers of records millions of dollars in profits and the estate of the composer who gave these contributions to music was left nothing of material value," Tiomkin points out.

"Until recently the protection given composers was not international. The 'silent' motion pictures naturally had music throughout their running and the music used was taken from the works of this and that composer—with no regard to the beauty of the entire composition, but with only the purpose to supply a certain amount of music to last the lenght of the picture's running time.

"I dislike trying to amagine what the composers now dead would do if they suddenly stepped out of their coffins and heard their butchered creations! They would probably go right back in the coffins and lie down again.

"Not only were the works of great artists such as Wagner, Rossini, Tschaikowsky, Mac Dowell, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Saint-Saens, Bizet and others used at random and pieced with other music, but the public attending the theaters and listening to these so-called musical scores to pictures were given wrong impressions of truly fine music. This naturally hurt the musical education of the public which, feeling they were listening to the finest in music, did not deem it necessary to attend concert performances given via the concert stage and by recognized artists."

Then, Tiomkin relates, came a serious gesture and another slap in the face of the composer. Musical directors, wishing to create quick and practical synchronizing in their pictures, cleverly, and in a systematic way, created a library from the richness of composers of bygone days, classifying them in A, B, C order with a file covering all music suitable to emotional scenes, flies with music for sad scenes, flies with plenty of love music and music for every other element of the story—all indexed like so many garden seeds with the names of the vegetables on each package.

Big profits were made through this form of synchronizing pictures, and not only was this detrimental to the public's education in good music but the composers themselves received nothing, whereas fortunes were being piled up from their works.

"As recently as five years ago," Tiomkin continues, "America was not definitely established in music and depended largely on outsiders in the world of music. Lately, I am happy to say, America has displayed an energetic and successful progress for the finer music. Schools and conservatories have been established throughout the country such as the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, Julian Foundation in New York City, the Eastman schools in Rochester, besides the popular concert centers like the New York Stadium and our own Hollywood Bowl.

"Radio is now important—more so than ever before. The very fact that the great masses in the land can sit and listen to rich and beautiful music rendered by great orchestras and with star soloists in music and song demonstrates just how valuable radio has become, to say nothing of the business and scientific problems this great invention has solved."

With the coming of the talkies, the composer admits, the composer's rights were at last given some fair consideration, and music publishers both in Europe and in America have started a campaign to protect the rights of the composers.

"No more," he says, "can the musical directors reach in and grab a piece of printed music from the library to fit this or that scene. Every piece of printed music must be paid for by whoever uses it. Perchance the printed number is free of duties in one country, but not so in another. This naturally must be taken into consideration by the releasing and distributing companies in the film business. They cannot take the chance of injecting a musical score in a big picture and then have portions of the music cut out through protective measures.

"I might say," adds Tiomkin, "that printed music is almost dead, not only for the talking pictures but for silent productions as well. The talkies have proved they are a successful means of entertainment. Audiences have accepted them and here, too, the composer of great value, for he must ride only sit down and create music for a picture, but must blend his music emotionally and inject it carefully, making it part of the story itself. This I have tried to do for the Edwin Carewe picture, 'Resurrection.'"

Bebe Daniels Receives Most Advice Letters

Assorted facts on fan mail, as revealed by Mildred Lowe, head of Radio Pictures' fan mail department:

Bebe Daniels receives the largest number of letters giving advice about pictures and life.

Louis Wolheim, a heavy fan mail receiver, seldom gets a request for his photograph!

Lowell Sherman, attracts the intelligensia among film patrons who are fond of taking up deep problems with him.

Betty Compson leads in the number of letters asking for advice.

Richard Dix leads the men, and Sue Carol the women at the Radio studio in requests for photographs.

Evelyn Brent leads in having the greatest proportion of women write to her; Dorothy Lee in the proportion of men.

The average proportion of men and women fan letter writers, checked at Radio and other studios, is about 40 per cent men and 60 per cent women.

High-school boys are the principal masculine followers of Richard Dix.

Jack Mulhall gets the biggest college vote among men, Dorothy Lee among the women.

Steiner Writes Musical Score

One of his first achievements as musical director of Radio Pictures, Max Steiner recently completed recording of his score for Herbert Brenon's "Beau Ideal."

Steiner, known for his direction of the Victor Herbert operettas and other activity in musical and theatrical realms, has signed a new contract with William LeBaron, vice-president in charge of Radio Pictures, under which he will have full charge of Radio's music department.

He is actively collaborating with Henry Hobart, Douglas MacLean, Louis Sarecky, Bertram Millhauser and other Radio associate producers in the preparation of musical backgrounds and interpolations of forthcoming productions.

Picture Being Made at Night

Los Angeles' night life has picked up considerably since Clara Bow started production of her new starring picture for Paramount, "No Limit."

For certain scenes in the picture the downtown Paramount Theater is being used, inasmuch as the story of "No Limit" concerns the love affair of an usherette. As the theater is operating each day from 10 a.m. till midnight, Miss Bow's company has been forced to fit in a schedule that is out of the ordinary of studio routine.

Director Frank Tuttle calls his troupe for work at 1 o'clock each morning, having them report not at the studio, but at the theater itself.

Beaudine Will Study Women

William Beaudine has an opportunity to learn about women. He is to direct "Women Like Men," the story featuring nine girls, with no men in the cast.

Each character is a distinct type. By the time Beaudine completes the picture, he will have had ample opportunity to study nine types of women. William Beaudine is associate producer, as well as director of the picture, to be made by Liberty.

Broadway Hit to Star Oakie in Film Play

"June Moon," Broadway stage hit by Ring Lardner and George S. Kaufman, has been purchased by the Paramount Publix Corporation and will serve as the basis for Jack Oakie's next starring vehicle.

This amusing play, noted for its sparkling lines and delightful situations, was produced last season by Sam H. Harris and, after an extended Broadway engagement, enjoyed a successful road showing recently. It involves the story of a small-town youth with song-writing ambitions, who braves the stormy sea of success in New York among gold-digging girls and jealous business rivals. As the unsophisticated youth, Oakie will portray his second Ring Lardner hero, this author's play "Elmer the Great" having served for Oakie's "Fast Company" last season.

Boyd to Play in 'Gang Buster'

William (Stage) Boyd, the original Sergeant Quirt of "What Price Glory?" is cast as the chief menace in "The Gang Buster," Jack Oakie's next Paramount starring vehicle.

Boyd will be seen as a metropolitan (two-gun man who becomes the rival of Oakie, an accident insurance salesman from Arkansas, when he kidnaps Jean Arthur. The stage actor had important roles recently in "The Benson Murder Case," "The Spoilers" and "Derelict."

Edward Sutherland is directing the production, which is an original story by Percy Heath, adapted to the screen by Joseph L. Mankiewicz.

Glass Slipper Fits Frances

The glass slipper still fits the dainty foot of Frances Dee, Hollywood's latest Cinderella.

The feminine lead opposite Jack Oakie in his next Paramount starring picture, to be based on "June Moon," has been awarded to this youthful actress who was selected from the extra ranks to play opposite Maurice Chevalier in "Playboy of Paris" and followed this with the lead with Charles Rogers in "Along Came Youth."

CHILD ACTRESS CAST FOR NEW FILM ROLE

Mitzi Green, America's favorite child actress, completed a 10,000-mile trip with six hours to spare before production started on her newest picture for Paramount.

The diminutive comedienne, currently on the screen with Jackie Coogan in "Tom Sawyer," joins Leon Errol, ZaSu Pitts, Lilyan Tashman and Jackie Searl in "Finn and Hattie Abroad," a comedy from the Haddock stories by Donald Ogden Stewart.

Norman Taurog and Norman McLeod are directing from a screen play by Sam Mintz.

Mitzi Green's 10,000-mile tour was a person appearance visitation of the principal eastern and middle western cities.

"TWO-GUN MAN" NEXT

"The Two-Gun Man," the most widely used descriptive personal phrase in the history of the old West, has been chosen for the title of the next Ken Maynard western picture. Maynard just completed "Fighting Through," his first vehicle under the Tiffany banner, directed by William Nigh.

A Lecture on Christian Science

Thursday noon under the auspices of Ninth Church of Christ, Scientist, in Third Church edifice, Miss Lewis C. Coulson, C.S., of London, Eng., member of the Board of Lectureship of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.

Herewith is the full press report given by the lecturer:

The theme of Christianity as presented to the world by Mary Baker Eddy is ready for demonstration, for the understanding of the availability of the divine Principle, Love. This Love has irresistible attraction, for humanly desire a presentation. Built upon a wholly spiritual foundation, entirely spiritual in premise and purpose, this revelation brought into human affairs begins at once to change and transform, thus fulfilling the Master's words, "The kingdom of God is nigh unto you." There is no doubt of divinely that this Christ, Truth, does not redeem.

It is true today that Christian Science can be successfully applied to the solution of business problems, in other words, that it heals lack and unemployment, as well as it heals sickness and sin. The fact that it heals them in the same way, namely, by mental and spiritual means alone. Mrs. Eddy has written that "mortal mind cannot see for what immortal Mind has provided" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 361).

Being immortal Mind, His ideas are entirely spiritual. It follows then, that God does not know of matter. He has no idea of it, and does not know it; God is the source of all wealth and is Himself. Of what, then, do His riches consist? They consist of thoughts, of which He is himself the complete. All of God, and his dwelling place is Mind. Existing as ideas in infinite Mind, spiritual man has immediate access to all that God has. It would be an impossible for Mind to withhold its ideas from its own ideas, for the infinite Mind does not erect barriers, since its nature is love, and its character is one-ness. All the limitless thoughts, or countless spiritual ideas among the realm of Mind, are the gift and call of man, so that as he needs them he receives or appropriates them, and they are equally the property of all. Man, then, expresses spontaneous, perpetual, infinite supply, or unlimited, right ideas. To possess the nature of God humanly precludes greed or lack. Yet these are fundamental elements of the so-called mind.

If we will examine a little more the nature and character of this thing mortal that is to say, a dream, it is essentially false and temporary. Having origin it operates by or as something, putting out something rejected or rejected at will, having no fixed character. Mortal mind may be likened to a dream which is recognized to be not the most formidable that can be employed, although entirely mental. One of mind's favorite forms of error is lack. It starts a fear of famine, fear of stoppage of supply, which spreads like one of its pet suggestions that man is not enough to meet the need of all, and so someone has to go to the wall. This is where it starts to speak. We are told that these suggestions limit God and to believe that we must pray before certain conditions instead of declaring our independence of such propaganda, recognizing its mental nature, and rejecting every one of its suggestions as false thoughts—with true knowledge that we need to get the right supply, to find out what God is, and to see God as its source. We need to remember that God is Mind and Mind is infinite, and that infinite Mind, spiritual man and universe, is the reflection of Mind. Of what does a home, a business, consist? To pay our bills scientifically applied, is the practical solution of the problem, because it is a recognition that thought is lack, and so it is our thinking that is affecting our supply, and a change of thought will bring a different manifestation. In the first place, we have these right ideas which are the riches of God and His likeness; and the most blessing of all is for every one of us, to gain the right idea of himself in order that he may express himself correctly. It is true, man, as God's reflection, is valuable, unspeakably valuable, and has all that he needs for his every emergency, every requirement. Right here is the secret of how valuable the realization of many a mistake, self-depreciation in many subtle forms. Often the aggressive manner may be but a cover a dogging sense, sometimes an unworthy fails himself worthy and who rates himself as down down the feeling will never make good, and will not come his way. In argument, it is always regarding one's self as subject to mortal limitations who are seemingly to need take time daily to the right idea of man, and of themselves, and the value of this idea, of what they have to give and the realization would mean. Man "is the compound of God, including all science and Health. Out of that! Everything that anything you can name, you reflect, as an idea and manifest in your life. If you claim your sonship does man include all that he individualizes that means that every good thing to give, to and no one else can give just the same way. Then, you are! These ideas are yours, inherent, the right idea of God, and so there is infinite opportunity for all, and no one need lack the opportunity to express that individual idea which is your contribution to the total of usefulness. With such thoughts as these of self-acceptance, the assurance of selfhood. We believe that God, the divine Father, that we are, the sons of Mind, heirs of God's own spirituality, individuality for since Mind's ideas, its sons and daughters, are essentially individual and necessary, valuable to the whole. Entertain these thoughts and a problem of unemployment, all the details of which are known to me. A despondent, dejected, well-nigh hopeless man once walked into a noonday lecture on Christian Science in which the question of supply from the scientific point of view was explained. This man had been out of work for months—all confidence had left him and he was sick at heart. The atmosphere of Truth in which he found himself at once had its effect, and as he listened to the setting forth of the affluence of God, his spirits rose. Finally, the thought that every man is valuable and has something to give which is needed and indispensable to God and man struck him so forcibly that he left that lecture with hope and confidence and assurance in his heart. He walked straight to a bureau to make application for some position, and clinging to the thought that had so appealed to him, he asked for the post and received it, and at a larger salary than he had ever before received.

Now, that man thought he needed a job, or, if you like, money; but what he really needed was a change of thought—the right idea of himself. This right idea furnished the job, so to speak, it provided the supply, and as long as he possessed this true thought or right idea, the work and the supply were assured. Without it, either one might have quickly come to an end. What we need, therefore, is always just a spiritual idea. We only need a thought, not a thing.

Remember, it is the idea itself that gives the supply, that is valuable, rather than what it brings you. We know that it is divine Mind alone that is the source of all ideas, and yet this Mind is expressed humanly in intelligence to meet our present human need. To take a purely human illustration: I know a man who had to work out this problem of supply. He was a student of Christian Science, and he was in great need financially. He had some goods to sell which he knew were worth while, but he could not get a market for them. He was determined to work it out scientifically. He had been learning of the value of right ideas, and the availability of infinite intelligence; so one day he went to his room and began to ponder this truth and to declare his reflection of divine intelligence, that it was present for him to claim and obtain in abundance. As he sat there, working and praying, suddenly an idea came to him of a new way to advertise his goods. It was altogether original and attractive, and it needed the co-operation of an artist, but how could he afford to pay one? As he was thinking it over, there was a knock at the door, and a woman stood there saying that she was an artist looking for employment. She would be willing to work at first for little or nothing, just to show what she could do. Well, to make a long story short, the two co-operated, with the result that the advertisement was an immediate success, the goods sold so quickly that the problem of supply was solved, both for the man himself and the artist whom he was able to pay liberally. "God gives you His spiritual ideas, and in turn, they give you daily supplies" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 307).

Now, you can see in this case that it was the idea that was valuable, and not the money it produced, for that might easily be lost in a night; but with the idea still there, it could be regained and reproduced indefinitely. Moreover, although the expression in this case was so entirely human, that which went to make it up was purely mental; for such qualities as originality, beauty, and intelligence were the producers of that advertisement. In Science and Health we read (p. 443), "Christ, Truth, gives mortals temporary food and clothing until the material, transformed with the ideal, disappears, and man is clothed and fed spiritually."

When, through demonstration, we begin to understand something of the infinity of intelligence, and that ideas belong equally to all, the three qualities which most make for lack and limitation are thereby lessened, namely, fear, greed, and jealousy. These are they which cause the closed thought and the closed hand, and so prevent the operation of that divine law, "Give, and it shall be given unto you." With a closed fist it is impossible to give or to receive anything. The largest reservoir, if it is sealed, can do nothing to irrigate the country or supply the city. It must be opened up. In the same way let us open our thoughts to right ideas, our hearts to embrace the Golden Rule, our hands to give of what we have, that we may receive more.

It is not the supply that is lacking, for God is its source, it is the ability to receive. Hagar in the desert could not see the well of water, but it was there all the time. Fear and care and perhaps resentment had raised a mist which veiled her sight. We, too, are in the presence of God's plentiful supply, but our eyes are veiled; and so, like Hagar, we weep, until God's truth rends the veil and we see what is at hand.

The wisest man that ever lived gave the best counsel ever given on the subject of demonstrating supply when he said, "Give, and it shall be given unto you. . . . For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again." Now Christ Jesus was not just using a high-sounding phrase, he was not merely making a beautiful ethical remark, he was uttering a law, a fixed and eternal law, which divine intelligence had revealed to him, and which Jesus was intelligent enough to know is practical.

Let me give you an illustration of the working of this law. I know a business man who believes in the Golden Rule, and is determined to make it practical in his everyday living. His business was doing well in a modest way and showing some profits. One day the idea came to him of sharing a percentage of these profits with his customers; and he accordingly wrote to them saying that he intended in future to issue what he called "Golden Rule checks" to his customers, whenever his profits allowed. On a certain date this scheme went into operation, and from that very moment the business increased by leaps and bounds; and the outcome was that within a year another branch of the business was established in another city. Now, this man's motive was not mainly one of policy. His desire was to apply and practice the Golden Rule, and in so doing he was himself prospered and the success of his business was promoted; for he had come into touch with a spiritual law, certain and inevitable in its operation, as all true law is, and it had immediately taken effect. "Give, and it shall be given unto you."

And why is this true, my friends, why is it law? Simply because God lives to give, and man, God's reflection, lives in giving!

There never was a greater giver than Mary Baker Eddy. She gave of her time, her thought, her heart's blood, so to speak. Not only was she the most spiritually-minded woman of her day, the Discoverer and Founder of the Science of Christianity, but she also proved herself to be, through obedience to divine law, a most successful business woman. When she discovered Christian Science, she was living on an income of two hundred dollars a year; but the money she left to her church when she passed on is now helping to build Christian Science churches all over the world, and to send members of the Board of Lectureship to the far corners of the earth. She fed the world's mental famine with divine ideas, with spiritual thoughts, and her bread returned to her in increased measure after many days.

Finally, my friends, let me draw your attention to the saying of a God-inspired man, who lived centuries ago, but whose words are as true now as when they were uttered. I refer to the prophet Joel, who wrote, "I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten." When I was a young student of Christian Science I used to love that passage greatly, and ponder it often, because of the hope it held out to me, the promise it contained, that for every wasted year and lost opportunity there would be compensation. For God's law of love, when, through the understanding of Christian Science, we apply it to our problem, proves to us that for every seeming loss, every failure, every anguish, there is ample compensation. What though you seem to have failed so often that you are weary of trying to make good? Claim the full compensation of the law of Love! It will work for you, it will restore for you. Every seeming failure is reversed by an understanding of the indissoluble relation of man to his divine Principle, Love.

"The thin years, the unfruitful years,
The years that the locust hath eaten,
I will restore to you for your tears
To sweeten.

"I will restore them all again,
Your barns shall be overflowing,
Your hands shall gather and heap the grain
Of their sowing.

"Here is your labor manifest—
The anguish, the loss, the pain—
Compassion-garnered, at length, and dressed
As golden grain.

"Not one lost kernel or empty ear
Hath escaped the freshening tarns
Of my care, who am the overseer
Of your barns.

. . . . . .

"I will restore for your safekeeping
The years that the locusts destroy;
For patience sown, there shall be reaping
Of joy."

—Fanny De Groot Hastings, from The Christian Science Monitor.

Just One Line Proves Boost to Film Fame

"Ah wish ah wuz back in Bumminham."

Read this line again, folks, for this is the gag line that was ultimately to result in the elevation of a more modest gentleman of color, one Clarence Muse, in screen popularity.

Erle Kenton, a Columbia director, wrote the line for use in a picture called "The Royal Romance." The colored comedian was called upon to reiterate the line every time he got in trouble. The temperamental Stepin Fetchit refused to say the line because he claimed it would offend his race. Nevertheless, Stepin was obdurate so Director Kenton substituted Clarence Muse and declares that he scored a personal hit with his own people.

Later Director Frank Capra of Columbia called upon Muse for a role in his feature comedy, "Rain or Shine," starring Joe Cook. Clarence used the line continuously, and it evoked howls of laughter from theater audiences when used in the proper situations. It is said that Capra is again using the new colored comedian and this line in "Dirigible," his epic of the air service.

"Ah wish ah wuz back in Bumminham."

Many Thrills in Production of "Dirigible"

Back in Lakehurst where actors have to be up and ready to go at sunrise, but only work a three-hour day from 5 a.m. until 8 a.m., Frank Capra declares he experienced the most thrilling events of his directorial career in filming "Dirigible."

"We could only work at sunrise," explains Capra, "because the 'lighter-than-air' ships do not come back down in the heat of the day. Often we spent twelve to eighteen hours in the Los Angeles, filming action aboard ship, but for the most part we worked only the three hours in the air.

"How did we get back down from the dirigible? Oh, that was easy. They have an airplane that flies underneath the dirigible, and effects an attachment to the 'lighter-than-air' craft by means of a steel lattice girder. When the time came, Jack Holt, Ralph Graves, the camera crew and I simply clambered down through the tummy of the dirigible, and on down the girder into the cockpit of the airplane.

"Thrilling, sure. There is always a nice, stiff sixty-mile wind blowing up there."

MASONIC ENSEMBLE TO FORM

For the purpose of forming a vocal ensemble composed entirely of Master Masons, a meeting will be held in the studio of Harrison Dowden, 1011 Beaux Arts Building, this afternoon at 3 o'clock. Rehearsals of the ensemble will begin early in the new year. Dowden, voice specialist, will train the singers.

ACTORS PLAN FOR HOLIDAY

Some to Go Home; Others Will Celebrate Christmas and New Year's in Hollywood

Cool weather has reminded Universal players of the nearness of Christmas and there is a general scurry among them for last-minute preparations.

John Boles, after working for several weeks on "Resurrection," is busily juggling interviews and publicity pictures in order to get away for the holiday. Last year the singing star returned to Greenville, Tex., where he celebrated Christmas with his parents, after an absence of seven years, but this year he has other plans. It is rumored that he may take a trip to Honolulu and spend the holiday season there, if production does not interfere.

Mary Nolan is still convalescing, but her plans for Christmas include a large dinner party for her sister and her niece of 15 and nephew of 13. Miss Nolan's health has so improved that she will undoubtedly be able to partake of the good things provided for the party, too, as she is scheduled to return to the Universal lot prepared for work about the first of January.

Lupe Velez, just starting into production on the Spanish version of "Resurrection," will spend Christmas at her Beverly Hills home. It will be "open house" for all of the little Mexican star's friends on that day, with a gift for each and everyone who calls.

Genevieve Tobin, the Broadway star who has recently made a hit in her two Universal pictures, "A Lady Surrenders" and "Free Love," will stop work on her third talkie, "Fires of Youth," for a Christmas Day celebration. Miss Tobin and her mother will entertain a family party of brothers and sisters with their families, who will have gathered from New York and the Middle West for the celebration.

Lewis Ayres, starring in "Fires of Youth," now in production at Universal under the direction of Monta Bell, will go home for Christmas. Home is in San Diego, and Lew has a devoted family awaiting him there. His mother, naturally, is proud of having such a talented son and his stepfather is equally interested in the boy's career. Then, there are a kid brother and sister, ages 8 and 13, respectively—who wait for big brother Lew to help trim the Christmas tree and to fix all the electric trains and other child's gadgets.

CHAPLIN NOW CALLED MASTER

Satirist Credited With Training No Fewer Than Five Directors

While pro-and-con argument swirls around Charles Chaplin's decision not to make talking pictures, five successful directors of comedies do obeisance and call him "master."

These five men are the justification for the statement that Chaplin has trained more successful makers of laugh pictures than any other single individual in the industry.

They are Mel Brown, director of "Check and Double-Check;" Edward Sutherland, Monta Bell, Harry d'Arrast, director of "Laughter," and "Chuck" Reisner, who made "Caught Short" and is now completing "Reducing," another Marie Dressler-Polly Moran comedy for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"Chaplin's methods are so thorough, so grounded in the fundamentals of laugh creation," stated Reisner recently, "that those fortunate enough to serve as his assistants secured a training that covered every possible point. Chaplin's individual production permits him to proceed one step at a time. His assistants, therefore, learn their business in a way that sticks and is never forgotten. He is as great a teacher of his art as he is an artist."

'Mary' Becomes Famed Name in Picture Land

One of the most famous names in pictures is Mary. Since Mary Pickford became "America's Sweetheart," there seems always to be one of that name verging into stardom.

Today there are several Marys who are very popular in the films, among them Mary Astor, whose change in screen personality has brought her near to stellar honors. At one time she was considered a sweet-girl type, but lately she has branched out into more dramatic roles.

Several of Miss Astor's recent characterizations have been those of a flirt. She was Richard Barthelmess's flirtatious sweetheart in "Adios," and Ann Harding's sister who just could not make herself behave, in "Holiday." After signing a long-term contract with R.-K.-O., that studio seems to have decided such roles are peculiarly adapted to her style of acting, and she is still flirting on motion-picture sets with the stars of that organization.

Synchronized Machine Guns Used in Films

Synchronized machine guns, lethal airplane invention of the war, are serving a new purpose now.

Because of the difficulty in filming sound scenes of machine guns in action for moving pictures, the war-time "synchronizing" device is coming back on a peaceful mission, that of aiding the cameraman.

During the war, pilots were almost useless for "strafing" in one-man ships when it was discovered they couldn't fire machine guns straight ahead, the propeller being in the way. A system of synchronizing the machine gun with the propeller, enabling the bullets to zip between the blades as they whirled at high speed, obviated all difficulty.

Now, in the face of an influx of gangster talkies, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer technicians are synchronizing machine guns with the motors operating cameras and sound-recording systems, eliminating the "jumps" and making the photography and sound more realistic.

The first picture in which this is to be used is "Dance, Fool, Dance," Joan Crawford's new starring vehicle. Harry Beaumont is directing.

BREESE IN CAST OF "MOTHER'S MILLIONS"

Edmund Breese is now working in "Mother's Millions," opposite May Robson. In rapid succession this fall, he has acted in "Painted Desert," "Tol'able David," "Hollywood Gold Diggers," "Millie," and his present assignment. He is also in "Kismet." His most famous stage play was "The Lion and The Mouse."

ODD LIFE CHARACTERS OFFER SCREEN TYPES

BY GRACE KINGSLEY

The record for character portrayals on the screen is held by J. Farrell Macdonald. He has played more than 400 characters!

You've got to love life in order to be a good character actor! I mean love human beings and be inquisitive about people and things.

J. Farrell Macdonald can scan the heavens and give you the lowdown on Mars and Venus, or he can tell you where and how to put an explosive into the earth to bring about the results you want. He can paint a picture—or climb an electric pole and fix a wire. He can sail a boat—or go through a church ceremonial.

He is the most amazing example of a jack of all trades and master of a few that I've ever known.

All this knowledge has come in miraculously in his playing of character roles on the screen, since the screen demands realism in detail.

Macdonald has founded many of his characterizations on people he has met—and he loves strolling about out-of-the-way places and studying out-of-the-way characters.

For he never plays real heavies; his characters are always sympathetic to a certain extent.

We found him in his den at his home the other day, looking spick and span in his golf clothes, and surrounded by an odd assortment of objects—his paintings, with the doing of which he fills in his spare time, his guns used in various pictures, and other interesting objects.

ORIGIN OF CASEY

"I love fooling around engines and railroad yards, and I founded my character of Casey in 'The Iron Horse' on a lovable old fellow I met down in the Southern Pacific yards," explained Macdonald.

"He was hero of a half-dozen wrecks and railroad adventures, and could tell the most amazing yarns of the old days before there were proper bridges and railroad facilities in California.

"Then I met an individual known as Portuguese Charlie, down at Portuguese Bend. That was before the locality was turned into the fashionable Palos Verdes district. I used to go down and talk to him. He made a wonderful fish and potato soup, and we used to lunch with him. He would always come in with his thumb buried in the soup, but we ignored that. If anybody objected, he looked about and chuckled—didn't care whether you liked it or not. I have played Portuguese Charlie—no, not regarding the soup!—many times since.

"An old watchman on Brooklyn Bridge was another character I studied. Construction work near there was going on while I was on the stage in New York. I used to go down there and chat with him and we'd watch the work going on. He was of the perfect Irish-American New York East Side type, with a wit and humor and a stock of stories all his own. He always had an explanation for everything, political, social and otherwise, that happened, and one thing he loved doing was solving mystery crimes. We discussed everything under the sun. And I learned about characters from him.

LINEMAN TACTICS

"I got acquainted with a lineman when I was working as mining engineer and manager of the Independence Mine at Cripple Creek, Colo., and from him I learned to climb poles and fix electric wires. He even gave me a pair of climbing irons, and I actually used them—and his mannerisms and methods—in 'Signal Tower.'"

Macdonald was graduated from Yale law school but didn't care to practice. However, he still haunts the courts at times, studying types.

He is a great sailor, too—owns a yacht and can run it. When he plays a skipper he knows what he's about.

And there were numberless other characters.

"I had to play the role of a Jewish peddler in a Universal picture," Macdonald related. "The director doubted I could do it. But I remembered a funny old character I used to visit on the East Side in New York. And I put on a make-up that astonished everybody from Carl Laemmle down. Mr. Laemmle met me on the lot and didn't know me. From that time I could have anything I wanted.

"This old Jewish character was most interesting. He ran an old-clothes place and he gave all his money away to the needy Jews in the neighborhood.

"My policeman characters have all been built on a certain Irish-cop in New York. When my wife and I used to be walking across the street he'd always call out, 'Some day you'll be riding in your own limousine.' When we went to New York recently, bringing our car with us, there he was, sure enough, on his old corner. He knew us and called out to us: 'I told you you'd be riding in your own car some day!'

"I've played a happy-go-lucky railway brakeman and my character was founded on one I knew who was a great entertainer. He'd have a bunch of us in to dinner and sing and dance for us. We wondered where he got his money. On the last occasion we found out. While we were dining detectives came and nabbed him. They had visited our host's room and found about $10,000 worth of stolen goods there."

COLLEGE DAYS LINGER IN MEMORIES OF STARS

Alma Mater isn't just a song for Jack Oakie burlesque in Hollywood, film capital of the world, producers declare, for among the personalities of the screen are many who eagerly read news of their universities, follow the athletic careers of the teams representing their alma maters and proudly boast the title of "alumnus."

"Former Siwash student makes good in motion pictures," is declared a common headline in collegiate publications throughout the country.

Among the names which frequently appear in alumni publications together with photographs and film exploits of the ex-student are those of Charles Rogers, Leon Errol, Fredric March, Norman Foster, June MacCloy, Charles Starrett, Skeets Gallagher, Stuart Erwin, Martin Burton, Frances Dee, Phillips Holmes, Clive Brook, Frank Morgan, Gary Cooper and Regis Toomey.

Gary Cooper spent two years at Grinnell College in Iowa before he decided that he should become a newspaper artist. He soon gave up that chosen career, however, when opportunities developed in films.

Regis Toomey holds a degree from the University of Pittsburgh and often finds news of himself in the Sigma Chi Fraternity "Quarterly." He began his theatrical career when he appeared in stock at the Empire Theater in Pittsburgh during vacations.

TECH GRADUATE

Norman Foster spent two years at Carnegie Tech before the call of journalism took him from his studies and eventually landed him before the footlights.

University of Wisconsin professors still remember the dramatic exploits of Fredric March while he was earning a degree there. He was a member of the track team and won his "W" as manager of the grid teams. March also served as president of the senior class and was among those in the Senior Honorary Society, "Haresafoot," Beta Gamma Sigma and Alpha Delta Phi.

While the collegiate list runs to the male contingent, two former co-eds have just registered their names in motion pictures. One is Frances Dee, who was all ready to begin her junior year at the University of Chicago when she found that vacationing in Hollywood had provided an opportunity for her on the screen.

June MacCloy had been at the University of Michigan a year when an offer to appear in George White's Scandals won her away from her studies.

Charles Rogers was all ready to become a haughty senior at the University of Kansas when an offer to attend Paramount's Picture School took him from a journalism course and his fraternity brothers in Phi Kappa Psi.

Leon Errol knew nothing of collapsible knees when he spent three years at St. Joseph's College and Sydney University in New South Wales. However, he soon learned that trick after going on the stage.

A degree from Dartmouth is among the proud possessions of Charles Starrett, recently featured in "Fast and Loose" and "The Royal Family."

GALLAGHER ONCE ENGINEER

Skeets Gallagher started out to be a civil engineer at Rose Polytechnic Institution but switched to a law course at Indiana University before he finally decided upon a stage and screen career.

Stuart Erwin was in the throes of a sophomore curriculum at the University of California when he decided he couldn't wait for a degree and so left school to become an actor.

Martin Burton, who carried the lead on the stage in "Death Takes a Holiday," put aside his law books at the University of Indiana when he met Ina Claire and received encouragement in his ambition to become an actor.

Phillips Holmes was a student at Princeton when Frank Tuttle, director, came to that institution to film scenes for a college picture and gave Holmes a part. The youth did so well, he was asked to leave college and sign a contract in Hollywood.

Frank Morgan, former New York stage star who recently appeared in "Laughter" and "Fast and Loose," is a graduate of Cornell.

Clive Brook was hard at work at Dulwich College in England preparing himself for the career of a barrister when it became necessary for him to go into business and he chose an acting profession.

ACTRESS CREATES ILLUSION

Is it possible for a person, utterly dissimilar in physical appearance, to create an illusion of looking like another individual?

"Yes," states Marie Dressler, star of "Min and Bill." "It is, if you know how. There are just three things necessary to create such an illusion, first, the eyes; second, individual movements of the hands, second, your walk.

"If you can copy exactly the way another uses her hands, eyes, and how she walks, you can make people see a resemblance between the fat lady and the living skeleton!"

Miss Dressler was called up to exercise her power along these lines recently in a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture called "Reducing," in which she co-stars with Polly Moran. Certain twists of the plot made it necessary for "mother" Marie Dressler and "daughter" Anita Page, to look as much alike as possible.

"It was done," stated Miss Dressler, "in this case largely with the eyes and the walk. Miss Page has a distinctive gait, but more important she widens her eyes in a very individual manner. By widening my eyes, similarly, the illusion was created. Of course, Miss Page is much lighter, has no wrinkles, and is er—well we won't say how many years younger, but by a few acting tricks it was possible to make myself resemble her sufficiently for the purposes of the story."

DANCE DEADLOCK

With the opening of the season dancers in London are awaiting the result of an argument between experts as to what will be the fashionable dance. Three new dances have been introduced. Maj. Taylor, who invented the Yale Blues, popular last season, favors the Seven Step because it gives the men in the forties a chance. The Midway Rhythm, taken to England from Paris by a Dutchman and bared of all Gallicisms, has been approved by the Imperial Society of Teachers of Dancing. A third dance, the Moochi, has appeared, but is declared to be too primitive. One expert favors having no new dances but a revival of the old ones. Meanwhile the dancers are using old steps until the professors get together.

MAE CLARKE FORMER SINGER

Mae Clarke, who started on the screen with Fox Films a year ago, previously was a leading dancer and singer in musical comedy, night clubs and vaudeville.

PIERRE KEY'S Music Article

BY PIERRE V. R. KEY

The Metropolitan Opera bosses have no easy time of it. Saddled with the responsibility of sustaining a great name, they must keep sundry fires burning. A fading baritone or some tight-voiced tenor causes a disapproving scowl. Let the orchestra "cover up" a principal artist or fail absolutely to click with the chorus, and the critics combine in a chortle of their own. On another day it is some portion of the settings which brings the scenic artist in for scotching. No crown ever rested heavier on a kingly head than that worn by the Metropolitan management, and there's a reason. People look upon the Metropolitan as foremost in the world of lyric drama, and expect from it the extraordinary. Not now and again, mind you, but every evening or afternoon in the week. Having established a superlative standard, the most discriminating portion of its clientele has come to regard anything short of it as distinctly out of order. Bestowing admiration today, tomorrow's demand is for things meriting admiration plus.

For twenty-two years Giulio Gatti-Casazza has gone steadfastly on his way, bent on doing his best. A highly difficult job, too, when you view it from every side. Because there are various tastes to please in addition to those of Chairman Otto H. Kahn and his associate directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Presenting performances in an antiquated theater, where the stage resources are distressingly out of date, Mr. Gatti has also been confronted with an economic problem due to rising costs of operation. At least, it is his theory that any opera should pretty much pay its own way. And so—as he himself has repeatedly pointed out—he feels justified in keeping a weather eye on the box office.

Whether he does so at the expense of artistic possibilities is, one may say, a matter of opinion. There are some who feel such to be the case. On the other hand Mr. Gatti's champions are equally positive that in his efforts to keep the debit side of the Metropolitan ledger clean no performances suffer artistically.

OPPOSING ATTITUDES

That Mr. Gatti is capable of exceptional things operatic he has long since proved. It is one difficulty he has created in seeking to please the many it is his job to please. Rare it is any marked deviation from his own standard—so consistently maintained in the earlier years of his regime—that causes comment sometimes unpleasant to hear.

In all fairness, however, there should be a readier attitude of the critically inclined to recognize unstrudgingly a fine achievement. It is just possible that the element which favors a quarter-million-dollar deficit each year has grown overexacting. Or, viewing matters from the managerial side of the fence, Mr. Gatti, conscious of his security in his post, may have become sensitive to criticism of any sort.

If such indeed is the case, then it is a pity. A quasi-public institution (despite its being privately owned,) there are traditions surrounding the Metropolitan which its staunchest friends cherish. No doubt it is this desire to see them upheld that prompts their scrupulous weighing of what is being done today. Whether or no, any constructively meant comment—if it be considerately phrased—should not be taken amiss. Granting the justice of this, these commentators should be equally ready to voice approving words when the occasion demands.

There was one a few afternoons ago—the premiere of "The Fair at Sorochintsky." Which leads us to pleasant things, since a merry time was (or should have been) had by all.

A HAPPY OPERA

You may peck at some spots, if a but finicky, but Moussorgsky's posthumous opera, "The Fair at Sorochintsky" is good music fun. Not much of a story, but what of it? A merry piece, it is bright and lively . . . and charming straight through.

The tale centers round a Russian fair, the meeting of a youth and a maid, and incidents interfering with their endeavors to marry. Supported in their desire by a peasant husband, they are opposed by his spiteful wife—until her opposition falls before the discovery of her own intrigue with the half-wit son of the village pastor.

Three acts in which four settings are used furnish the pictorial side of the opera. Captivating the eye is the ballet scene, devised skillfully by Rosina Galli (Mrs. Gatti-Casazza in private life,) and for which the Russian scenic artist Soudeikine designed and painted the sets. As in preparing the "fair" settings, he has allowed his imagination to give one a modernistic bit of outdoor background which, with the clean-cut buildings nearer the eye, are probably neater than you would behold in the Russia of today.

But it is charming and the interior of the peasant couple's cottage is true to type.

The ballet, descriptive of the drunken peasant's dream, shows hades and heaven; and in it the Metropolitan corps distinguished itself as it rarely does. For the unusual costumings a special word is due; it was all very decidedly out of the ordinary.

SPLENDID PERFORMANCE

Five of the principals, along with the orchestra and chorus, carried off the musical honors . . . of which Conductor Serafin merited his particular share. Ina Bourskaya was probably the truest character, as the peasant's wife, in the Russian sense. Her singing and acting touched a high mark.

But Maria Muller also fitted nicely into the scheme of things, her "dance song" in the final act being capitally done. Ezio Pinza's gorgeous basso voice and fine acting made the husband a real figure, and Marek Windheim in the important if minor role of the pastor's foolish son won approving words.

It was Frederick Jagel, however, who made upon the majority present the strongest impression . . . on the singing side. Given music that fitted both his voice and style, he never appeared to better advantage. Improving steadily since he joined the Metropolitan, this American tenor is unquestionably well on his way to big things.

CONQUERING AGAIN

Completed by Nikolai Tcherepnine, the Moussorgsky score is light and airy . . . as the story, based on Gogol's humorous tale, demands. Briefer than most three-act operas, "The Fair" should find a place in the Metropolitan's permanent repertoire.

Triumphs seem to perch regularly upon John Charles Thomas's shoulder. Returning to New York after a series of unprecedented conquests as guest baritone with the Chicago Civic Opera, Thomas gave his first recital of the season before as many persons as the Town Hall would hold.

Years ago, when this gifted singer bade farewell to light opera, we predicted he would ultimately reach the top. He is close now to the peak—with the mellowest days of his career still to come.

Radiating good humor and buoyancy, the baritone sang with an art finer and more sensitive than any he has yet disclosed. His German lieder revealed him anew as a student bent upon bettering previous high accomplishments; and in his French and English text groups there was also evident a growth which should gratify those who have followed him along his traveled path.

In his wide coloring of tone to suit every mood, no less than in the conveying of each poem, Thomas was so consistently the artist that any adverse comment would be straining the issue. Such singing is rarely heard

GYPSY SINGER

She's a gypsy singer. Her name is Nastia Poliakova, and you are quite likely to meet her before the current season is done. She comes from Russia with her husband (Dimitri Poliakov) and Ury Wosilivsky. These two latter are guitarists, who stand —clad in brightly colored costumes —playing their instruments while Mme. Poliakova sings, seated in a chair.

The intimate Bijou Theater was chosen for this newcomer's debut. If fortunate for her art—which is of the miniature type—it prevented several hundred persons from hearing her. Standing room also was at a premium, so the announcement of a second recital in a larger auditorium was a natural consequence.

Mme. Poliakova is short and plump, but comely. It is the delicacy of her interpretations, the subtle inflections and rapid shifting from one mood to another that capture the listener's approval. Her voice is insignificant, as an instrument. But she has something to give and does not spare herself. Enthusiasm prevailed from beginning to the end of the program, which was one entirely of Russian gypsy songs.

VOICE AND MORE VOICE

Singers have dominated the recent week in New York's music realm. A high light was the recital of Gina Pinnera, who came unheralded nearly three years ago and won immediate recognition through her exceptional dramatic soprano and a bravura style befitting her resources.

But Mme. Pinnera has gained, since then, in the element she most needed, repression. If still at her best in soaring flights of tone, this American singer has become reposeful in commendable degree. There were no moments during her Carnegie Hall recital when she met exacting tests, and her improvement in interpreting music of the quieter order won her new admirers.

Resisting the desire to give lavishly when one has abundant voice to give is the attribute of the true artist. Mme. Pinnera is progressing in this branch of her endeavors and as a consequence is rounding out her art.

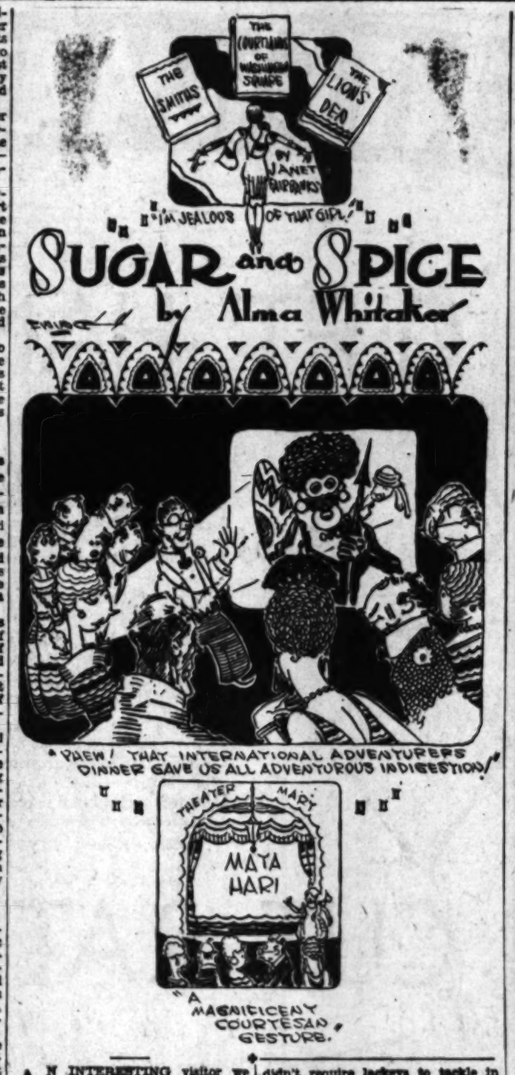
MANY ROLES PLAYED

Virginia Sale, screen comedienne, who at present is playing in "Many A Slip," which Vin Moore is directing for Universal, has played the range of rural and night life, office and factory, society and slum characterizations for the screen.



AN INTERESTING visitor we may anticipate is Janet Ayer Fairbanks, daughter of Judge Benjamin F. Ayer of Chicago, and author of three delightful books about Washington conditions—"The Smiths," and "The Cortlands of Washington Square" and now "The Lion's Den," just off the press. Oh, I would like to have written "The Lion's Den." I'm jealous of that girl.

Janet's father is a most distinguished person in Chicago. She discovered Washington during the war days and is still a constant visitor, hence she knows whereof she speaks. "The Smiths" was second choice for the Pulitzer prize in 1926. "The Lion's Den" has occupied the years since then—no hasty potboiler this. Janet is credited with having helped to elect Presidents and being a remarkably smart campaigner. She is married to Kellogg Fairbanks.

Everyone who has met her finds her completely delightful. So when the promised visit here materializes, we are assured of a most satisfying guest of honor.

Another bright girl in town is Anne Austin, back to the dear old home town to rest and stave off a nervous breakdown. Anne has written nine books in three years, having made such a hit with her first, "Jackson Street," which is still selling nicely, thank you. Subsequent best-sellers are "The Avenging Parrott" and "Black Pigeon." Anne was formerly editor of a magazine here, but was chiefly famous as the mother of the most remarkable child ever known to Southern California, Elizabeth, who at 9 years of age, had graduated from high school, and now at 16 is all through college, having written numerous magazine articles and sold them on the side.

This Elizabeth has now announced that she is tired of artistic people and the social set she has been reared in, and proposes to be a first-class business girl. To which end she has obtained herself a job at $100 a month as a secretary in a big firm. Mother, doubting Elizabeth's ability to stick it, placed $500 in the bank for her to draw upon in a crisis. Elizabeth hasn't touched it yet and vows it won't ever be necessary, thank you, mother dear. Anyway, that's a score for Babbitt.

A magnificently courtesan gesture—Mrs. Alice Barney's play, "Mata Hari," at the Theater Mart last week, even if Mrs. Barney does confess to having gone to sleep while her secretary read her excerpts about the life of the famous houri from which the play was modeled. Would this be subconscious or unconscious inspiration?

Jeraldine Dvorak achieved some fine emotional acting in the name role of the play.

Mrs. Barney cannot remember how many plays she has written. It seems that, when she was a social light in Washington, whenever funds were needed for charities, she just dashed off a new play, produced it at her own expense at the Belasco, and made a neat little haul of $3000 or so. Intriguing.

She's a painter, too; once did two portraits of Mrs. Patrick Campbell, one for herself and one for "Stella." She is also quite a brilliant musician, but her arithmetic is very poor.

Anyway, the scene of the first act of "Mata Hari" is laid in 1890. But in the second act, laid in 1917, Mata Hari refers blandly to "fourteen years ago." Or was it Mata Hari who did not know her arithmetic?

Queens in regal purple rubbed elbows with wide-eyed peasant girls at the colorful little tea given last week by Philokalia, the professional art students' club of U.C.L.A., to promote their play "The Golden Youth." Members of the cast, in full regalia, gayly served tea and cakes. Sixty-five persons in that cast, if you please, including three husky members of the football team, who, after much persuasion, were lured into the fragile silk and lace of French lackeys. Good thing they didn't require lackeys to tackle in those old days.

Most impressive, the list of patrons and patronesses, those artful dears worked up for their play, from Mary and Doug to Mr. and Mrs. William G. McAdoo. The Hobart Bosworths were also prominent on the list, since Mrs. Hobart is an ardent student in the art department.

But Mayor Porter refused to be a patron, oh, yes he did. It seems that some one at the Mayorial residence read the note of invitation too fast, and thought the Mayor was being invited to attend the play, so sent a polite regret. Oh, Mayor Porter.

Heggee Hay, who took the frightful risk of becoming Mrs. Laurence Grant last February, seems to be bearing up bravely. She has a ducky garden, to which she entices hundreds of birds who feed from her hands and perch on her shoulders archly unafraid. The neighborhood declares the only time she nags Laurence is when he forgets to purchase the correct seeds, which she has been reading up about in a specially acquired library.

Laurence's hair had to be gray for his role in "The Command to Love" and then he had to turn it red for "This Modern World." Heggee feels as if she has more than her share of husbands.

Phew! That international adventurer's dinner gave us all adventurous indigestion. Almost five hours of exciting stories and adventurous celebrities, enough for any three ordinary meetings. Col. Ed Bailey, the president, presided with his delicious Australian cockney, even unto introducing Woody Van Dyke as the director of "Trader Horn" and suggesting that he give us some of the "high lights" of the expedition. It just shows what one can achieve without an h in one's constitution.

Adventurous nabobs present included Dr. Edward Douglas Jones, authority on Alaska; Mrs. Ulysses Grant McQueen, founder of the International Women's Aeronautics Association; Sydney Lawrence, the painter of vast scenery; Dr. Arthur Torrance, explorer and authority on tropical medicine, and formerly actually physician to the doughty Trader Horn, and off to Africa again next week; Capt. F. McCord, who fascinated us with stories of treasure hunting in the Cocos Islands; Capt. Lawrence D. Mitchell, soon off on another exciting big fishing expedition with Zane Grey; Capt. Alton Parker of the Byrd expedition; Fred B. Hunie and F. Garland Swain, who did 5500 miles cruising in a thirty-foot yawl 'round the French Marquesas; R. Heathcote of the Matson Line, with Fiji films; several foreign consuls, numerous stylish journalists, etc, etc.

Do you wonder that, when these great minds had finished telling us their exciting tales, we were utterly boggled. Better than reading a whole library of adventure books. Any one of them would have made an evening's entertainment.

Mrs. George Bishop is proving a fond angel to Ebell's Rest Cottage. It was Mrs. Bishop who gave the sun room and then added a new matron's room. No wonder they gave a stylish party for her last week and regard her as the answer to a club prayer.

Children in Orthopedic Wa... Eagerly Expect Visit ...

BY DOROTHY

Santa will come to "The Top of th... of the children of the orthopedic ward ... General Hospital. Will their Santa have w... toys?

"Sure, we saw him put his whis... on and he had a bald head till he put his wig on," yelled a round-faced Mexican child with sparkling black eyes. His bare brown body jumped up and down in his crib like a dynamo of activity. But this little body had a distorted curve, a humped arch for its spinal column, crossed by a long surgical scar. Not just one Christmas day, but many of them, had he spent in the General Hospital. Many of these children have been there several years, so that they describe the annual Santa Claus of the last year.

WAITING FOR SANTA CLAUS

Chirping and squealing, these children of the out-of-door ward on the roof of the hospital, moved with quick, inhuman movements of mechanical toys. Only those parts of their diseased bodies free of casts or braces could express their unending energy and the results were grotesque. Jumping-jack hops and jerks, although these movements lacked the smoothness of co-ordinated free motion, they served their owners well. Play and toys were important in their noisy lives; teasing, games and friendships. And every member of this lively sick world was waiting for Santa Claus.

Little Raymond with an impish face upward of his eyebrows, seductive and amusing in his play as a little squirrel, remembered Santa. He would not talk about him, stuck the tip of his tongue in the place vacated by his four front teeth and bashfully nodded his head. But his large, expressive eyes shone with joy at the mention of the hospital Christmas party.

"Dear Santa: Will you please give me a bat, a ball, a fountain pen and a football and a pair of boxing gloves. Much love to Santa, by Ralph."

WHAT THEY WANT

Crippled and confined in the hospital for six years, Ralph, who will be a cripple for life—probably a short life, asked for boxing gloves! Wrist watches and dolls were requested by the girl patients in their Santa Claus letters. Perhaps the Miss Ingersolls of the nurses were the envy of the girls. So many of the little boys asked for boxing gloves. The radio account of "fights" created great excitement, even betting among these young members of the fistic world, and interests the part in boxing gloves.

Between the patrol corps of the wheelers whose drums beat loudly, the hospital Santa Claus marches for the children. The thrill of drums, the brilliant color of the marcher costumes, the excitement created an unforgettable picture in the children's minds. For this great day all of the crippled children are carried, are carried on wheel chairs or stretchers from their roofs to the real out-of-doors of grass, palm trees and flowers of the hospital lawn.

BED-RIDDEN OFFICER

Disabled as an adult, a 14-year-old Chinese girl described the Christmas trees and decorations which would make their ward festive. Though she was required to lie flat on her back continually, she was quite content and embroidered on the spoke. She was an officer of the "Top of the World Club," formed to encourage good citizenship, health and happiness among its members—the sick children of the hospital.

Impulsive affectionate Spanish Cornelia who liked to touch with her fingers the "lady's" fur collar and held her hands said that her mother would tell about Christmas. The friend was robed like an Eskimo in hood and cape, laughed and flapped up and down in bed like a seal on its fins. Her Eskimo costume was not of warm fur but of stiff hard plaster which kept her body to move as a flat unbending board on her two movable arms. Her dark Mexican eyes had a gleam of mischief and softly curly hair fell from her hood which had holes on each side to allow sound to reach her ears. She greeted the lady on to her friend, a quiet colored child. Smiling and laughing under many blankets, the blind neighbor had a fascinating face with large white eyeballs contrasting jet-black pupils. With a pleasant grin she crawled under her covers, making no comment on past Christmas parties.

FANTASTIC GAYETY

Fantastic is the gayety and play of these incapacitated children. The out-of-door ward is a strange world. Each child has a different

CANDLE-MAKING QUERY SOLVED

Data Concerning Old - Time Illuminating Process Hard to Locate

How many times do you have to dip a wick into grease to make a home-made candle?

At what temperature should the grease be for this process? In 1775 an answer to these queries would have been promptly given by any passer-by.

Today, in 1930, Harry Edwards, property man for Director Brabbin, was unable to find a single individual in all Los Angeles who could answer these questions off-hand. Electric lights have placed candles and candle-making very much in the background of the American mind. Edwards finally got the data he wanted by recourse to old-time histories.

"The Great Meadow" is a dramatization of the much-discussed Elizabeth Maddox historical novel, a picture of the trek of Virginians across the Indian-infested mountains of 1775, to far-away Kentucky.

RUBIN PLAYS EVERY ROLE

Film Actor Takes Sixteen Parts in "Humanette" Now Being Made

Unusual photographic effects in Leigh Jason's latest "Humanette" short for Radio Pictures has provoked considerable interest and comment in Hollywood technical circles, it is said.

In this production the cast of characters is a most peculiar one, reading "Benny Rubin" exclusively. There are sixteen different characters and Benny plays them all. On several occasions there are eight Rubins on the screen at once.

The illusion, according to Jason, was accomplished by what is known in camera circles as a "four-way split," which means using the same reel of film four different times, exposing only a quarter of it on each exposure.

While the "four-way split" idea is not new, according to Jason, it reaches perfection in this production, due to a special micrometer device designed by Lloyd Knechtel, chief of the camera effects department. Formerly it has been necessary to take such films at considerable distance from the player, but in this latest "Humanette" the "shots" are all close-ups.

Friday Morning Club to Hear Church Music

A program of religious music is being prepared by Alexander Stewart of the chair of church music and orchestral and choir conducting of the University of Southern California, as a Christmas program for the Friday Morning Club, next Friday. It will be sponsored by Mrs. Cecil Frankel, chairman of music.

It will be a historical program depicting periods in the development of church music, beginning with the early Latin and Italian religious music and continuing through the reformation and romantic periods. English church music, cosmopolitan, including early Russian, Later Russian, Bohemian and Belgian-French Church music and ending with American gospel songs. Some rare and beautiful music will be heard for seldom has so comprehensive a review of religious music ever been attempted in Los Angeles.

Soloists appearing will be Nell Coburn Walker, soprano; Fannie Lou Reed, contralto; J. Malcomson Huddy, tenor; Gordon Berger, baritone, and Iva May Travis, accompanist.

Catholic boys choir, Rev. E. Vitry, conductor, will sing some of the early Latin music and a chorus of sixteen solo voices will contribute other parts of the program. The University of Southern California String Quartet consisting of Betty Travis Berger violin; Victor Boggis, violin; Verna Montgomery, viola and Dorothy Sproess, cello, will accompany the solo quartet and chorus. The program will end with the singing by the audience, choir and chorus of "Come All Ye Faithful," Mr. Stewart will conduct.

"The Messiah" Will Be Sung Tuesday Night

Handel's oratorio "The Messiah" will be presented by students, alumni and faculty in the Semi-centennial Chorus of the University of Southern California under the direction of Alexander Stewart Tuesday evening at Bovard Auditorium.

Notable among the solo numbers is the aria, "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth," to be sung by the soprano, Lisa Roma. Miss Roma, head of the opera department of the college of music at the university, will have the unusual experience of singing the soprano role of "The Messiah" on three successive nights, flying from one musical engagement to the other, her appearances on Sunday and Monday nights being at Tucson and Phoenix.

Fred Scott, tenor, who has recently added to his reputation in oratorio and concert work a notable success in motion pictures, will sing "Comfort Ye" and "Every Valley Shall Be Exalted," as well as the more dramatic arias "Thy Rebuke Hath Broken His Heart" and "He Shall Dash Them in Pieces."

Clifford Lott, baritone, will interpret the dramatic arias "Why Do the Nations" and "Who Shall Abide."

Elizabeth Monser Biehl, contralto, will have the arias "He Shall Feed His Flock" and "He Was Despised."

With the accompaniment of the University of Southern California Orchestra and the great organ in Bovard Auditorium played by Dean Walter F. Skeele of the college of music the choral numbers will be sung by 250 voices. Arthur M. Perry, assistant dean of the college of music, is manager of the production.

Students Will Give Program

On Thursday the Immaculate Heart College students of Madame Catherine Collette, assisted by the college orchestra under the direction of Prof. Franz Darvas, will present a Christmas program in the auditorium on the corner of Western and Los Feliz. The soloists are the Misses Rebecca Stone, Curtina Coffey, Irene Nunes, Marian Moore and Virginia Warren.

Hazel Filer in Recent Recital

Frank Darvas, who enjoys a large piano class at Immaculate Heart College in Hollywood and another in Anaheim, presented Hazel Filer in a recital in Anaheim recently. Miss Filer, in addition to well-known compositions by Mendelssohn, Chopin and Scriabine, played two works by Louis Danz, a composer living in Anaheim who has attracted favorable attention. Mr. Danz is also a pupil of Darvas.

Darvas's lectures at the Immaculate Heart College on symphonic and operatic music have been well received. At present he is discussing Wagner's "Meistersinger."

CARO ROMA GIVEN CLUB RECEPTION

Mme. Caro Roma, composer, a resident of Hollywood, was honored by the Cadman Creative Club, with a reception and musical, given in her honor, in the home of Baroness Ryhiner-Morrill, last night.

Flora Myers Engel, soprano, sang a group of songs of which Mme. Caro Roma is the composer. Laurel Nemeth Saunders, dramatic soprano, also sang one of Mme. Roma's selections.

In addition, Franz Darvas, pianist, played several ensemble piano numbers with Baroness Ryhiner-Morrill. Mrs. George Mitchell, well-known reader, gave readings in the French dialect.

Mme. Roma plans to make Hollywood her permanent residence.

EXOTIC CARS PROVE COSTLY

Owners of Imported Autos Paid as High as $100 Daily Rental

Where do the expensive, exotic automobiles seen in films come from? Who in Hollywood, for instance, owns an Iberg-Issota and loans it to the film studios?

E. C. Cline, head of Radio Pictures' transportation department, explains that the machines are practically all privately owned. They are rented from their owners for a standard rate of $100 per day, usually with the owner's chauffeur as driver.

Cline has a list of every known make of automobile, all owned by individuals in Southern California. His list of owners of foreign-made cars, who are willing to rent their machines to studios, totals 230.

The use of foreign makes of automobiles has trebled since the studios began filming foreign versions of their talkies, Cline declares. Over half the owners of the machines listed for rental are motion-picture stars, directors or producers. Most of them live in Hollywood, but there are owners listed in Santa Barbara on the north, and San Diego on the south.

OLD WORLD FURNITURE

1/4 TO 1/2 LESS

Hand-Carved Gothic Cabinet in Italian Walnut, $134.50

Stirring news—this! When a similar Yuletide sale was held a year ago, it met with such enthusiastic response that we could scarcely meet the demand. This year, after months of planning, we were successful in securing this shipment of marvelous period reproductions . . . together with a New York importer's collection. Represented are exquisite pieces from Italy, Belgium and France.

Book Publishing House
with complete, modern equipment, established since 1911, specialises on publishing books of all sorts for writers. Our 20 years' experience, our own workmanship, and consequent low production facilities enable us to offer writers the most reasonable possible publishing proposition, either on royalty basis or otherwise. Editing of manuscripts included, at no extra cost. Worthy manuscripts financed, part or entirely. Publishing estimates furnished free.

$50 cash bonus for the best book manuscript submitted us during January, 1931.

We also conduct a complete literary service comprising criticism, revision and marketing of manuscripts. Our editor has really sold his own fiction and other literary material for years, and is still selling it. He can doubtless sell YOUR work if at all saleable. We have a short-story course, on the market since 1918.

We also copyright photoplays in our magazine, New Ideas. Sample copy 10c.

In brief, we can supply any of your literary wants.

Absolutely DEPENDABLE services. Advance Publishing Company, Editorial Office, 1034 Fidelity Bldg., 6th & Spring sts.

KING WINTER TO PROVIDE CALIFORNIA PLAY DAYS

All Near-by Mountain Areas Offer Carnival Season Within Short Distance From Los Angeles

With weather forecasts indicating the arrival of the snow season in the mountains of Southern California several weeks in advance of the winter opening of last year, city, State and county orgalzations, as well as private groups are today making extensive preparations for the accommodation of the largest number of visitors to near-by winter mountain playgrounds ever recorded in the Southwest, according to word from the Los Angeles Playground and Recreation Department.

In the San Bernardino Mountains a score or more of resorts, from Camp Seeley, the city's municipal winter playground, on the west, to Big Bear Lake on the east, a total of nearly 200,000 winter season visitors is expected. In this area, resort heads have formed the Rim O' the World League, and this organization will provide concerted effort in developing the winter program of the entire mountain section.

ROADS TO BE OPEN

The co-operation of the San Bernardino county road officials has been promised in keeping all roads leading to Camp Seeley, Lake Arrowhead, Big Bear, and other principal centers in good condition no matter how heavy the snowfall.

A big winter season is also expected at other playgrounds along the rim of Southern California's near-by ranges. Camp Baldy, Mt. Wilson, Big Pines County Camp, Idyllwild, and other resorts that are easily accessible to the motorist, are planning to take care of a huge influx of visitors as soon as the snow season is on in earnest.

STEEL TOBOGGAN SLIDES

Participation of mountain visitors in all of the sports of winter time will be made more interesting this season through the development of new and improved facilities. Steel-lined toboggan slides, ski-jumps,

State Collected $250,000 in Fines in 1930

Renewal of motor vehicle registration for 1931 and issuance of new license plates will begin tomorrow. The Los Angeles branch of the State Motor Vehicle Department will begin to issue new plates at 8:30 a.m. and will be open during December each week day from 8:30 to 4:30, except Saturday, when it will close at 12 noon. During January the office hours of the local office will be from 8 to 5, including Saturday.

Whereas a ruling of the department makes it mandatory that applications be filed or in the mail on or before January 15, 1931, there will be no delinquency penalties before January 31.

ARRESTS FEBRUARY 1

On February 1, 1930, city, county and State traffic officers will arrest those not having plates or applications pending.

Eight different methods of getting plates may be used satisfactorily, by Los Angeles motorists, according to Lon W. Butler, manager of the Los Angeles branch of the State department. The application may be mailed to Sacramento, presented in person or by agent at the Los Angeles branch or presented to one of six automobile clubs. These clubs include the American Automobile Owners' Association, the North American Automobile Association, Brooks-Randsell (of Hollywood,) National Automobile Club, Automobile Club of Southern California and Pacific Coast Automobile Association. Glendale owners may use the Gibraltar Auto Club. Persons living in Orange county may use the Orange County Club. The Southern California club is one of the largest distributors of the Americans to Compete With English Shots

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—For the first time in the history of international match shooting a team of .22-caliber rifle shooters from the United States will pit its skill against an English team on a British range next July. Announcement of the decision to send a team to England was made today by the National Rifle Association.

While small-bore matches have been held for some years between English and American teams, they have been conducted on the cable plan, each team shooting on its own range and cabling the scores to the other team. The match that has been arranged for next July, however, will be shot by both the American and English teams on the British national match range at Bisley.

LIGHT OIL? NO, NUMBER 40

Numerals Substitute for Old System (Medium, Heavy) to Give Definite Measure of Viscosity

The Society of Automotive Engineers, with the co-operation of leading automotive and oil manufacturers, has developed a uniform system of standardizing viscosity of oil. This system has been called the S.A.E. viscosity numbering system, and, as the name implies, concerns itself only with that one property of oil. Hitherto, oils in the various different brands have been marked light, medium, heavy, extra heavy, etc. This represented merely a classification system for each individual manufacturer, and naturally resulted in a wide variation between brands; so much so, in fact, that in one case an oil marked "light" by one manufacturer actually possessed a body or viscosity heavier than one marked "heavy" by another company.

Under the new system it is possible for the automobile manufacturer and dealer to instruct motorists as to the exact oil viscosity needed for his particular driving conditions. The system is very simple. The possible oil viscosities have been arbitrarily divided into six groups, ranging from very light oil, which is now marked S.A.E. Viscosity No. 10, to the extra heavy oil, which is marked S.A.E. Viscosity No. 70. The motorist is now instructed to use, for example, S.A.E. No. 40 for summer driving

GASOLINE STANDARD REVEALED

Good Fuel Must Balance Variant Qualities Since Requirements Opposed

Hazarding a prediction that the oil refiner who is able to anticipate the popular colors for women's clothes and matches this with the color of his gasoline would probably reap a large return in increased sales from the feminine members of the driving fraternity, Dr. O. C. Bridgeman of the Bureau of Standards discussed the ideal characteristics of gasoline before the Philadelphia section of the Society of Automotive Engineers.

"The essential properties that a gasoline must possess," said Dr. Bridgeman, "are ability to give easy starting, rapid acceleration, good distribution, and low dilution of the crankcase oil, together with noncorrosiveness from the presence of sulphur, lack of tendency to vapor-lock, high antiknock value, and lack of gum-forming constituents. An ideal fuel would be one which fulfills these requirements completely, but some of the requirements are at variance with others so the commercial product must be a compromise.

"The gasolines available today to motorists represent each refiner's attempt to balance the varying requirements of present-day automobile engines and an economic use of the stocks and crudes available. It can be seen, moreover, that no one specified gasoline can best meet the requirements of all cars. Variations in design necessitate differences in fuels to produce optimum performance with each. The oil refiner and the automobile engineer are working more closely together today than ever before to so modify fuels and engine design that a more generally satisfactory matching of car and fuel will result.

VIRGIL PARTLY OPEN TO TRAFFIC TODAY

Nearly half of the final surfacing of Virgil avenue was complete last evening and that part is open to traffic today. The street will be finally completed about the first of the new year, and provide a by-pass for streams of traffic coming in from Hollywood and San Fernando Valley points on Franklin, Hollywood, Sunset, and Santa Monica boulevards. This route will eliminate the circuitous drive along Sunset Boulevard, or the traffic-ridden Glendale Boulevard route to the downtown area, and will divert these cars to the Fifth, Sixth and Seventh-street entrances, or to less crowded arteries south of them.

The improvement nearing completion added three portions to existing parts of Virgil avenue, making it a fifty-six-foot street between curbs, beginning at the junction of Hollywood and Sunset boulevards, and running to Wilshire at a point just south of Lafayette Park. North of Hollywood Boulevard the street continues as a fifty-six-foot compressed concrete paved artery, but under the name of Hillhurst, crossing Franklin and Los Feliz, and making a final junction with Vermont in the fashionable residential district at the south gate to Griffith Park.

The job has been handled in two contracts, approximating $200,000, the six-inch concrete base and the final finish of two-inch asphaltic concrete being done by George H. Oswald, while grading, storm drains and the sanitary sewers were put in by the Lewis Construction Company. The Lewis company finished its work on November 8, and the Oswald company will complete its task by the first of the new year, city inspectors on the work report. Any further delay on the opening of the street will be due to work that has to be done by the Los Angeles Railway, which has a private right of way crossing south of First street, and which has double car tracks on the street between Clinton avenue and Fountain street. These will require considerable leveling and grading and the putting down of new tracks and ties, as well as surfacing.

The portion opened today is between Clinton and Wilshire and provides a cross-artery for First, Beverly, Temple and Clinton, but the portion north of that will cause some delay as the concrete base is not set sufficiently to take the final surfacing.

Traffic lanes are being laid off in the street with metal buttons, and it will be necessary to provide traffic signal control at the First-Beverly-Virgil intersections, traffic heads believe, if the motoring public uses the cross-artery as much as expected.

Rail Subway Sought Rather Than Ban on Curb Parking

Elimination of Curb Parking Declared Damaging

another important consideration is involved.

"Unless loading zones are eliminated, the curb parking ban would be ineffective. And loading zones are absolutely essential. The larger stores either have alleys or driveways on their own property for the expeditious receipt and delivery of freight and packages. But 75 per cent of the stores have no means of ingress or egress other than their front doors. This means that the majority must depend upon loading zones—at least one in each block. One truck parked at a curb reduces the flow of one line of traffic—just as effectually as though every available inch of space were taken by curb parkers.

HUGE EXPENSE NAMED

"It has been freely suggested that the movement of freight and express be restricted to evenings. For the larger stores, this may be satisfactory, but the financial burden would be too great for the small stores to bear. Trucking concerns would have to double their rates, stores would have to engage extra help, and deliveries would be retarded.

"Again, if curb parking were prohibited altogether it would give rise to a slow-moving line of traffic encircling the various blocks. Chauffeurs, taxi drivers, and friends or relatives of people visiting downtown buildings would move like snails, taking advantage of every opportunity to stall. This line of automobiles would more completely block traffic than if they were parked at the curb.

"Decentralization, the pet remedy of the police and the uninformed generally, has been demonstrated to be a thoroughly discredited solution. The downtown district is necessary, a vital convenience for the public. The greatest stores are concentrated in a small area, making it possible to shop efficiently and economically. Because of their size, their quick turnovers, the varieties and completeness of their stocks, and their impressive purchasing power, they are able to offer bargains which the public appreciates and to which they should be given every access. A centralized shopping area is an economic necessity, and will always be.

POLICE FALL DOWN

"Now, at the height of the Christmas shopping season, we are experiencing our traffic problem at its most acute stage. There is no use denying that the police have fallen down on the job. It seems to us not so much a matter of more officers, but of more intelligent posting of those now on the force. Only the other day, during the middle of the afternoon, there was no traffic officer at Ninth and Olive streets, and reports came to us from numerous sources that motorists traversed a block in a half hour.

"The important problem is not one of eliminating curb parking, removing loading zones, or correcting police inefficiency, but of finding a practical and economic rapid-transit plan.

"Just as the city now provides a right-of-way for surface cars, it must eventually provide a right-of-way for an underground railway system. This idea has been well received by some of the most influential men of the city, who have been acquainted with the plan for some time.

"It is proposed to construct a complete subterranean loop from Hill street at Fourth street, east on Fourth street to Broadway, south on Broadway to Tenth street, west on Tenth street to Figueroa street, with exits and entrances for electric cars at Fourth and Hill streets, Broadway and Tenth streets, and Tenth and Figueroa streets. With no street cars on the surface in the central area, automobile through traffic would be speeded, and street cars would, of course, move more rapidly underground."

ROSE CANYON TO BE OPENED

It has been definitely stated by the superintendent of streets, city of San Diego, that Rose Canyon will be open as a paved highway on Monday morning, the 15th inst.

ARTESIA STREET CLOSED

Main street in Artesia is now closed due to construction, and as the work will progress as far north as Norwalk, it is expected that the route will be closed for some time.

plates each year, serving as it does a large membership.

"The best time during the day to appear at the State department here," Mr. Butler said, "is about 9 o'clock in the afternoon. That has been the lull time in the past and will no doubt be so this year. The rush hours are generally in the morning, except, of course, on the last day. I especially urge that all have their correct mail address on their white slips and that they bring their pink slips, too, if they have recently acquired them, but have not yet had the transfer of legal ownership recorded with the department.

"Ten per cent of the total registration here last year paid delinquent fines and it is to be hoped, for the sake of the motorist, that this be materially cut this year."

AUTO CLUB SERVICE

"Shop early for license plates" is a sensible rule to observe, suggests the Automobile Club of Southern California, which draws attention to the fact that the State in some years has collected as much as $350,000 in penalties from car owners who neglected to register within the time fixed by law.

A comparatively simple procedure is involved in registering and obtaining the new orange on black plates for the coming year. The white slip certificate of registration is presented together with the amount of the fee, which is $3, with a graduated scale of added charges for commercial vehicles according to weight and other features.

Beginning tomorrow the Division of Motor Vehicles in Sacramento will receive applications and deliver plates by mail. In order to assure delivery and avoid delay and confusion, it is important that the white slip bears the correct address. The Automobile Club will conduct a registration service and issue plates at all of its offices in the various cities of Southern California for its members and visiting motorists. Plates will be issued by the club for passenger cars only. Applications for commercial vehicles will be received, however, and plates will be mailed by the Motor Vehicle Department.

Motorists are advised that where the white slip has been lost or mutilated, application is made for a duplicate white certificate, requiring the payment of an extra fee of 50 cents. If a change in legal ownership is to be recorded, both pink and white slips are presented and an additional fee of $1 is charged.

STOCKHOLDERS INCREASE

An increase of 33 per cent in the number of its stockholders during the past year is announced by the Studebaker Corporation. According to the manufacturer, its stockholders numbered 22,513 on November 9, 1929, and 30,021 on November 10 of this year.

Packard Group Visitors Here

A group of Packard factory representatives were here during the past week, and held a joint North and South California meeting with Packard distributors and agencies in San Francisco over the week-end. Among the eastern group were Ray Chamberlain, general salesmanager; P. H. McKinney, advertising manager; Jack Gilray, supervisor retail sales; Joe Page, service manager, and Jack Loranger, supervisor of wholesale sales.

FIRST-CAR ALBUM—DE MOND

Merrie Oldsmobile Was Earliest

Maurice De Mond and 1900 Olds

This is the second of a series of pictures of prominent men of Los Angeles with their first cars that is appearing each week in this section.—Ed.

MAURICE DE MOND has owned ninety-three cars since his first, an Oldsmobile of the vintage in the accompanying picture. As the popular Breakfast Club leader had no picture of his first car, one of the same model was brought from Lancaster where it is still running, and taken to the Breakfast Club, where Maurice tried to look as he did back in Providence, R. I., when in 1900 he gave the girls a treat by giving them a ride in his car. The Oldsmobile slogan was then "Nothing to watch but the road." Today he drives an eight-cylinder Lincoln and a Ford.

The remarkable record of I. Kashdan, 25-year-old New Yorker, is creating much interest in his style of play. His latest accomplishment is a win from Bogoljubow, who played a world's title match with Alekhine this year. It occurred in recent tourney at Stockholm, where Kashdan placed first, and Bogoljubow tied for second with O. Sioltz, young Swedish expert. Kashdan has just returned to New York after several months in Europe, where he lost but two games, one to Kmach of Austria in the Hamburg team tourney (the game was a conceded draw but the American tried to stretch it to a win as his team was behind,) and the other to Spielmann at Stockholm. There has been much talk of pitting Kashdan against United States Champion Marshall. The latter has stated his willingness to such a match.

The Metropolitan League has finished its schedule, with Beverly Hills and Los Angeles in a tie for first place. These two strong teams were undefeated, their individual match having ended in a tie, which was to have been played off, but the Los Angeles club questions the eligibility of certain players (from the defunct Hollywood team,) which Beverly Hills wished to add to their team, contrary to a previous agreement. The players in question are members of the Beverly Hills Club. With no play-off the money for the cup (intended for first prize) will be held over and applied toward a cup for first prize in the coming Southern California Chess League which starts in February. The other teams in the Metropolitan League were Pasadena, Caltech, Santa Barbara, Arroyo Seco and Glendale.

AMONG THE FANS

During the past two weeks several chess players have mailed me solutions to chess problems. All communications concerning chess should be addressed to the chess editor.

The account of the team match played yesterday between South Park and the Municipal Men's Club will appear next week.

The many friends of Ketchum will be sorry to learn he was accidentally killed by an elevated train in Chicago on December 2. At the time of his death he was working at the Fair store as games demonstrator. Mr. Ketchum was a former member of the local club, leaving here about 1910 for San Francisco, where he lived for many years. He later removed to Milwaukee, Wis., and for some time ran a checker column in the Milwaukee Sentinel. The past six or seven years he has lived in Chicago.

Mr. Ketchum published several books on checkers and also ran a syndicate checker column that appears in several papers in different cities in the United States.

W. R. Wendemuth will publish the Seventh American Tourney Book and expects to have it ready for delivery in about sixty days.

FINISHING PLANT TO ENLARGE

Four Shops Outgrown by Company

Contract to Be Let

A CONTRACT will be let in a few days for an addition doubling the size of the present plant and offices of the Pacific Duco Auto Finishing Company, Inc., 2217 Beverly Boulevard, according to information just given out by the officials of that company.

This company started in a small way eight years ago, immediately following the developing of the Duco process of automobile finishing by the E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Company of Delaware. They outgrew four different shops and built what was then conceded to be the largest shop of its kind in Los Angeles at the Beverly Boulevard location. After three years, they find that it is time again to enlarge, so another wing is to be put on the plant, running west along the boulevard to the newly paved Roselake street, giving them a corner location.

The building is of Spanish architecture and represents an investment of $100,000. Forty men are employed.

RAY GOES TO FACTORY

Thomas M. Ray, zone manager for Olds Motors, left a few days ago for the Oldsmobile factory.

CONSTRUCTION IN PROGRESS

Construction is still in progress on the grade separation at Muscat on Foothill Boulevard, with an oiled detour in use, states the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

DETOUR MADE NECESSARY

Construction is in progress on the Ventura-Ojai Road between Oakview and Tico, making it necessary to detour via Antonio Creek, which is macadamized.

Standard Has New Auto Oil to Introduce

The new Socony motor oil—a 100 per cent paraffine base, dewaxed oil, developed in the laboratories of the Standard Oil Company of New York—will be on sale Saturday to Pacific Coast motorists at independent service stations throughout the territory served by General Petroleum Corporation of California, it was announced yesterday by Ralph G. Bowman, assistant general sales manager of the latter company.

Advantages that will give motorists an entirely new conception of engine lubrication are claimed for the new product. Constant fluidity at below-zero temperatures, freedom from sludge-forming tendencies, resistance to thermal decomposition, and extreme oiliness are a few of the outstanding features claimed for this oil.

Tests, including an airplane flight to an altitude of 25,300 feet, a ten-hour sea-sled run, with the engine running 3600 r.p.m., and a 7206-mile automobile test on the Indianapolis Speedway, were made before the oil was approved for marketing.

Birthday Given Cavalier Tire

The second anniversary of the manufacture of Cavalier tires was celebrated last week at the Pacific Goodrich Rubber Company's plant at Los Angeles, and is to be marked January 1 by an increased production schedule.

A ceremony, marking the second year of production of this tire, was attended by Goodrich executives. F. E. Titus, general sales manager, officiated.

Auto Deaths Grow Fewer

With only one more month to go, motor vehicle fatalities in Los Angeles city and county so far this year show a reduction of 4.7 per cent over those of last year.

However, it is pointed out by the public safety department of the Automobile Club of Southern California that December usually is a peak month in accidents because of the extended holiday season. For this reason it will be necessary for all drivers and pedestrians to exercise special care during the remainder of the year if casualties are to be held at a minimum and a reduction insured over last year.

Bay and to Avalon. There is also an auxiliary sailing race listed around San Clemente Island.

According to the announcement of Staff Commodore Joseph A. Beek of the Southern California Yachting Association, who is chairman of the Christmas holiday regatta at Newport Bay, the 26th to the 28th inst., the international sailing canoe champion, William A. Bartholomae, Jr., has entered the canoe race.

Bartholomae, who is a veteran in the sport of sailing canoes and has held a number of championships, won the international title at the American Canoe Association's regatta at Sugar Island on the St. Lawrence River last summer.

Beek said that entries in the ten classes of small sailing craft that are billed on the regatta card are being received from San Diego, Santa Barbara, San Francisco, besides from near-by coastal cities.

AVIATION

PLANE SELLING PROBLEMS MET

Salesmen Inconspicuous but Never Idle

Many Discouraging Features Attached to Job

Prospects Found in Various Walks of Life

BY FRANK J. CARMODY

Because their work is slow and labored in contrast with the spectacular speed normally associated with all aerial activity, airplane salesmen attract very little general attention. Theirs is an effort conducted far in the background.

That, however, does not minimize its importance. Struggling to develop the thing that eventually will make aviation the economic success that so many believe it will be—a market—their daily stint necessarily must represent the slowest form of progress in the entire field. At the same time it remains one of the fundamentally most important.

The average man never hears of the airplane salesman. About the only occasion upon which he does is when someone has combined with his sales effort a spectacular accomplishment in piloting an airplane. Then the interest is more in the accomplishment itself than in the force which gave it impulse.

ENTIRELY LOGICAL

The intelligent salesman explains this as entirely logical. He simply has not met the public as an airplane salesman for the simple reason that the public has not yet started buying airplanes. So far, as salesman, he has dealt with the commercial air-line operator, the flying school, and the government.

Inconspicuous though he is, the real salesman is one of the truest pioneers in aviation. His task, which is one of the least profitable, at least temporarily, is one of the hardest in the industry—that of building up a market for airplanes. By "market" he means private buying of aircraft.

He admits that it is a slow, tedious, often very discouraging process. Admitting its discouragements frankly and that the current returns often are small, many salesmen of airplanes stick to it with the conviction that eventually there will be "big money in it."

Where does the salesman go for his prospects? Various places is the broad answer. The two most likely at the present moment are business organizations and manufacturers who employ salesmen and whose executives do considerable traveling. Through association with airline operations, the salesman learns of such organizations that are heavy patrons of scheduled passenger lines. If the volume of such patronage by one concern is large, the salesman calls at headquarters and tries to show where it would be profitable for the company to own its own plane.

"PROSPECT" SOURCES

By analyzing the transportation needs of organizations in the community and of individuals as well, he frequently comes to the conclusion that here is a potential buyer.

Another source of prospects is the country club membership list. The "best" downtown clubs also are regarded as harboring the most likely airplane prospects. The real salesman points out that he does not indiscriminately approach any and all individuals whose names happen to be on such lists. He makes an intelligent effort to find out where an airplane might fit into the "club set" member's professional, business, or recreational scheme of things.

The man in the street who always is a prospect for the automobile or insurance salesman is in no danger of being besieged by anyone trying to sell him an airplane. No one is a prospect at present unless he has indicated some interest in plane ownership or unless his business or social or recreational activities indicate such an interest, and not even then unless he can afford to buy or induce a parent or guardian to buy him a ship.

"Right now," one salesman told the writer, "you could work twenty-four hours a day and unless your energies were very carefully and intelligently directed, never sell an airplane. I don't know of any class of salesmen which has an opportunity to accomplish absolutely nothing by just dumbly trying to sell. But airplanes can be sold and a market established for them by piling one individual buyer on top of another. The more care used in selecting the prospect, the quicker the pile, or market, will grow."

Airplane salesmen appear to have been recruited from several sources.

RECRUITING SALESMEN

The largest class is composed of those with piloting experience. Sometimes they have gone into selling because they could not get jobs as pilots. In other cases they have done so because they prefer it as an occupation or because they believe it to be the brighter opportunity, at least in the long run.

A second group is composed of individuals with sales experience who believe that airplanes may be sold with a profit, now or later, mostly later. In many instances this class has taken up flying as supplemental to salesmanship and with no thought of professional piloting.

A third class, which the other two say is fairly large, is composed of those who have decided that airplane salesmanship is a glamorous occupation, who have an independent income, and who are anxious to identify their daily activities with something that sounds business-like. Securities salesmen, automobile salesmen and insurance salesmen also are loud in their protestations that this class constitutes itself as a barnacle which has fastened itself to the profession.

Why New Cars Must Go Slow

While motorists usually observe the instruction to drive a new car slowly for a few hundred miles, few understand just why this is necessary. The reason for slow driving with a new motor is readily explained, according to the emergency road service of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Fine grooves not visible to the naked eye are left on the piston by the lathe tool in the factory. The grinding machine leaves pear-shaped pits on the cylinder walls. These projects are sharp when the engine is new. With excessive speed, heat causes them to expand. This results in scored cylinder walls, loss of power, and other difficulties.

WINTER SPORTS CARD PLANNED

ice-skating ponds and lakes, "safe-can-I-ski slides," and other aids to the enjoyment of snow and ice activities have been put in condition for the season at the mountain playgrounds. As was the case last year, the city Playground Department will rent sleds, toboggans, skis and snowshoes to Camp Seeley visitors at small nominal fees. Other resorts are expected to follow suit.

While winter activities have naturally flourished at big eastern centers for a long time, the possibilities of Southern California as a winter sports center have only recently attained importance. It is only a few years since Los Angeles and the Southwest awoke to the fact that the one thing lacking in its category of outdoor pleasures—snow and ice sports—was in reality present in abundance. Since then, the outdoors-loving public has taken a tremendous interest in the mountains in the winter time, causing this season of the year to rival the summer time in popularity.

LEAD OF NATION

According to those sponsoring the movement, the future may develop the nation's leading winter playgrounds here in Southern California. Lake Placid and other famous snow sports resorts of the East are hundreds of miles from such population centers as New York, and must be reached over slippery and dangerous roads in winter. Southern California's playgrounds, however, are much closer and easily accessible to the motorist. One can drive all but the last few miles of the route over dry sunny highways, reaching his destination in a few hours.

The mileage to the leading winter paradises make it possible to visit them and return in one day if necessary, although many visitors prefer to spend a week-end in the mountains. Camp Seeley is seventy-five miles from Los Angeles; Camp Baldy, fifty-one; Lake Arrowhead, eighty-four; Big Pines, ninety-nine; Mt. Wilson, twenty-six; Big Bear Lake, 105, and Idyllwild, 112.

STATE-WIDE MOVE

In addition to the public and private organizations behind the promotional plans for mountain snow sports, the California State Chamber of Commerce is this year fostering a unified program of winter carnivals which will result in special events being held on almost every week-end of January and part of February at the mountain playgrounds.

Ski-jumping, cross-country ski and snowshoe racing, ice-skating, ice hockey and many other sports will be featured at these carnivals. Famous experts of the United States and Canada will appear in the competitive series. In addition to the events in which outstanding athletes will compete or give exhibitions, many special sports for novices will be put on, going on the theory that thousands of Southern Californians will be getting their first taste of snow and ice activities this winter. At the Camp Seeley carnival, a special effort will be made to enter large numbers of "beginners" in snow sports events, besides the expert competition, and a total of actual participants of 1000 is expected.

CABIN RATES LOW

Another attractive feature of mountain playgrounds this winter will be the abundance of overnight accommodations available for week-end visitors. Sleeping and housekeeping cabins will be rented at rates low enough so that almost anyone may spend an outing of two or more days in the snow country at little expense.

Dates for the special carnivals to be held at close-in resorts this winter include the following: Lake Arrowhead, January 10 and 11; Camp Seeley, January 17 and 18; Twin Peaks, January 24 and 25; Big Pines, January 30 to February 1, and Big Bear Lake, some time in February.

OIL TO BE SOLD UNDER NUMBERS

and S.A.E. No. 30 for winter driving.

In other words, like ordering a collar by size or number, which does not in any way affect the quality of the linen going into it, oils may now be ordered by size or consistency of body, that is, viscosity. The S.A.E. number has nothing whatever to do with the quality of the oil, which is determined by the refiner or manufacturer.

While there are many factors which go to make up the quality of a motor oil and which affect the service it gives the motorist, there is no question but that viscosity or body of the oil is its most important single property. Indeed, say the lubrication experts, a fair quality oil of proper viscosity will give better results than exceptionally good oil of improper viscosity or body for a given purpose.

It is obviously impossible for the automobile manufacturer to enable the customer to distinguish all the elements of quality, but it is both possible and important to find some dependable method of advising the motorist as to the proper viscosity of oil for use in a given car under given conditions.

Girl Leaves on Good-Will Tour to Canada City

With the delivery to Miss Rhea Muir of St. Catherine's, Ont., Can., of a new 1931 model Essex super six sport coupe on which she traded in her record-setting 1929 Essex driven here from Canada, it was disclosed yesterday that Miss Muir will shortly make another solo good-will and endurance drive from here to her home city.

On her 2369-mile drive here from Ontario, traveling all alone, Miss Muir combined an economy and endurance record with good will in which she distributed literature for the St. Catherine's Chamber of Commerce. That city advertises itself as "The Garden Spot of Canada."

Miss Muir, going back, will take along Southern California literature supplied by the All-Year Club of the Chamber of Commerce.

"Although I loyally maintain that St. Catherine's is truly a garden spot, I must admit that Southern California has convinced me that it is an entire garden in one," Miss Muir declared.

Oil Company Builds Small Racing Car

A tiny racing creation powered with a straight eight-cylinder motor has been completed by Pete De Paolo, international race champion, for the Gilmore Oil Company and is to enter all the races at Ascot Legion bowl and in the California circuit throughout 1931. It won third place in its initial breaking-in race at the Ascot Legion track.

The speed burner has been christened Gilmore Lion Special, and is piloted by Lou Moore, holder of several track records. It is said that the car is capable of 125 miles per hour. It weighs only 1200 pounds and is finished in cream and red, to harmonize with all Gilmore equipment.

"We are not out to win race-track laurels," says E. B. Gilmore, president of the Gilmore Oil Company. "It is our purpose to use these high-speed competition races as a testing ground for our products.

"If the car wins, it is fine, and we will crow about it. We will have something to crow about, too, because we are banking everything on the success of one entry, instead of having a dozen of the most likely candidates for victory use our product.

Air Navigation Map Compiled by Oil Company

The new coast air navigation map No. 2 just off the press, was prepared by the aviation department of the Associated Oil Company and compiled from the latest available data. Among the sources used were the Army Air Corps maps and airways bulletins of the Department of Commerce, aeronautics branch.

On the reverse side of the map are plats showing the size of all the western airports and containing technical data relative to landing facilities.

MEAD TAKES NEW POST

George Jackson Mead, chairman of the executive committee of the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Company, has been elected vice-president of the United Aircraft and Transport Corporation and will be in charge of the newly organized experimental and research division of that corporation, whose headquarters will be in the newly constructed hangar at the United Airports of Connecticut, now nearing completion in East Hartford.

Spinner Moves Headquarters to Auto Row

The Spinner Company, marketers of a device intended to reduce the amount of gasoline consumed by the automobile motor and who have recently introduced the Spinner Super Gas Saver, have moved their headquarters from 8369 Wilshire Boulevard to more spacious ones at 1519 South Figueroa street. A branch will be maintained at the old address on Wilshire. The new head office is in the same building as that occupied by the Ward Motor Company, and arrangements have been made with that company to use its service facilities for the installation of the carburetor device.

SUHLAND BACK AT WORK AFTER REST

C. W. Suhland, sales manager of the Graham-Paige Company of California, has again resumed his duties, after three months of rest at his mountain cabin in Lake county. He is much improved in health, two minutes.

RADIO PROGRAMS INJURED BY HIGH SPEED PRESSURE

Entertainment Tossed in Face of Public by Efforts to Crowd Periods

WORLD-WIDE NEWS AT 10 P.M.

BY JOHN S. DAGGETT

Shall Time or Art dominate the air?

True art is never shackled by time and though this is an age of speed, speed in the case of radio is proving harmful.

Watching a clock detracts from the delivery of a speaker. Many times have I noticed nervousness because of the red second hand of our Telechron relentlessly traveling around the dial.

Even with such a prosaic thing as the presentation of news items, the time factor robs the public of complete news values. Many times a speaker scheduled for a four-minute talk receives an inspiration, under the influence of the microphone, but the click of the split second hand kills it. Radio to many persons is becoming a perfunctory form of entertainment.

RADIO SPLITS SECOND

Radio splits the second of the hour point on the clock, shoves on the stage of the air another set of performers and, with an invisible hook, yanks them off on the split second. Singers sing, yodelers yodel, pianists play with one eye on the clock and the announcer usually dives in and out of the scenery while the artist tries to jam into his allotted time his ballad or composition.

What is the result? An audience that unconsciously sometimes, and consciously most of the time—is taut. They are absorbing breathless speed reflected through the broadcast—like a hungry man bolting his food at a five-minute train stop.

Each sponsor pays for a portion of time on the air. Each portion is replete with its sponsor's offering, plus a cut or two for indestructible baby bottles or what have you. Interlarded you find a soprano, tenor, ventriloquist or sixteen and one-half piece orchestra dashing to their position in front of the mike to do their stuff and dashing to the exit. This machine-gun rapidity is an endeavor to squeeze as much as possible into too short a time. The bigger the sponsor, oftentimes the bigger the number of highlights tossed in.

ORCHESTRAS SPEED UP

Blurbs like this filter into The Times Tower quite often: "E. Ratick and his symphony boys will play sixty-five pieces in fifteen minutes. Think of it—sixty-five where only thirty ever bloomed before." Now isn't that marvelous?

What is the cure? Only the old gentleman — Time, can tell. He is gradually getting co-operation from the better radio sponsors, program directors and stations. But, until some of this gentry die of old age, the listening-in public will have their radio periods thrown in their face.

But—there is an emergency brake in this rush of speed. If radio artists didn't have to inhale think how much worse it would be.

The New York Philharmonic Symphony concerts, under Arturo Toscanini, will be resumed over KHJ at noon today. The program reads: Wolf-Ferrari's overture, "The Secret of Sus anne;" Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, Kodaly's "Marosszeker Tanze," and Bach-Respighi's "Passacaglia." There is no better music on the air. Two hours.

KFI, Los Angeles, 6:15 p.m.—The five young men and five young women vocalists selected from all sections of the United States compete for the Atwater Kent $25,000 in cash prizes and musical scholarships. California will have Esther B. Coombs of Long Beach and Stephen Merrill of Campbell. These are the finals.

I'd hate to have been on KFI's switchboard Friday night after they chopped the Kid Chocolate-Bat Battalino championship fight off in the eleventh round because "we have to go on with our regular programs."

KNX at 2 o'clock. Before the world took to wheels a Sunday band concert found the whole family, with the dog trailing along, trekking to the park. You can trek via your dial today—Roberts's Golden State Band—the Trojan Trio—two hours.

KFWB at 6:30 o'clock tonight. Its publicist pens "This is good—step on it." Guitar and violin solos —Five Locust Sisters—Jerry Joyce's orchestra. All-popular — dance music too.

KMTR at 9:30 p.m. "The Shadow of Shaldeen"—three-act mystery play—crimson shadows pass and repass with grim and silent menace.

KTM at 4:30 p.m. "This program is uninterrupted by announcements." Thirty minutes of Stewart Bair, baritone, and Eugene Eben, organist—religious melodies.

KHJ—If you've listened to the New York Symphony up until 2 o'clock, you'll have a Rose Hills Concert—organ, violin and harp in classics. Then climb into the Ascot grand stand at 4 o'clock—checkered flags and racing drivers.

KFI at 5 p.m. Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink will sing "Dear Little Boy of Mine"—a mixed quartet—Betsy Afres, soprano, Mary Hopple, contralto—"Annie Laurie."

KECA at 3 o'clock. Catholic Hour. Paulist Choristers. Address by Rev. James M. Gillis, C.S.P.—Michael Bataeff—soloist in Russian chant—"Lord, Have Mercy"—John Finnegan, tenor, in "Sanctus," from Gounod's St. Cecilia Mass.

KTM at 9 p.m. Ranch Hour promises sweet, quiet melodies of past decades.

KHJ at 6 p.m. Dust is to be shaken from another antique in The Old Curiosity Shop—the curtains of the past swept aside—a tale of long, long ago. Told in a way that will please you.

KFWB at 8 p.m. "The Piper and the Pay"—a story woven in the jungles among teak and ebony trees. A tribal love affair.

KFWB at 9 p.m. "Last chance to attend Vivian Ware's Trial." Many like this courtroom drama with its thrills and chills.

KNX at 7 p.m. Welcome, Wesley Tourtellotte. You will remember Wesley from KHJ. Thousands will be happy to greet him with a dialing. If you like organ music tune in.

KHJ at 7:30 p.m. Edison String Symphony. Theme "At the Close of Day"—Dr. Carl Omeron, guest soloist—a repertoire including Mendelssohn's "On Wings of Song." Bach's "Prelude in C Minor"—Scott Bradley, director.

KECA at 10:30 a.m.—Neapolitan Days. Here is a newcomer from the East—Giuseppe di Benedetto, tenor—Songs of Italy—Dolores Cassinelli, Joe Viviano, accordionist, and a mandolin quartet.

KFI at 1 p.m. The studio has featured this "Golden Hour"—Virginia Fiorhi, James Burroughs, J. K. Carden and the Pryor Moore Orchestra.

KHJ at 9 p.m. Lieut. Dwight H. Schaffner will discuss his exploits in the Meuse-Argonne drive. He won the Congressional Medal of Honor.

KTM 10 p.m. A concert with Santaella's Orchestra—Pierre White, guest soloist. Hits from "The Rogue Song"—Moret's "Song of Siberia"—operetta and comedy numbers.

KPI at 9 p.m. "The influence of the Negro in the music of today"—Connie Boswell—"Beale Street Blues." A male quartet—Joseph Hornik's Band—"African Serenade"—an N.B.C. feature.

KECA—8:30 a.m. running through to 10:30 a.m.—five new Sunday features from the East—the first an organ recital—at 9:15—one hour of song by the National Oratorio Society.

KNX at 9 p.m. Althea Oliver, soprano, is to be guest artist—Lubovski violin, piano and song trio —ninety minutes of Brahms—"The Yellow Dusk," an old Chinese poem —Lehmann's "Magdalene at Michael's Gate"—After that Sunday drive.

FRIENDS HONOR HENRY IRVING

Exhibition Recalls Plays of Famous Actor

London Still Lives With Memory of Performer

Younger Generation Learns of Great Thespian

LONDON, Dec. 13. (MANA)—It is twenty-five years since Henry Irving died, but he still lives in the memories of those who saw him act, and the younger generation, to whom he is but a name, have a chance of making his acquaintance.

First there is Gordon Craig's wonderful book on his master and friend, and secondly, an exhibition at the Victoria and Albert Museum of documents and pictures connected with the great actor's London performances.

The exhibition contains the programs for every first night at the Lyceum, a number of photographs of Irving and Ellen Terry in their most famous roles; some drawings and cartoons of Irving, including a sketch of him in "The Lyons Mail," by one of his most distinguished pupils, Martin Harvey, and a selection of stage designs made for the Lyceum by Hawes Craven.

The earliest exhibit is a playbill dated 1859 in which Mr. Irving's name appears among the minor parts in John Oxenford's "Ivy Hall." On this bill great prominence is given to the makers of the medallions and the chandelier, their names being in far bigger type than that of the author, and at the bottom, very large, appear the words "Also Which, the National Anthem!" A dramatic critic of the day, writing of "Ivy Hall," said: "A drama which makes us all feel considerably better for having witnessed it; well written, admirably acted, and with a fine, wholesome moral."

RUBLESKI JUDGESKI SUEDSKI

Silverman-Levinson Fray Goes Before Court Again in Form of Damage Suit

What are possibly the only Imperial Russian ruble notes in existence about which anybody cares anything were again made the object of litigation in Superior Court yesterday when Herman Silverman, against whom a verdict of $750 in favor of M. Levinson was rendered, sued the opposing attorneys for $750 damages and the judge who denied him a new trial.

Defendants in what deputy county clerks designated as California's strangest law suit are Judge Ira F. Thompson, now on the Appellate bench, and Attorneys Paul E. Yerkin and Henry Wackerbarth.

The Levinson vs. Silverman trial, which grew out of a speculative transaction in Russian rubles in 1918, has been before the courts four times. Each won one of the first two trials, which were both reversed on appeal. At a third trial the jury disagreed and at the fourth trial Superior Judge Tuttle gave Levinson a judgment. Levinson, who sold the rubles, received part of the purchase price, but when Russian currency depreciated Silverman refused to pay the balance.

Bronze Tablet Marks Return of Hero Dead

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—A bronze tablet, commemorating the return to America one year ago of the bodies of seventy-five American soldiers who died in North Russia in 1918-19, will be dedicated with appropriate ceremonies by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States on board the S.S. President Roosevelt at its dock at Hoboken, N. J., Monday. Arrangements have been completed for a brief program preceding the formal unveiling of the plaque aboard the ship that brought these bodies back to America.

Bill for Beauty Will Approach Two Billions

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (Exclusive) Bread and beauty are two great American staples in which sales have shown no decline during business depression.

"The beauty bill for 1930, figured from manufacturers' sales reports to date, will approach $2,000,000,000," Miss Helena Rubinstein, famous beauty authority of London, Paris and New York, estimated at a convention of shopowners here. "American women spent $1,825,000,000 for lipsticks, powders, creams and lotions last year, or more than was spent for bread."

Dublin Meets Jaywalkers

DUBLIN, Dec. 13. (AP)—Dublin is troubled with its jaywalkers. The motor traffic is well handled by the police, though automatic mechanical control is advocated and is contemplated. But the pedestrian does what he likes, and often suffers for it. Special white line passages laid down at critical points are ignored.

COLLECTION DONATED

BERKELEY, Dec. 13. (Exclusive) A rhododendron collection, said to be the finest in the United States, has been presented to the University of California by a group of donors, according to announcement by President R. G. Sproul. The collection contains 10,000 specimens, more than half of which are of especial interest.

Tunnel Work in Elysian Park Nearing End

Such rapid progress is being made on the Elysian Park tunnel project that completion and use by motorists of that section between Solano street and Riverside Drive is expected within six months, it was announced yesterday by H. J. McGuire, president of the Board of Public Works.

This portion of the development is but one of three which comprise the entire project, the second one being the connection between Solano street and Figueroa at Second street. It is hoped by the city that this work will be completed and the street in use within two years. The third phase of the project is bridging the river from the Riverside Drive tunnel entrance and connecting it with the proposed road through the Arroyo Seco to Pasadena. This phase is said to be some distance in the future.

HUGH J. McGUIRE.

The opening of the three tunnels between Solano street under the Elysian Park hills to Riverside Drive is designed to aid in the speeding of traffic to Glendale, Pasadena and northerly and easterly points. This work is under contract to the H. W. Rohl Company.

EXCAVATION UNDER WAY

Three tunnels are being excavated through the hills between Riverside Drive and Solano street. No. 3 tunnel, the most northerly one, is about 75 per cent completed. It is 405 feet long and between it and Tunnel No. 2 will be an open space of about 400 feet. In excavating for Tunnel No. 2 the entire hill was removed, the work of placing forms for the tunnel walls now being in progress. When this tunnel is completed for its 130 feet in length it will be covered over, the hill being replaced and reforested.

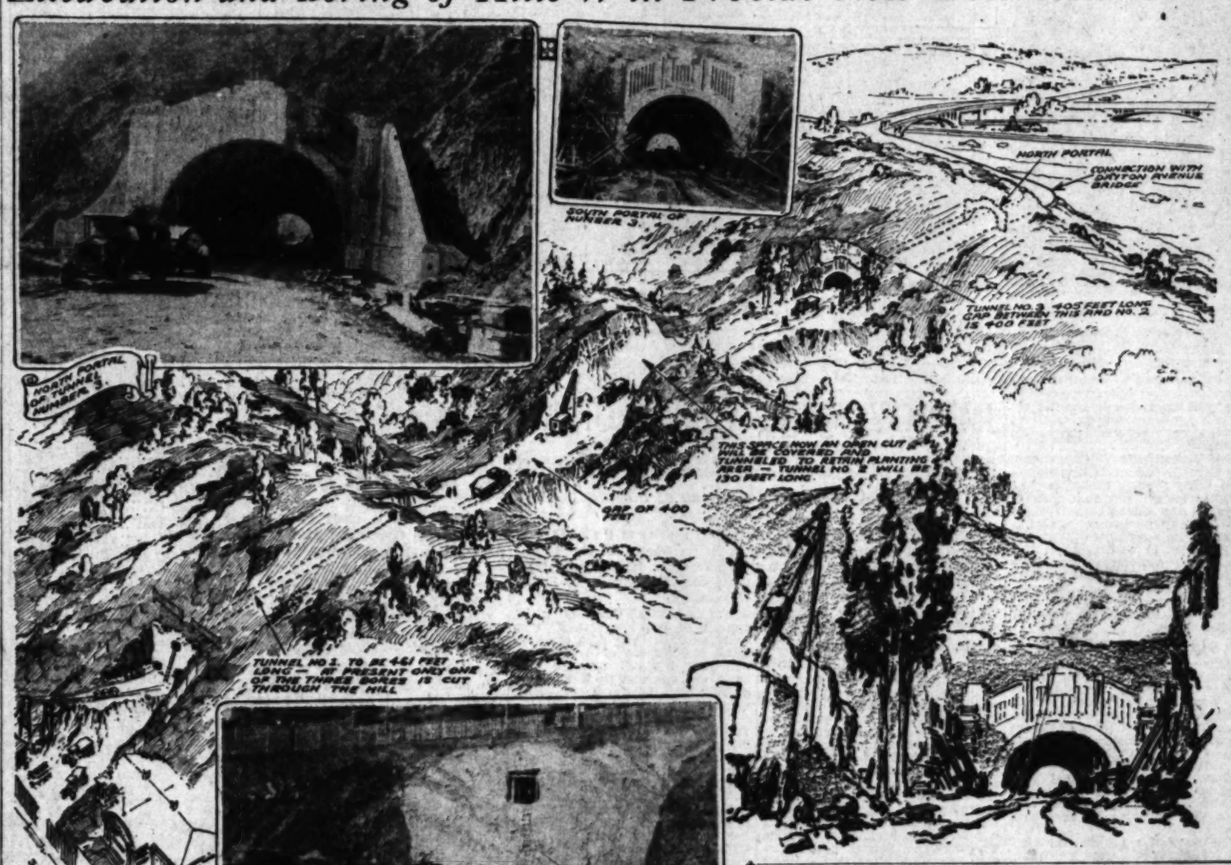
Boring of three drifts in Tunnel No. 1, which will emerge at Solano street is now under way. This tunnel will be about 400 feet from No. 2 and will be 461 feet in length. The entire cost of these three tunnels and paving is placed at $716,000 by Merrill Butler, chief of bridge design in the city engineering department. A. D. Bassett of the city engineering department is resident engineer on the job for the city.

ANOTHER TUNNEL NEEDED

On that portion of the project between Solano street and Figueroa at Second another tunnel is necessary, this between Solano street and Bishop Road, and will extend for a distance of approximately 1000 feet. The road will then swing toward Broadway and back again to the west to connect with Figueroa at Second street. This will eliminate the necessity of boring a fifth tunnel, as the road will skirt a hill instead of going through it.

The improvement will enable northbound motorists to drive north on Broadway, turn left onto Solano street and thence north again through the three tunnels, emerging on the northeasterly side of the Elysian Park Hills.

Excavation and Boring of Hills Will Provide New Downtown Outlet



START OF TUNNEL NUMBER ONE, SOLANO STREET

Improvement to Aid Glendale and Pasadena Traffic

Charles H. Owens has given above the artist's conception of the tunnel project which ultimately will connect Figueroa street with Riverside Drive, providing another outlet for downtown traffic. Various photographs show views of the tunnel approaches. This portion of the development is expected to be open to traffic from Solano street to Riverside Drive within six months.

MEMBERS ELECTED TO BOARD

Southwest Branch Annual Banquet, Dinner-Dance to Be Held Tomorrow

H. Courtland Walden and Harry R. Lee were elected members of the board of control for 1931 at last week's meeting of the Southwest Branch, Los Angeles Realty Board, according to an announcement by J. D. Pringle, chairman.

Walden and Lee were elected to fill vacancies due to resignations of Pringle and E. H. Selecman, both of whom had served for two terms.

Pringle also announced that the annual banquet and dinner-dance of the Southwest Branch will be held at the South Ebell Club, Seventy-first and Menlo avenue, tomorrow night at 7 o'clock. A. C. Hoodenpyle is chairman of the entertainment committee.

FACT AND COMMENT

A question that is becoming almost a nightmare to Los Angeles property owners, is that of spot zoning.

There is in the city of Los Angeles today sufficient property zoned for business purposes to supply the needs for years to come. No more business zoned property is required unless it be in exceptional cases where communities have developed without the convenience of near-by stores and where property owners of the entire neighborhood voice the need.

City planning commissions have been at work for years zoning the city in order to provide some guaranty that home owners will be protected against the encroachment of business or industry and unless these zoning laws are upheld no home owner is safe; all may find their labor and savings of years come to naught.

A situation wherein home owners must ceaselessly be on their guard to protect their investments does not help the community, enhance values nor invite newcomers. Spot zoning may be regarded as a special privilege. Once granted, a precedent is established and all other owners of frontage in the vicinity are entitled to have their property rezoned also.

New Traffic Outlet?

It is possible for the Pacific Electric Railway Company to aid materially the speeding up of traffic in the northerly portion of the business section by granting to the city the right to pave and use for traffic the company's privately owned tunnel extending from Temple street to Sunset Boulevard. Whether it is feasible from the company's standpoint is another thing.

GROUP TO BOOST BUSINESS

Rock Products Association Lays Plans Intended to Stimulate Industry in Coming Year

A concerted effort to speed a return to normal in construction activity in Los Angeles and surrounding communities through means of a co-operative educational campaign is to be conducted during 1931 by the Southern California Rock Products Association, according to an announcement issued yesterday by C. B. Rogers, manager of the local headquarters of the organization.

Newspaper advertising will be used extensively by the member companies of the association to bring to public attention the vital part the rock industry plays in the maintenance of prosperous conditions in Southern California. Emphasis will be placed upon the advisability of enabling the industry to keep up its pay roll by the public taking advantage of the present extremely low prices for all types of building material.

It is doubtful whether the public will ever have the opportunity again to carry out construction and repair plans at the prevailing low costs for both material and labor, Rogers pointed out, and for this reason, as well as to give all the employment possible in the present depression period, property owners contemplating additions and improvements to existing structures, or new buildings, are urged not to delay in the hope of obtaining lower prices later.

The Southern California Rock Products Association now numbers among its membership the following material producers in the southern half of the State: the Associated Rock Company, of which V. Hayes is vice-president; the Blue Diamond Corporation, Ltd., Dana Latham, president; the D. H. Burden Materials Company, Inc., of Compton, D. H. Burden, president; Consolidated Rock Products Company, Ford J. Twaits, president; Ducey & Attwood Rock Company, R. K. Attwood, president, Altadena; Eaton Canyon Rock and Sand Company, Pasadena, J. S. Lutes, president; Graham Brothers, Inc., Long Beach, Paul C. Graham, vice-president; Hanawalt Brothers Rock and Gravel Company, La Verne, S. E. Hanawalt, president; Pavers Rock Company, Glendale, William Fickett, president; Edward Sidebotham & Sons, Inc., Lomita, Roy Sidebotham, vice-president, and Triangle Rock and Gravel Company, San Bernardino, Neil O. Baker, president.

PLANS FOR BUILDINGS ANNOUNCED

Architect Appointed by Corporation Also Named Member of Board

Announcement is made by Frances H. Webb, vice-president of the Federal Corporation, that the organization is having plans prepared for five buildings to be erected in the immediate future on sites soon to be announced. William V. Kernan, the announcement states, has been appointed architect for the company and has been made a member of the board of directors.

Officers of the corporation include J. B. Roof, president; Francis H. Webb, vice-president; George McKinney, treasurer; John J. Beck, secretary; M. D. Dunne, assistant treasurer; H. A. Salisbury, assistant secretary, and William V. Kernan, architect. The seven comprise the board of directors. Jim Hool, realty broker, is agent for the corporation.

CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS OF NEXT YEAR SURVEYED

Valuation of 225 Buildings Due to Rise in Southland Estimated at More Than $110,000,000

More than 225 schools, office buildings, apartment-houses, churches, theaters, public buildings and other structures, including twenty-three limit-height projects, will reach the construction stage in the Southland early in 1931, according to a building survey just completed by the Journal of Commerce. The valuation of these buildings is estimated at more than $111,000,000. The major portion of the structures comprising the survey will rise in metropolitan Los Angeles, only a few edifices being included from other Pacific Southwest points.

The encouraging feature of the report is declared to be the fact that more than 75 per cent of the projects listed are practically certain of going ahead within a few months, in spite of the general business depression. Sound building ventures have found favor with the investor in recent months and the result has been a gradual increase in business for the construction industry, the journal states.

LIMIT-HEIGHT PLANS

The survey just completed by the Journal of Commerce shows that twenty-three limit-height buildings will be erected within the space of a few months. Ten of these will be office buildings, nine apartment buildings, two hotels, one theater and one club building. Besides these, there will be more than a dozen structures rising to a height of nine and ten stories.

City and out-of-town schools with a total valuation of $20,101,500 lead the list of buildings in point of cost. Next come sixteen office buildings valued at $17,550,000. Public buildings, costing $15,985,000, follow.

Classes of buildings with valuation follow: Schools (40,) $20,101,500; office buildings (16,) $17,550,000; public buildings (58,) $15,985,000; apartments (28,) $14,256,000; clubs and lodges (7,) $2,350,000; hotels (11,) $6,850,000; warehouses (5,) $4,375,000; churches (19,) $4,805,000; stores (8,) $715,000; business buildings (4,) $2,245,000; theaters (13,) $3,075,000; plants and factories (3,) $4,500,000; banks (3,) $1,620,000; hospitals (3,) $5,525,000; dwellings (2,) $125,000.

AUDITORIUM OUTSTANDING

The outstanding development for the next year appears to be the auditorium, hotel and office building proposed for a site between Seventh and Eighth streets, and between Bixel and Garland streets, by J. A. Wigmore and associates. The project, which includes a $3,500,000 auditorium, a $2,500,000 hotel and a $1,300,000 office building, will be designed by Architect Claud Beelman. Preliminary plans have already been prepared for the enterprise and financial details are expected to be completed soon.

A general rehabilitation of the city fire department is expected to result in the expenditure of about $4,000,000 next year for thirty-eight branch fire stations, additions to ten fire halls, a new fire boat and new equipment. Los Angeles, Long Beach and Santa Ana are scheduled to be given new Federal buildings during 1931 by the United States government. The Los Angeles Civic Center is to get a new health center, to cost $1,000,000, as soon as the necessary funds are appropriated by the City Council.

Limit-height office buildings are planned by the Los Angeles Desk Company, Frank Good and associates, M. Lombardi, Seaboard National Bank, American Medical Buildings, Inc., California Dairies, Inc., Serrano Corporation, Western Union, and others.

Pasadena's contribution to Southwest building it. 1931 will be a new municipal auditorium costing more than $1,000,000.

HOLIDAY SPIRIT AIDS BUSINESS

Communities' Decorations Stimulate Buying

Civic Groups, City Officials Sponsor Activity

Merchants Report Trade as Equal That of 1929

Christmas buying unequaled in the history of Southern California communities is being reported from a score or more of Southland municipalities as the 25th inst. draws near, according to reports of merchants and organizations who report that increased business for the month is doing much to relieve strained business conditions.

Throughout Southern California merchants' organizations have been of one mind in seeking to imbue residents of their cities with the Christmas spirit and through street decorations of various types have created an atmosphere which is having its effect in bringing an excellent Christmas season to the Southland, they report.

GLENDALE STREETS

The streets of Glendale, throughout the retail business district, are aglow with thousands of colored lights strung from tall Christmas trees, during the prehoilday shopping season.

Plans for decorating the principal thoroughfares have been completed by the Glendale Merchants' Association at a cost of approximately $2000.

Brand Boulevard, Broadway, Orange avenue and Central avenue, will carry the major part of the decorated trees, and in the flagpole sockets in the sidewalks in front of the stores other smaller trees will be placed.

San Bernardino's Yuletide season has formally opened, brilliantly colored lights glowing throughout the business section and on Christmas trees on the sidewalk in front of nearly every mercantile establishment in the downtown district.

Depression or no depression, San Bernardino merchants are doing fully as much Christmas business as they were at this time last year, according to a survey made by Secretary R. H. Mack of the Chamber of Commerce.

HOLLYWOOD SCHEME

Hollywood's 1930 Christmas decorative scheme is regarded as the most spectacular in the history of the world's motion-picture capital. Under the direction of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, which originated the Christmas street decoration idea in California, a mile of illuminated Christmas trees equipped with candles and 9000 blinking colored lights have been installed along Hollywood Boulevard from Vine street to La Brea avenue.

The decorative project comprises 100 toy Christmas trees which are an exact reproduction of an artificial European tree. Each tree is twenty-five feet high, equipped with four-foot candles and ninety lights in six colors. The tree cone is nine feet tall and seven feet in diameter at the base.

Hollywood's plan of decoration has been carried out by the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce with the cooperation of the Merchantors' Bureau and the Hollywood Boulevard Association, according to Carl Bush, chamber secretary.

PASADENA FESTIVITY

With the annual holiday shopping season in full swing, Pasadena's downtown business section is festive with colored lights and greenery. The elaborate decorations and lighting effects, according to local merchants, have resulted in a marked increase in business activity through putting shoppers in a Christmas frame of mind.

Hundreds of flags have been strung from light wires and each ornamental lighting standard in the business section has been covered with palm fronds and ripe date clusters, more than two tons of which have been used. Large living Christmas trees have been planted about the Memorial flagpole at Orange Grove avenue and Colorado street.

Civic spirit rose to new heights in the Christmas celebration at Long Beach recently inaugurated with a parade of costumed schoolchildren and floats designed by the City Playground Commission. The parade and searchlight displayed the turning on of the lights of the street decorations in the business district.

Cities' Festive Christmas Atmosphere Spurs Shoppers

Investment Repaid in Increased Spending

Street decorations erected by merchants and civic organizations in the metropolitan area, and which have proved a successful stimulant for trade, are pictured in the above photographs, which show, at the left, one of Hollywood's distinctive Christmas trees which line Santa Claus Lane and which were designed for the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce; at the right, a typical Los Angeles Christmas tree on Broadway; in the upper center, a typical decorated street in the Long Beach business section, and in the lower center, a similar view in Santa Ana.

IMPROVEMENT CLUBS UNITE

Stimulation of Industrial and Commercial Activity in South Central Section Seen as Result

Stimulation of industrial and commercial activity in the south central section of Los Angeles is foreseen in the merging of the Central Improvement Association with the South Metropolitan Improvement Association, announcement of which was made officially yesterday by Robert L. Smith, president of the latter organization.

Commenting on the affiliation, Smith said: "Although the boundary lines of the Central Improvement Association extend from Ninth street south to Washington Boulevard, while those of our own organization include the territory from Washington south to Slauson avenue and from Vermont east to San Pedro, both organizations have concerned themselves chiefly with the general advancement of the entire south metropolitan section of the city and particularly in those improvements and developments which would tend to stimulate commercial and industrial activity. Therefore, we feel a constructive step has been taken in combining the two organizations into one strong civic body which will be representative of the entire south metropolitan section of Los Angeles.

"The Central Improvement Association, headed by H. O. Meyer, has been responsible for many constructive steps in this section, outstanding among which have been the opening of Broadway from Pico street south to Forty-first, the widening and paving of Washington Boulevard from Figueroa to Alameda and the opening and paving of Olive from Pico to Twenty-third street."

Officers and members of the advisory board include Robert L. Smith, president; Walter J. Niederer, treasurer; Frank H. Ballinger, secretary; H. O. Meyer and Julius Kauffman, representing the Central Improvement Association; Ralph B. Lloyd, representing the Lloyd Corporation and the Ventura Land and Water Company; E. L. Callahan, representing the Huntington Land Company; E. A. Nicholsen, representing the Pacific Door and Sash Company; L. J. Christopher; J. O. Smith, representing the Birch-Smith Furniture Company; R. H. Raphael, representing the Central and Pacific Improvement Corporation; O. A. Vickrey; T. W. Braun, representing the California Consumer Company.

Fifteen-Room Residence to Be Built Soon

Announcement is made by the Frank Meline Company that S. C. Boyer has sold to Arthur W. Tyler an acre site in Holmby Hills on Carolwood Drive, just off Beverly Boulevard.

Tyler, who is a builder in Beverly Hills, states that he will break ground soon for an Old California or Monterey type of home of fifteen rooms with swimming pool, in keeping with those he has built and sold in this section in the last few months.

STRUCTURES IN COUNTY TALLIED

Half Total in City Limits of Los Angeles

Single Residences Rank First in Number

Other Classifications in Survey Figured

Los Angeles county now contains approximately 600,000 buildings, of which about 300,000 are inside the city limits of Los Angeles, according to figures given out yesterday by Cecil B. Barker, general manager of the C. C. C. Tatum Realtors, following a survey of Assessor's office records which resulted in the itemization for the first time of the actual number of structures of every kind in the county and city.

The survey, as of March 1, 1930, revealed that there are 566,593 buildings in the county area, of which 267,759 are in Los Angeles city. With the addition of the buildings erected since then, the total for the entire county should be in the neighborhood of 600,000 at present, Barker pointed out.

According to the survey, there are 450,963 single houses in Los Angeles county, of which 201,905 are situated in Los Angeles city. Ranking next in number of buildings is the duplex class, of which there are 31,681 in the county, and 22,167 inside Los Angeles city.

The number of other buildings, by class, is given in the survey as follows:

Type.	L. A. County	L. A. City
Flats	12,459	8,220
Apartment houses	6,851	5,441
Store buildings	3,751	1,748
Hotels	1,169	1,047
Bungalow courts	2,736	1,763
Public garages	2,784	1,563
Office buildings	1,071	851
Factory buildings	3,611	1,870
Commercial buildings	3,850	2,562
Gasoline stations	3,499	1,606
Farm buildings	1,191	1
Miscellaneous	24,313	8,540

According to Barker, the County Assessor's office henceforth will make similar reports annually, the records being kept up to date by the addition of new buildings of each class as they are reported for assessment purposes.

OUTSIDE CITIES' ACTIVITY CITED

Last Half of November Period Involved

Long Beach Ranks First in Deed Filings

Burbank, Santa Monica Compete Closely

In the six major communities of the metropolitan area outside Los Angeles, there were 774 transfers of property as indicated by the number of deeds filed, from November 11 to 20, inclusive, according to the regular bi-monthly survey compiled by the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company.

The area covered in the survey includes the cities of Long Beach, Glendale, Pasadena, Burbank, Santa Monica and Beverly Hills. Mortgage and trust deeds, during the two weeks, numbered 563 and carried the total valuation of $3,988,-

Long Beach was the most active during the last half of November with 313 deeds and 180 mortgages and trust deeds valued at 178. For the first time in several weeks, Glendale took the lead over Pasadena in realty activity. There were 126 deeds filed there, a close, however; of four from the previous survey. The 120 financing instruments were valued at $423,- giving Glendale fifth rank in realty financing.

In Pasadena, transfers of property numbered 101, less by twenty-five deeds than the total volume of activity in Glendale, and the 109 mortgages and trust deeds involved the sum of $459,407. Competition was close during the last survey between Burbank and Santa Monica, Burbank showing the greatest gain in financing compared to the previous survey, and Santa Monica showing the highest increase in volume of activity. There were eighty-six transfers of property in Burbank as compared with eighty-two during the corresponding period of October, and the forty-nine financing instruments were valued at $ 000, an increase of $220,071.

With seventy-nine deeds filed in Santa Monica, a gain of eleven was shown, while the fifty-eight trust deeds and mortgages involved the sum of $461,855. Beverly Hills held the last place in volume of activity among the six cities but was second in new financing operations.

LEASES IN STRUCTURE REPORTED

Mechanics Employed to Speed Installation of Office Fixtures

With four leases closed last week and a total of more than 30,000 square feet of floor space placed under lease in the Bendix Building in the last two months, a force of 100 mechanics has been employed to rush the installation of office partitions, plumbing and tile work in the building, according to the W. Ross Campbell Company, managing agents of the building. The building's December appropriation for the installation of new partitions for tenants has been increased to $35,000, it is reported.

Among leases recently closed are the following: Irene Simons, public stenographer and notary public; T. A. Boyd, accountant, each for three-year term. Also Fidelity Purchasing Company, Inc., lease of additional 1300 square feet on the eighth floor, for a term of five years, and total rental of $6000; Harinett Inspection Service Corporation, 1100 square feet for three years, total rental approximately $10,000; Wesco Foods Company, 700 square feet for two years, rental approximately $3000.

DERRICK ERECTED ON FORMER RACE TRACK

PORTERVILLE, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—Work started this month on erection of an oil derrick by the Piute Petroleum Company on the Ed Cornell property, south of West Olive street, once the location for Porterville's first race track. The Piute company has under lease a considerable acreage in the district west of town, including the Porterville sewer farm.

BUILDING SCHEDULE SPEEDED

Company Plans Partial Occupancy of Structure Next Month

Establishing what is believed to be a speed record for structures of its size here, pouring of concrete was 50 per cent completed and structural steel framework was entirely finished yesterday for the Brunswig Drug Company laboratory building at the southwest corner of Second street and Central avenue, according to a report given out by officials of R. A. Rowan & Co., who represented the drug company in the purchase of the site from the Holmby Corporation.

The laboratory building site has a frontage of 106 feet on Second street and a depth of 150 feet. Including this property, the entire site purchased by the Brunswig Company from the Holmby Corporation through R. A. Rowan & Co., has a frontage of 366 feet on Second street and 177 feet on Central avenue. The second unit of the plant will be about twice as large as the laboratory building, and will house general offices and other departments.

Store Building Contract Awarded

Spanish Architecture Employed

The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company awarded a contract yesterday to George Wagner of San Francisco to construct a store building for its exclusive use in Westwood Village. The structure immediately adjoins the building occupied by the Safeway Stores and conforms to the Spanish architectural requirements of the village. The owner of the building is the Investment Properties Corporation of San Francisco, which will lease to the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company. Norstrom & Anderson are the architects.

A Statement of Policy

Regarding Future Plans of the J. B. Ransom Corporation... In view of the lease and oil drilling activities of The Texas Company for exploration of a portion of the Ransom Properties

...IT HAS been destined that on the East Side of Los Angeles a new, important Southland city shall rise. A remarkable growth is already in evidence. The real growth and prosperity, we feel, is yet to come. For now a new, mighty factor has entered into the development of this great community—the possibility that a new oil field may underlie at least a portion of the Ransom properties.

This is no new thought. It has been weighed carefully many, many times. On occasion, offers to drill from major oil companies have been set aside. We have felt that nothing must occur to impair the growth of this new city.

HOWEVER, in justice to our many clients and investors it is well that the question of oil be settled once and for all. To this end we have entered into a lease with The Texas Company—producers, refiners and distributors of "Texaco" products—for drilling within 30 days upon a 1125-acre lease, comprising portions of REPETTO PARK—BICKNELL PARK—and TRI-CITY PARK.

We sincerely hope that the opinion of eminent geologists proves correct—that new, untold wealth may be set into circulation on the new East Side. We feel that the present test is in capable hands—a test which is being made at the entire expense of The Texas Company.

We are in the real estate business and intend to remain so. We are not in the oil business. For that reason we are not selling units, per cents or oil securities—just real estate—priced right!—Ownership in a lot carries with it a participation in the oil, if discovered.

OUR prices for fully-developed property are low. They shall remain low—prices in force before announcement of drilling plans by The Texas Company.

You still have an opportunity to purchase highly-desirable income residential lots—fully improved—for as low as $1125—and worth it! AND YOU WILL PARTICIPATE IF OIL IS DISCOVERED.

If you own property in these Ransom developments, hold it. If you do not own a piece of real estate there, buy today—buy all you can—buy because you believe that you are receiving dollar-for-dollar value for real estate alone. Remember, ownership in a lot carries with it a participation in the oil, if discovered.

Ask a Ransom representative to explain to you in detail how you may participate.

TEST WILL BE GIVEN STUDENTS

Largest Class Expected to Take Examination at Close of Course

As a climax to the past year's work in instructing salespeople in the real-estate profession and preparing them for taking the real-estate examination, all indications are that one of the largest classes in the history of the J. B. Ransom Corporation will take the examination next Friday evening at the Metropolitan offices, 139 West Fifth street.

C. M. HAMILTON

This was the announcement of C. Hamilton, director of sales, who also stated that drilling plans of the Texas Company on a portion of the Ransom East Side properties has necessitated increasing the sales organization to take care of crowds that are daily visiting Repetto Park and Bicknell Park.

"The proper training of salespeople," stated Hamilton, "is part of the J. B. Ransom Corporation's program. Regular classes in the fundamentals of the real-estate profession are being held each week without cost to those participating; the Repetto Park division on Tuesday evening under Robert L. Sheahan, and the Bicknell Park division on Friday evenings under the supervision of Dr. P. T. Bean. Both classes are held at the metropolitan offices."

SURVEY OF EAST SIDE CONDUCTED

Increase Reported in Inquiries Concerning Industrial Sites

Predicting a return to normal conditions in Los Angeles industry, Earl Miller of W. H. Daum and Staff, industrial real estate operators, yesterday revealed to directors of the East Side Organization the results of a survey he has just completed on the East Side.

Included in the list of larger plants surveyed, most of which do a national business, are the Willys-Overland Company, American Brake Shoe and Foundry Company; Truscon Steel Company, California Corrugated Culvert Company, Cochise Rock Drill Company, Elliott Core Drill Company, International Live Stock Feed Company and about fifty smaller companies.

The larger plants, Miller said, have a combined output of $1,000,000 worth of products monthly and employ about 2000 persons. Miller also announced that within the last few weeks there has been a decided increase in inquiries regarding industrial property. He attributed the rapid growth of the East Side into one of the nation's largest industrial centers largely to the efforts of the East Side Organization in obtaining a system of transportation arteries and making the district attractive to prospective manufacturers.

Chain Reveals New Arrivals for November

New arrivals during November at the Consolidated Hotels, Inc., chain of 120 local hotels and apartment-houses, reached a total of 13,563, according to announcement yesterday by J. L. Spicer, manager of operations.

The November total represents 12,659 new guests at the company's group of local hostelries, and 904 new arrivals at the apartment-houses in the chain. Approximately 10 per cent of the total registrations were new arrivals from other States and countries.

Announcement also was made yesterday of the removal of the Consolidated Hotels, Inc., free rental service department to new quarters at 836 South Grand avenue, two doors north of its previous location.

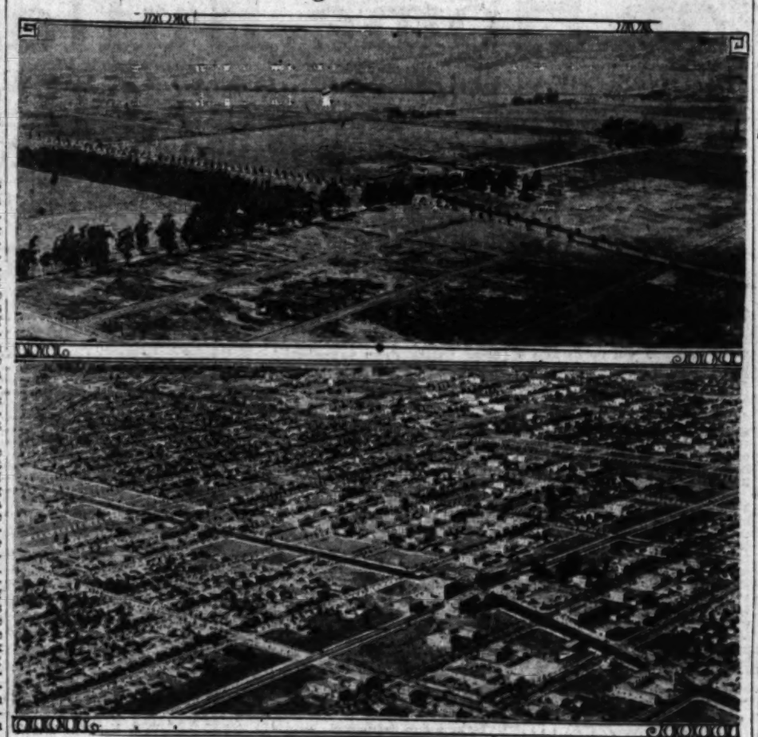
Nine Years' Changes at Intersection Illustrated



Census Report Declared Substantiated

The report of the 1930 census, showing Beverly Hills to be the fastest growing community in the United States, is declared by realty brokers to be convincingly substantiated by the two Spence airplane photographs above, taken at the intersection of Wilshire and Robertson boulevards. The upper one was made in 1921 when Wilshire Boulevard was merely a road leading to the beach; the other, taken in September of this year, shows together with other business buildings, three two-story blocks at the intersection, surrounded by many single and multiple dwellings.

GROWTH OF BOULEVARD AREA SHOWN

Rate of Improvement Said to Involve Full Occupancy Within Three Years

With a buying population of approximately 5200, the residential area adjacent to the intersection of Wilshire and Robertson boulevards is being improved at the rate of 1 per cent per month, meaning approximately 100 per cent occupancy within the next three years, according to E. B. Hewitt, manager of the Wilshire Boulevard Association of Beverly Hills. This rate of improvement, Hewitt asserts, clearly indicates that Wilshire Boulevard in Beverly Hills is to be the fastest growing business street in the fastest growing community.

"Seven years ago, in 1923, the seventy-seven acres at the northwest corner of Wilshire and Robertson boulevards was purchased for $6500 per acre, and subdivided. Wilshire Boulevard business frontage selling for $100 per foot, while a corner at the intersection sold for $12,500. Today no corner here could be bought for $350,000," Hewitt states.

"A sixteen-hour traffic count made at this point in August of this year gave the number of 39,029 vehicles, a gain of 14 per cent, compared to the April count."

IMPROVEMENTS AID TO TRAFFIC

section; Temple street, which has been widened; Glendale Boulevard, which has been widened; Wilshire Boulevard west from Westlake Park, which has been widened in its outer portions; First street, which remains the same; Fifth street, which has been provided with a connection to Sixth street just west of Figueroa street; Seventh street, which has not been altered; Eighth street, which has been widened to eighty feet from Figueroa to Lucerne; Pico and Sixteenth streets, which remain practically the same; Washington street, which has been widened in the downtown area and extended in its outer portions; Figueroa, Grand, Hill, Main, San Pedro, Central and Santa Fe, which have remained practically unchanged; Long Beach Boulevard, which has been widened; East Ninth street, which has been improved; Whittier Boulevard, East Fourth, First and Brooklyn avenue, which remain unchanged; Alhambra avenue, which has been widened, Mission Road, connecting with Huntington Drive, which has been widened; Pasadena avenue, which remains unchanged, and San Fernando Road and Riverside Drive, which have been widened.

ARTERIES ADDED

During the past five years the new arteries which have aided in the disbursement of traffic from the downtown areas, according to Everett B. Mansur of the Board of City Planning Commissioners, include the following: Fletcher Drive, an eighty-foot street extending from Glendale Boulevard to Eagle Rock Boulevard and which diverts a great portion of the traffic from the western section of the city to Pasadena and Eagle Rock; Beverly Boulevard, which five years ago was practically a local street and since has been widened and extended to Beverly Hills; Fifth street which has been given an outlet to Sixth street; Eighth street, which has been widened to eighty feet; South Broadway which is being made a 100-foot boulevard from Pico to Moneta avenue; Avalon Boulevard, which has been widened; Soto street, now an eighty-foot thoroughfare and improved from Ninth street to Huntington Park; Ramona Boulevard, which extends from the Hollenbeck Heights area east; Monterey Road, from Huntington Drive to South Pasadena; Annandale Boulevard from Pasadena avenue to Colorado Boulevard; Avenue 60, from Pasadena avenue to Colorado Boulevard, and Riverside Drive. While some of these streets do not reach into the downtown section they connect with others which do, and thereby aid in diverting a portion of the traffic flow.

According to Mansur, street projects which will aid future traffic are the extensions of North Figueroa street, a 100-foot street with four tunnels running from Second street to Dayton avenue, which project is now under way; improvement of Third street from Figueroa to Vermont, making Third an eighty-foot highway, work being expected to be under way within one year; opening and widening of Wilshire Boulevard from Grand avenue to a connection with the present Wilshire Boulevard at Park View, a ninety-foot street; extension of Venice Boulevard from Sixth avenue to Highland, connecting the present two segments of the street, work to be under way within a year; improvement of Flower street from Eighth to Washington street, now under way, and the improvement of Flower street from Washington to Figueroa at Thirty-eighth street, also the widening of Santa Fe avenue; extension of Ramona Boulevard from east of the city limits to Echandia street, north to Brooklyn avenue, permitting traffic to enter via this street and Brooklyn avenue; widening of Cypress avenue to ninety feet from Dayton avenue to Verdugo Road, work to be under way within one year; improvement of Allesandro street from Glendale Boulevard to the Los Angeles River which will make it an eighty-foot highway and work on which will be under way within one year, and the opening of Spring street from Temple to Sunset Boulevard. This street will provide an additional outlet of traffic to the north and work of removing buildings upon it is now under way.

GOVERNMENT AID SOUGHT

Use of Local Architects and Building Materials Asked on Pacific Coast Federal Jobs

Business leaders of the Pacific Coast, through their Washington representatives, Chamber of Commerce and by direct appeal to authorities at the capital, are reported to be urging strongly that local materials and local architects be used on every major government unit of construction work in the Pacific Coast States. It is pointed out that a rigid adherence to this rule would mean a division of the benefits of the government's construction program, now being speeded up at the demand of President Hoover.

Fred B. Ortman, vice-president and general manager of Gladding, McBean & Co., clay products manufacturers, has just returned from Washington, where he carried this message to officials responsible for the government's accelerated work in the Pacific Coast district. Although particularly representing his own company, Ortman spoke for the entire building industry of the Pacific Coast in urging that local materials and local architects be used in all of the work that the government contemplates in this section of the country during the next two or three years. "I am encouraged to believe that our appeal will have the serious consideration of the Washington officials," said Ortman on his return to his headquarters offices in Los Angeles.

"We seek two vital changes in the present procedure of government building operations on the Pacific Coast," he said. "One of them is the employment of a local architect for each important job; the other, the changing of government specifications so that material produced in quantities on the Pacific Coast may go into the work.

"A vast amount of work is planned by the government on the Pacific Coast during the next two or three years, the estimates for the total to be expended running from $35,000,000 up to more than $35,000,000. These include the Los Angeles Federal Building, the San Francisco Federal Building, one at Seattle, Portland, Long Beach, and many postoffice structures proposed for smaller communities. Also several marine base hospitals and numerous buildings are to be erected under the direction of the United States Veterans' Bureau."

RENEWAL OF RESIDENTIAL WORK SEEN

Low Vacancy Percentage and Incoming Population Held Leading Factors

With more than $140,000 worth of home building under way or ready to start and a large increase in the number of inquiries being received from lot owners, renewed activity in this line is expected by the Tri-Guaranty Building Company for the ensuing two months.

"Property owners are beginning to look ahead," B. E. Werminghaus, president of the concern, declared. "According to a recent survey, more than 93 per cent of all dwellings, duplexes and apartment-houses in the city are occupied, with the specific vacancy percentage of dwellings abnormally low. Prospective builders are using these facts and many are getting busy.

"Factors of growth and population increases in Southern California point to a permanent gain of at least 200,000 new residents for Los Angeles by 1933. More than 40,000 new homes will be required to house these families."

COMPANY ANNOUNCES REMOVAL OF OFFICES

The Barnett Shapiro Construction Company last week announced its removal from 304 Signal Oil Building, 811 West Seventh street, to Suite 317 in the Edwards & Wildey Building, corner Sixth and Grand avenue.

UPSWING DURING 1931 PREDICTED

Country-wide Improvement in Conditions Seen

Public Work, Funds Provided for Immediate Aid

Instances of Industrial Expansion Quoted

That the coming twelve months will witness a distinct upward swing in business conditions was predicted last week by W. D. Cochrane, director and treasurer-elect of the Los Angeles Realty Board.

This, Cochrane stated, should be general the country over, and particularly noticeable in Los Angeles. "The past twelve months have been trying ones for everybody," he said. "Industry was in a period of depression, people were restless, because of unemployment, and the business atmosphere seemed to be filled with pessimism and gloom.

"However, financial authorities are confident that the bottom has been reached. Federal, State and municipal government are making every effort to speed up public work so as to give employment. Business leaders and workers alike are creating funds to aid those in need of immediate assistance. Industries are undertaking expansion programs. From economic surveys, it is apparent that the rock bottom of business activity was reached in August. In many lines activity is already distinctly on the upgrade. The United States as a whole has experienced its most severe business reaction, withstood the shock and weathered the storm. This in itself proves that our underlying structure is fundamentally sound."

Expansion programs of the public utility companies, establishment here of new industries, ten within the last month, and the enlargement of a number of existing factories are indicative of a speeding up of business here, according to Cochrane.

Watson Names Chairman for Women's Group

Helen Roberts Rankin, of the firm of F. J. Buckley & Co., Los Angeles realty brokers, will be chairman of the women's division, southern area, of the California Real Estate Association in 1931. Appointment was made by D. D. Watson, president-elect.

HELEN ROBERTS RANKIN

Mrs. Rankin, who succeeds Naomi Elizabeth McCann of North Hollywood, has been active in the women's division work for several years. As district chairman of the Los Angeles section, she presided over the first 1930 meeting of the division, held in this city early in March. She is the only woman ever to have presided over a meeting of the Realtors' Interchange and has been engaged in the real estate business for the past ten years.

FACT AND COMMENT

Hill street must, after it reaches Temple street, turn either right or left. In the former case it reaches Broadway and adds to the congestion either in the Broadway tunnel or in the Main-street area.

This privately owned tunnel is as wide as the Broadway tube and at the present time is used by but one of the Hollywood car lines. The city could pave it at a comparatively small cost and this additional outlet would do much to relieve the congestion of traffic in this vicinity.

Naturally the Pacific Electric would be entitled to proper compensation if an easement of the kind should be granted.

Elysian Park Tunnel

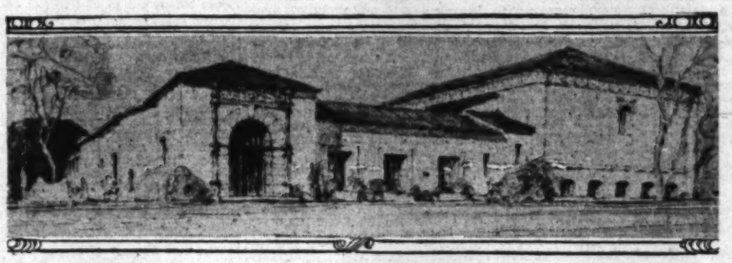
The old question of the tunnel versus the open cut, with some variations, is involved in the recent decision of the City Park Department regarding the tunneling of the Elysian Park hills in the Figueroa-street extension program.

The center tunnel of the three through the hills will be approximately 130 feet in length. The hill was not one of great height and the contractor was given permission to cut it away entirely on the condition that it be replaced after the tunnel was built, and then reforested.

The new cut through the hills will be traveled by hundreds of thousands of motorists in the future who seldom if ever visit Elysian Park. Were this cut to be left open, its sides graded off and planted in grass and flowers, it would make a prospect more pleasing to motorists than the sides of a tunnel and at the same time would cost the city considerably less.

Few motorists would prefer a drive through a dark hole to one between sloping banks of sunlit verdure.

Elks Club Building Plans Soon to Be Completed



San Fernando Structure Pictured

The Elks' Club building shown above is to be erected at Pico and Chatsworth, San Fernando, for the San Fernando B.P.O.E. No. 1539. Plans are to be completed by the first of the year by Architect H. C. Nickerson, Pasadena. The structure will be of Spanish type, 98x120 feet, of reinforced concrete construction and with clay tile roofing and glass-covered patio. Cost is estimated at $75,000.

CONSTRUCTION PLANS QUESTIONS ANSWERED

ENGLISH STYLE COTTAGE SHOWN

Inexpensive House Adapted to Narrow Frontage

Living-room Provided With Attractive Exposures

Garden Declared Vital as Final Outdoor Touch

The competition conducted by the Architectural Club of Long Beach produced a number of interesting solutions to the problem of an inexpensive house adapted to a lot of narrow frontage, and one of these is the English cottage here illustrated by the Small House Plan Service. It was designed by Dorothy Witcher and was awarded honorable mention by the jury.

The floor plan is adjudged well thought out, the rooms are conveniently grouped, there are no long passages to traverse, and the living-room particularly is assigned attractive exposures. The thought of seclusion and privacy, characteristically English, is declared evident in the end wall without windows toward the street, dedicated to book shelves and the fire place.

The unusually large kitchen and bath are noteworthy and also the abundant space devoted to closets. Probably some housewives would desire a passage from the kitchen to the bedroom wing in addition to the one through the living-room, and it should not be impossible to arrange for this by a readjustment of the closet spaces. It would also be practical, and would add to its dignity and usefulness, to change the breakfast nook into a full-fledged dinette.

The house is only twenty-eight feet wide and therefore can be placed on a narrow plot, if necessary. But the design instinctively suggests trees, shrubbery, a garden, and these are vital to its attraction. Provision for them is not so much a matter of large ground area as it is of placing the house in most advantageous position in relation to its neighbors.

Details of the design may be studied at the Small House Plan Service.

Hotel Building Under Way on Coast Highway

An English-type hotel building is under construction by Daniels Brothers, contractors and builders, on the Roosevelt Highway at Cambria Pines, Harry E. Jones, president of the Cambria Pines Development Association, announced yesterday. Specialty shops will occupy the major portion of the first floor adjoining the hotel lobby. The site of the hotel is in the business section of Cambria Pines.

Extensive residential building construction is planned for Cambria Pines during the coming year, Jones stated, the existing low cost of building materials stimulating construction activity.

INCREASE IN FILINGS REPORTED

Upward Trend in Realty Transactions Maintained in Past Week

Steadily maintaining an upward trend, real estate transactions in Los Angeles county reached a total of 6271 for last week, as compared with 5684 for the previous period and with 6296 for the corresponding week in 1929, according to the regular weekly survey of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company.

Last week's record business brings the total number of instruments recorded during 1930 to date up to 434,258, which exceeds by more than 100,000 the number of instruments recorded during any year prior to 1922.

The total of 2522 deeds was filed last week as compared with 2481 for the previous period; 1697 trust deeds, as against 1426; 128 mortgages, as compared with 142; 1151 reconveyances, as against 965; 479 releases of mortgages, as compared with 441; 204 notices of completion, as against 152, and ninety leases, as against seventy-seven.

PROPERTY GAIN RECORD SET

California Assessed Valuation Increase During Last 50 Years Leads All States in Union

California property valuations with an increase of $19,075,327,912 during the last fifty years have led all States in the Union and have established a new property gain record, according to a survey made by N. F. Wilson, president of the Hollywood Business Properties, Ltd.

Wilson's survey, which is based on official assessed valuations made by the fifty-eight county assessors in the State, shows that in 1880 the total appraised valuation of taxable property in California was $1,332,405,348 as compared with $20,407,733,260 in 1930. That California's greatest period of development has been during the last ten years, is indicated by the fact that since 1920 the increase in appraised valuation was $11,297,369,896 as against a gain of $3,455,195,163 for the entire forty years covered by the 1880-1920 period, the survey states. In other words the increase in property valuations for the last decade was more than three times greater than that of the preceding forty years.

Hollywood Business Properties recently acquired the northeast corner of Hollywood Boulevard and Hudson avenue, which is the second highest corner in percentage of valuation incerase of 2000 Los Angeles corners covered in an official survey. The Hollywood-Hudson corner showed an increase of 19,547 per cent in assessed valuation during the last ten years. The northwest Hollywood-Hudson corner ranked third with a gain of 18,875 per cent while the southwest corner of Hollywood Boulevard and McCadden Place leads all Los Angeles corners with an increase of 27,139 per cent.

ECONOMIC CHATS on HOME OWNERSHIP

by Peter Hanson

Every purchaser of a home is interested in its investment possibilities. What are the chances of resale at a profit? Can he get his money out and will he be able to unload should the occasion arise? These are proper questions for the prudent buyer to weigh.

The chance for resale, of course, depends upon a number of things, such as location, market and individual appeal, but there are certain considerations in the purchase of a home, which if heeded, may aid in its sale later.

In the first place it should be bought right, and not above the market, and on such favorable terms that the other fellow can handle the payments. Its plan should have a general appeal, and not just be a one-family arrangement, and should avoid all freakishness and individual fadisms. It should be well within the sweep of the trend, where other buyers are also seeking homes, and whose competitive bidding for this same location logically leads to an increase in value. It should be quiet and restful in appearance, denoting dignity and permanence, and should radiate a warmth of welcome in its very setting and location. It should be outstanding in the neighborhood. A home having these characteristics would have an almost universal appeal, and therefore a strong resale value.

But take away these selling points and you at once lessen the chance of resale, for you take away the points that appeal to the greatest number who are in the market for a home.

The chance for resale also rests upon the home's care and upkeep. A well-groomed lawn in a well-landscaped setting has an instant purchase appeal, whereas a neglected front yard sets up a sales resistance that even trend and location cannot overcome.

Finally the house should suit the setting and be in keeping with its environment.

A beautiful home out of its setting may be an economic monstrosity, and so have little or no resale value.

In our next article we shall discuss "the individual appeal."

NEW TRACT OPENINGS REPORTED

Nine Subdivisions Placed on Market in County During Past Month

Nine new subdivisions, embracing a total of 576 parcels of land, were placed on the market in the county during November, according to the California Title Insurance Company. So far this year there have been 182 new tracts, containing in all 10,296 lots, added to the public in the county as a whole.

Los Angeles city accounted for five new subdivisions, embracing fifty lots last month, bringing its total for the year to date to seventy-five, totaling 1473 parcels. New tracts in the city since the first of the year, classified according to districts, are as follows:

DEMAND FOR SCRAPBOOK CONTINUES

Home Building Hints Given by Bureau of Power and Light Engineers

With a large demand continuing more than 2000 copies of the Idea Scrap Book have been distributed in the past few months by the city-owned Bureau of Power and Light, it was announced yesterday. The books were prepared for persons planning a home. Sixty-three pages of home-building hints and blank pages in which to paste clippings of interesting and modern interiors are contained.

Persons desiring copies of the Idea Scrap Book may obtain them without charge or obligation by calling at the offices of the Bureau of Power and Light, 207 South Broadway, Room 402.

HOME BUILDERS' PRIMER

(Conducted by the Home Modernization Department of the Los Angeles Builders' Exchange. Questions will be answered without cost, and addressed will not be seen in response to inquiries if letters are addressed to this department of "The Times.")

Question: I intend building a home shortly. I have had no experience as this is my first home. Is there a printed guide or folder which will give me information on how to go about it and how to protect my interests in making contracts, etc.?

Answer: The Builders' Exchange of Los Angeles publishes an excellent booklet entitled "Safeguarding the Building Contract." A copy will be sent to you if you send a stamped and addressed envelope to this department of The Times.

Q.: I want to do a small remodeling job on my house. The builder tells me it will cost about $500. I have a first mortgage. Can I obtain a second lien payable on monthly installments?

A.: Yes, there are several finance companies which make such loans. We will send their names on request.

Q.: Our walls are papered. Can we have them made to look like the new texture plastered walls in colors without tearing off the paper?

A.: There is a special texture paint which has the character of stucco. It can be applied over the paper as you suggest and can be blended in any colors you may select.

Q.: Can I have an electric heater fitted into the wall of my bathroom or bedroom, where the hot-air heating system does not reach satisfactorily?

A.: Yes, there are several types of electric heaters made in Los Angeles, which are operated by a switch in the wall. They can easily be installed.

Q.: My casement windows leak. How can I make them watertight?

A.: Metal weather stripping and caulking will make them tight. There are several firms in Los Angeles doing this type of work. Names on request.

Q.: Our fireplace smokes. Can you suggest a remedy?

A.: There may be several causes for this difficulty. Names of several firms specializing in this work will be sent on request.

Q.: The dampness comes through our stucco walls in rainy weather. Can this be remedied?

A.: Yes. A waterproof stucco coating applied in any desired color, can be applied. There are several very good brands of stucco procurable locally.

Q.: We do not like the style of our front door and entrance. Is it difficult or very expensive to change it?

A.: A well-designed entrance and front door can be had for as little as $75, depending upon the work involved. Sometimes a very small change in detail will make a vast difference in the style and character of the entrance. The problem is often solved by the simple omission of some objectionable feature. Well-designed stock doors are now obtainable and are not expensive. A pencil sketch suggesting the change will be supplied to you by the Modernising Bureau.

Q.: I have been looking for a book which gives floor plans and designs of typical California houses costing from $3000 up. I would also like to know if there is a book which describes the proper use and method of applying various building materials. Can you help me?

A.: A book is published locally which gives fifty-five designs, English, Mediterranean and Monterey styles. These houses cost from $3000 to $25,000 and are the work of prominent California architects presented under the title, "Beautiful California Homes." Another book, "California Building Materials and How to Use Them," describes in detail just how each material should be applied to get the best results. Folders detailing the contents of each book will be sent on request.

(Questions of this type will be answered and literature sent free on request if inquiries and stamped return envelope are sent to the Home Modernization Bureau, care of Real Estate Editor, The Times.)

COMMUNITY MAINTAINS PROSPERITY

Preparations Made for Largest Citrus Crop in History of Area

The year 1930 has been one of normal prosperity for Fontana, states H. S. Barbee, vice-president of the Fontana Farms Company, who has just completed a survey of the San Bernardino county community.

During the year, says Barbee, Fontana has maintained the ten-year ratio of population gain of 2 per cent per month, the increase for 1930 being approximately 1200 persons, or about 25 per cent. Fontana's growth during the last decade, as revealed by the decennial census, was 240 per cent.

"Fontana citrus growers," said Barbee, "shared liberally in the distribution of the $135,000,000 which was received by Southern California for last season's citrus crop. Prospects for the crop now ripening are even better. The recent high winds left Fontana almost untouched, because of the wall of eucalyptus trees with which the community is surrounded.

HOLLYWOOD PERMITS GAIN

November Valuations Exceed Those of All Pacific Coast Communities Except Los Angeles

Hollywood was the scene of the greatest building activity on the Pacific Coast during November, the valuation of issued permits showing an increase of 64 per cent compared to November, 1929, and exceeding those of every city in California except Los Angeles, according to an analysis made in a coast-wide survey released yesterday by A. R. Killgore, executive vice-president of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company.

For the first time in history Hollywood's monthly building permits were greater than the San Francisco total, placing Hollywood second only to Los Angeles in State-wide construction for November.

The five west coast communities rank in valuation of November building permits as follows:

Los Angeles	$4,784,444
Hollywood	1,343,600
San Francisco	1,313,572
Portland	982,980
Oakland	366,616

For the eleven-month period of 1930 Hollywood led both Portland and Oakland. Figures given by the analysis show:

Hollywood	$11,754,552
Portland	11,304,165
Oakland	7,155,594

The Title Guarantee analysis shows that the valuation of Los Angeles' November building permits was greater than the combined totals of Seattle, San Francisco and Oakland and provided more than half the total valuation of permits issued in Southern California as a whole.

For the eleven-month period the ranking California communities in point of issued building permits, follow:

Los Angeles	$68,805,490
San Francisco	20,434,608
Long Beach	12,736,275
Hollywood	11,754,552
Oakland	7,155,594

The construction provided for by permits issued in the fifty-mile Los Angeles area during November exceeds that of any other section of the United States except New York, the Title Guarantee survey states.

Totals	894	804	$3,862,634

Filings of deeds, representing actual transfers of property, reached the total of 894 during the last week, making an average of approximately 150 transfers each day, according to the regular weekly survey pertaining to real estate activity within Los Angeles city limits compiled by the Fidelity Savings and Loan Association.

Trust deeds and mortgages numbered 804 for the last week and involved the sum of $3,862,634 in new realty financing operations. This was an average of more than $800,000 per day.

SOUTHWEST IN LEAD

The southwest district held first place among the fifteen districts of the city both in volume of deeds and financing instruments, while the Hollywood district was in the lead in valuation of new realty financing.

In the southwest district, a total of 162 deeds was filed, giving a lead over the Wilshire district, which held first place in the preceding survey, of forty-three transfers. Approximately one-fifth of the deeds recorded in the city last week were filed in the southwest district. The 169 trust deeds and mortgages were valued at $375,170. There were sixty more financing instruments filed there than were shown in the Wilshire district, where trust deeds and mortgages numbered 109 for the week.

WILSHIRE AREA SECOND

The Wilshire section was in second place both in volume and in valuation of realty activity. Deeds numbered 119 and the total value of new financing was $479,229. Slight gains were recorded in all phases of activity in the San Fernando Valley section, the survey shows. With 113 transfers of property, there was an increase of ten instruments, and the $181,274 involved in new financing showed a gain of $19,586.

The Hollywood district led all sections of the city in new realty financing with the sum of $713,922 involved in seventy-eight trust deeds and mortgages. There were ninety transfers of property recorded.

Additional financing gains were made in the West Washington, Elysian Park, Eagle Rock, Highland Park and central business districts.

YEAR BOOK OUTLINES ACTIVITIES

Organization Distributes Comprehensive Survey of Area Served

A year book outlining the activities and objectives of the Vermont-shire District Association has been issued by the organization for distribution to the membership and general public, and contains many pertinent facts relative to the section between Santa Monica Boulevard and Wilshire and extending from Hoover street to Kenmore avenue.

The book is illustrated and contains maps of the sections and a complete directory of business establishments within the district. Among accomplishments listed and attributed to the organization are the improvement of Vermont avenue, the Vermont-avenue car line extension, Sacatela Storm Drain No. 3, the Silver Lake Boulevard project and the recent reduction in taxes on Vermont-avenue property.

Officers of the association include Edwin G. Bowen, president; James J. Warrick, Henry G. Krohn, Press Preston and Nicholas Priester, vice-presidents, and Paul H. Muskat, secretary and treasurer. Royall W. Wheeler was president of the organization for three years dating from 1922 and also during 1928 and 1929.

Brokers Will Move Offices

The Otto G. Wildey Company, Ltd., successor to the Edwards & Wildey Company, has announced its removal tomorrow from the present location in the Signal Oil Building, 811 West Seventh street, to Suite 201, Edwards & Wildey Building, Sixth and Grand avenue. The suite has been remodeled.

The company announces that it will continue in the same lines: brokerage, insurance, loan departments, and subdivision department.

KEYNOTES OF DESIGN EXPLAINED

Efficiency and Comfort Held Essence of Modern Residential Plan

Efficiency and comfort are the keynotes of modern residential design, according to L. G. Scherer, architect and president of the Architects League of Hollywood. The elimination of all unnecessary features which fail to add to the efficiency and comfort of the home, and the use of paneling in place of moldings, baseboards and other ornamental dust catchers are characteristic of the new architecture, Scherer declares. This is said to be illustrated in the exhibition of his work, which opens Monday in the Architects' Building material exhibit at Fifth and Figueroa streets.

"Modern architecture," Scherer states, "is definitely establishing a place of its own in the realm of the arts, and it is developing a new and powerful expression which may be destined to take the place of the historical styles which are not entirely suited to our present civilization. The purpose of this architecture is to solve efficiently, honestly and sincerely the problems of contemporary culture, eliminating the unnecessary ornateness, intricate details and seemingly inexcusable types of construction which are a heritage of the past."

HOME-OWNERS CONTEST OPENS

Acquisition of Dwelling to Be Described

Letters Must Cite Actual Transaction Figure

Stimulation of Ownership Interest Expected

Another contest which is expected to rival in popularity the one recently conducted by the Realty Association of Real Estate Boards for the best definition of the word "Home" has been inaugurated by the association, according to O. D. Patterson, its vice-president and president-elect of the Los Angeles Realty Board. The contest will be for the six most interesting letters on the subject "How I Acquired My Home." Cash prizes totaling $300 are offered, with a capital prize of $100.

"Thousands of families have gone quietly about the acquiring of a home without the promptings of salesmen. Thousands of others have skimped and saved, made their own clothes, taken in boarders or stopped going to the movies in order to get the first payment on a home of their own," Patterson said yesterday.

DEVELOP SUGGESTION

"It is the belief of the realty association that the tales of how individual families achieved home ownership will spur other families on to the same end. If these tales can be passed on to people who have no homes, in fiction form, the contest may develop many practical suggestions that other families can emulate.

"One of the rules of the contest provides for the inclusion of actual figures. These figures, showing actual transactions, with an actual home at the end of the road, may go a long way to convincing many people that if home ownership has been practical and possible for the contestants it can be the same to them."

RULES OF CONTEST

The contest is open to any home owner living in his own home at the present time. The letters must be limited to 1000 words and contain the following descriptions: occupation of head of the family; size of house and its total cost, including mortgages; income of head of family, and if other income is received, mention there; complete description of how home was obtained from beginning of venture, including how initial payment was secured. Twenty-five points will be given for originality of ideas and human interest of how initial payment was saved or subsequent payments met.

All letters must be in the mail by midnight, January 6, 1931, addressed to the Home Experience Contest Judges, National Association of Real Estate Boards, 30 East Huron street, Chicago, and must contain name, address and telephone number of contestant printed in upper right-hand corner.

WATSON SPEAKS AT VISALIA GATHERING

VISALIA, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—D. D. Watson of Brentwood, president-elect of the California Real Estate Association, and past president of the Lions' Club in that city recently addressed a meeting of the Visalia Realty Board and a group of prominent citizens, discussing work being done by California realty operators to equalize the tax burden between real and other forms of property.

HAMMERING IN WATER PIPES HELD AVOIDABLE

A water system that will be free from the noisy water-hammer is obtained when a contractor so installs his pipes that there will be perfect circulation of hot water, it is reported. A good master plumber will insulate the hot water pipes in the walls and under the floors, thus saving approximately 25 per cent in fuel in a circulating system, it is stated.

REDONDO LOSES TO JACKRABBITS

Second Title in Row for Coach Landreth

Franklin and Sweet Star in 20-3 Contest

Injuries Wreck Seahawks' Chances to Win

BY IRVING ECKHOFF

Two "Jumping Jackrabbits" from Long Beach Poly, Ramblin' Red Franklin and Capt. Russ Sweet, tamed the rambunctious Redondo Seahawks, 20-3, yesterday afternoon in the Coliseum. The victory gave Orian Landreth's Jackrabbits their second straight Southern California prep football championship and the fourth in the history of the school.

ORIAN LANDRETH

Franklin and Sweet, who rank at the top of Southland ball packers this season, were in great form yesterday and coupled with the excellent work of Cecil Storey as full proved to be too good for the hard-fighting Redondo eleven.

Lloyd Waller's Seahawks went down battling, succumbing to a second-half drive that gave Long Beach all three of its touchdowns.

REDONDO AHEAD

At half-time Redondo was leading, 3-0, by virtue of a 28-yard dropkick from the educated toe of "Dynamite" Walt Schell. However, the complexion of the game changed in the third quarter when Long Beach carried the ball from its own 20-yard line straight down the field 80 yards for the first touchdown. Franklin did most of the yard-gaining, with Storey taking the ball three times when the goal line was neared. Storey's plunging was remarkable, going right through from the 13-yard line to the 1-foot line and then on the next play going over for the score. Barton Smith, end, converted.

With injuries wreaking havoc with the Redondo line, in the last quarter Long Beach tallied two more touchdowns. After Red Franklin had intercepted Capt. Mel Seifert's pass on the Redondo 36-yard line, Sweet replaced the speedy redhead and on seven plays crossed the Seahawk goal line, going over through right tackle from the 5-yard stripe.

"POP" OFF FOR PENNSYLVANIA?

Warner Checks Out of Hotel; May Quit Stanford

BY PAUL LOWRY

Back to Stanford or on to Pennsylvania?

That was the burning query last night as Pop Warner checked out at the Hotel Huntington in Pasadena, where he has been spending a few days' vacation.

"POP" WARNER

Earlier in the day the veteran football coach admitted he was interested in a purported offer of $25,000 a year to coach Penn's gridiron teams.

He said he believed the salary was exaggerated, but would certainly listen to such an offer at the figures mentioned.

Warner's name entered the Pennsylvania picture when Coach Lud Wray was dismissed by the Penn athletic council two days ago, following a disastrous season.

It was in the State of Pennsylvania as coach of Carlisle and Pittsburgh teams that Pop Warner gained his fame before coming to the Coast.

He has been at Stanford for

SINGTON IS REAL STAR

Alabama Tackle is Unanimous Choice for Berth on All All-American Grid Selections

BY RALPH HUSTON

Any number of all-Americans have appeared in the Rose Bowl, including the five that Pittsburgh sent against Southern California's Trojans, January 1, of the present year. Almost every visiting team that has opposed a Pacific Coast eleven in the annual contest has had its share of spectacular players.

But since the time of the famous "Four Horsemen" of Notre Dame, none has been more prominent than Freddie Sington of Alabama. The Crimson Tide's great tackle will appear in the Bowl New Year's Day.

TOBY UANSA

Sington is an outstanding choice for all-American honors this year. Every all-star squad that has been selected by anybody has included the name of the husky tackle. Sington of Alabama and Frank Carideo of Notre Dame are the only two unanimous choices for all-American positions this year. Some other players have been particularly favored, but none has displayed the tremendous favor that these two have been accorded.

Almost every visiting team in the Bowl has boasted outstanding players. When Wallace Wade, now coach at Alabama, played guard on the Brown team that played the first Rose Bowl game in 1916, the visitors had Harry Pollard, fullback, who was all-American in 1916, and Farnum, tackle Washington State, won, 14 to 0.

PENNSYLVANIA LOSES

In 1917 Pennsylvania brought Heinie Miller, end, and Glen Berry, fullback, all-Americans, and lost to Oregon, 14 to 0.

Ohio State came west in 1921 to bow to California's Wonder Team, 28 to 0, despite the presence of Pete Stinchcomb and Hoge Workman, halfback and quarterback, respectively, and their great passing combination.

January 1, 1922, saw Washington and Jefferson holding another California team to a scoreless tie with Stein in the lineup, an all-American tackle.

Southern California defeated Penn State, 14 to 3, in 1923, and the Nittany Lions had a prospective all-American in Mike Palm.

Washington and Navy tied, 14-14, in 1924 without the single advantage of an all-American in the Middle line-up.

Notre Dame brought its famous "Four Horsemen" to the Rose Bowl in 1925, and won, 27 to 10, with Stuhldreher, Crowley, Layden and Coach Wallace Wade has announced the squad will not be given a workout before arriving in Pasadena the 23rd inst. and only one stop-over will be made, enabling a trip to the Grand Canyon.

The Tide will be permitted, if possible, to forget offenses and defenses and the special train will not even carry a blackboard.

The official party, which probably will include Gov. Bibbs Graves, will leave here the 19th inst., arriving in Pasadena the 23rd inst., when the Tidesmen will begin polishing the defense which turned back all comers and the offense that carried them to nine successive victories.

No announcement has been made concerning the personnel of the official party, except

GEORGE SISLER RELEASED BY BOSTON TO ROCHESTER CLUB

BOSTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—George Sisler was released today by the Boston National League baseball club to the Rochester team, in the International League. The unconditional release marked a break in the veteran first baseman's record of fifteen years in the major leagues.

Sisler's first twelve years in the majors were passed with the St. Louis club of the American League. Three years ago he went south with the Washington team but he was unable to replace Joe Judge at first for the Senators and was traded to the Braves. As a ten-year man, his release was unconditional.

ELEVEN EASTERN PLAYERS ACCEPT BIG GAME OFFERS

HAMILTON (N. Y.) Dec. 13. (AP) Five backs and six linemen make up the roster of eastern players who will play with the all-East team against the West in the Shriners' Hospital fund game at San Francisco on the 27th inst.

The players, selected from colleges in the Atlantic seaboard sector are, backs, Hart and Macaluso of Colgate, Gardner of Villanova, Fogarty of Brown and Baker of Pittsburgh. Linemen are Vincent and Linehan of Yale, Doyle of Colgate, Bates of Western Maryland, Rosenweig of Carnegie and Siano of Fordham.

This group will join eleven men chosen from Middle Western lineups by Dick Hanley, Northwestern coach at Evanston, Ill., on Monday. They will be outfitted there and then proceed to San Francisco. Practice will be held at Northwestern before the players leave for the Pacific Coast and later at Stanford University.

RAY STECKER'S GALLOP DECIDES GRID BATTLE

Cadets Collect Touchdown in Last Period as 75,000 Fans Pay Over $600,000 to Cause of Needy

BY GRANTLAND RICE

[Copyright, 1930, by the North American Newspaper Alliance]

YANKEE STADIUM, NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (Exclusive)—A brilliant 56-yard run by Ray Stecker, the fleet Army back, beat the Navy, 6 to 0, this afternoon in a battle fought with desperation to the finish on both sides.

Stecker's great run broke up what looked to be a scoreless tie early in the fourth period, for up to that point a hard-fighting Navy team had held a better, stronger Army team in check, stopping two marches when its goal was threatened. Over 75,000 spectators who paid in over $600,000 to the cause of the unemployed saw the Navy halted by a stronger Army line that finally wore its opponents down.

Stecker's long run was the big feature of the afternoon. The score was then 0-0. Navy had just kicked to the Army's 44-yard line and the big crowd sitting in the sunlight and the colder shadows of the big Yankee stadium had begun to look for a tie. There seemed to be no chance for either team to score.

MAJOR RALPH SASSE

Then the big shock came. It was worse than the double-decked bombshell thrown into the ranks of the Blue. Ray Stecker started a wide, sweeping end run around the Navy's right flank. He scrambled loose from the first tackle, who hit him and straight-armed his way by the second, who came up fast. From this point it was a case of sheer speed. Heading diagonally to the left of the field, Stecker whirled across the chalk marks. Two Navy tacklers swerved out to head him off, but Stecker was on his way. He was now a runaway horse. The last Navy tackler dived in vain at Stecker's heels and just missed as the fast-flying Army back swept across the goal line for the only score of the day. Broshous just missed his shot at goal. Most of the action in this Army-Navy renewal was all packed in the final period.

ARMY STARTS FAST

The Army opened up at the start as if the West Point offensive was out to drive the Navy into the river that ambles by not so far away. Twice the hard-hitting Army backs, working behind a fast, hard-charging line, crashed their way down the field deep into Navy territory. But on each occasion a valiant Navy defense rolled the Army back and broke up two charges as two final passes were knocked down back of the line.

It was all Army through this first

SOUTHLAND SCHEDULE WAR ENDS

Santa Barbara Admitted to Membership in Local College Circuit

An alleged Southern California Conference athletic war with no more basis of fact than the recent Southern California - Stanford - California controversy ended amicably yesterday afternoon at the Y.M.C.A., where the Southern California Intercollegiate Conference completed its business for the year.

VERNE LANDRETH

The final session was featured by the unanimous admittance of Santa Barbara State College into the conference. Santa Barbara applied for admission a year ago and last fall played a representative schedule of football games with Southern Conference opponents. There are now eight schools in the conference.

Phil Ellsworth, Occidental College graduate manager, announced that Redlands University had arranged to play the Tigers on October 3. The Bulldogs had scheduled San Diego State on that date, but agreed to meeting the Aztecs on October 17. No other games were scheduled.

Ellsworth also reported that the flare-up over a date between La Verne College and Oxy had been settled to the satisfaction of both schools. Phil pointed out that the

ARMY, NAVY ATHLETES SIMPLY TOO POLITE FOR WORDS IN CHARITY TILT

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER

[Copyright, 1930, by Chicago Tribune.]

YANKEE STADIUM (New York) Dec. 13.—The Army beat the Navy by the demure score of 6 to 0 in their football game for the benefit of the unemployed at the Yankee Stadium this afternoon, and the play, though firm and enthusiastic, was surprisingly courteous at all times.

SECRETARY ADAMS

The mutual politeness was quite unexpected, not that the cadets and midshipmen, pledged to careers as officers and gentlemen, were supposed to be hoodlums, but because their elders and superiors in their respective services had made such an acrimonious pother about the politico-football feud between the schools there had been some premonition of carnage as the hour of the kick-off approached.

Ray Stecker, the nimble young sophomore back, achieved that special kind of immortality to which all West Point football players aspire when he ran 57 yards for a touchdown in the final period. His run began with a commonplace drift to his left for a slice off tackle. He set out from his right wing position, probably with no thought of going on a long journey, took the ball as he ambled by, rebounded from a couple of bumps, found a path outside the tackle, agitated his frame into a sudden dash of speed and was on his way past the melee with only Kirn and Williams of the Navy backfield offering to molest him. These two seemed to underestimate his speed for a fraction of a second.

TOO FAST

Then they cut across, trying to run him off the fairway. Stecker seemed to be treading the chalk

JOHNNY MACK BROWN ON AIR THURSDAY NIGHT OVER KHJ

Remember that sensational, fairy-footed halfback who scored two touchdowns against Washington at the Rose Bowl January 1, 1926? He's in the movies now and has been for several years. Thursday night over KHJ you'll hear his voice. He's Johnny Mack Brown, former Alabama ball carrier and he'll tell you something about that great game the Tide won, 20 to 19. On the same program with Brown will be Earl Foster, graduate manager of Washington State and the man in charge of the ticket situation for the New Year's Day game. If you want to know anything about the ducats send in your questions for Foster to Paul Lowry, sports editor of The Times, who will conduct Thursday night's broadcast at 9:30 o'clock from KHJ.

New York Giants and Former Notre Dame Stars Collide This Afternoon in New Y

ROCKNE SQUAD AND PROS MEET

All-Stars Given Big Hand by Gotham Fans

Jimmy Walker Greets Irish Coach and Team

Carideo and O'Connor Will Join Mates Today

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (AP)—Knute Rockne and his all-star squad of former Notre Dame football players arrived here today for their charity game with the New York Giant professional eleven tomorrow, and met with an enthusiastic reception.

FRANK CARIDEO

In the squad were many of the great Notre Dame players of the last decade. Rockne announced that his famous "Four Horsemen" of 1924 would comprise the backfield. His tentative line-up consists of Collins and Hunsinger, ends; Bach and Miller, tackles; Jones and Kizer, guards; Walsh, center; Stuhldreher, Miller, Crowley and Layden, backs.

Greeted by city officials and by Tim Mara, owner of the Giants, the squad of thirty-five headed by Rockne made its way through a crowd four deep in the Grand Central Station concourse to the cars which were waiting to take them to the City Hall.

A throng of 5000 quickly gathered to get a look at Rockne and his gridiron greats as they piled into the automobiles. A band from the City Hall struck up "Hike Notre Dame."

Three thousand more of the curious were waiting at the Municipal Building.

Rockne's health, which has not been robust for some time, was somewhat below par after the long trip eastward, members of his party said.

Frank Carideo and Bucky O'Connor, stars of this year's Notre Dame team, who will play in the game, were not with the squad, but will arrive tomorrow morning. Scholastic duties kept them in South Bend until the last moment, it was explained.

The players, after about an hour's wait at the City Hall, went to the Polo Grounds for a workout. Mayor Walker arrived and in an official reception to Rockne on the steps of the City Hall praised him as "an ideal and an inspiration to American youth."

Rockne said in reference to his "Four Horsemen." "At first I thought these fellows might not be able to put up a good game after several years' lay-off but when I got to South Bend on Wednesday I found them a little older but was pleasantly surprised to see the way they handled the ball.

"This is not going to be merely a spectacle but a real game. As Jim Crowley said to me, 'They may catch me, but they're going to have a hard time stopping me.' If the New York Giants think they are going to have just a little fun tomorrow they are due for a surprise."

the past seven years, although the Warner system was installed there two years before his coming by his assistants, Andy Kerr and Tiny Thornhill.

Warner refused any information on his salary yesterday, but said he could leave Stanford at any time if he chose. His contract is merely a "gentleman's agreement."

However, he declared he was satisfied with conditions at Stanford, and unless some big financial inducement was made, as in the rumored Penn offer, he probably would stick at Palo Alto.

His Stanford teams have enjoyed great success during his regime, having never lost a game to their traditional rival, California, and being on the right side of the ledger with all others except Southern California. Stanford has dropped the last three games to the Trojans.

The reported Pennsylvania offer is said to be twice the yearly salary Warner receives at Stanford. However, the veteran mentor says he has heard nothing from Penn authorities.

Chaffey Grids Capture Game

HONOLULU, Dec. 13. (AP)—Chaffey Junior College of Ontario, Cal., defeated Kamehameha High School of Honolulu at football here today, 12 to 0.

It was Chaffey's second win of its Hawaiian invasion. The visitors defeated McKinley High School last week, 14 to 6.

Chaffey's first touchdown today was scored in the opening period after Peter Fillus, substitute halfback, intercepted a Kam pass and dashed 42 yards to the goal line.

Max Glass, substitute quarterback, scored the other touchdown in the final period after a series of line plays.

GREENLEAF UPSET IN TABERSKI MATCH

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. (AP)—Frank Taberski of Schenectady, N. HOW CADETS NOSED OUT THE NAVY

Play-by-Play Account of Army Victory in Charity Tilt

FIRST PERIOD

Capt. Bowstrom of the Navy won the toss and chose to kick off. Kilday took the kick-off and returned it 15 yards to Army's 20-yard line. Kilday plunged 2 yards off tackle, but Frenzel was stopped after gaining a yard on a reverse. Stecker punted to Kern, who was forced out of bounds on Navy's 27-yard line. Officials detected holding on Navy's part, however, and the ball was brought back, giving Army a first down on its own 20-yard line as a result of the 15-yard penalty.

Stecker ripped off 5 yards on a spinner and plunged through guard for 4 more. Kilday made it first down on Navy's 43-yard line and the Middies took time out.

Kilday whirled 3 yards on a spinner and then broke off his left tackle for another 3-yard gain. The Cadets were hitting sharply, and Stecker tore off tackle to Navy's 31-yard line for another first down.

Soldiers tried the air, but Stecker's first long heave down the middle was incomplete.

Stecker found a hole off right tackle and reached the 28-yard line. Stecker hit the same hole again and it was first down on Navy's 20-yard mark. Cannon was at left halfback for the Navy, having been chosen to start instead of Hurley. Navy braced, and Stecker in two line plunges along the sidelines, gained barely 4 yards. A short pass, Stecker to Frenzel, was completed, but netted only a yard. Stecker then threw a long pass into the end zone, but it was too high and bounced off the clutching fingers of Carlmark. Navy got the ball in play on its 20-yard line after the touch back and on the first play, a bad pass from center rolled back to within a yard of the Middie goal line, where it was recovered for the Navy in a desperate melee.

Bowstrom's punt from behind his own goal was caught by Wen Bowman, Army quarterback, who was run out of bounds on Navy's 34-yard line. The Navy forward stopped Bowman for short gains on the end sweeps, but the Army quarterback then took a short pass from Stecker and raced to Navy's 14-yard line for a 16-yard gain. Stecker went over the side line, but was tackled in his tracks by Hasberg, Navy back, as the latter broke through the interference.

Fourth down with 2 yards to go. Stecker tried another long pass at Bowman raced over the Navy goal, but it was knocked down. Again the Sailors put the ball in play on their own 20-yard line.

Johnny Cannon sliced 6 yards into two plays, but Bowstrom then punted to Army's 23-yard line, where the ball was allowed to roll dead. Bowman was sheared behind the line on a reverse for a 1-yard loss. Frenzel got off a quick kick and the ball sailed over the Navy's safety man's head. It was downed by Mossinger, Army end, on Navy's 21-yard line. Kirn hit the Army's left side for 2 yards, but Cannon barely made a yard around right end. Hasberg punted poorly for the Middies and the ball slanted diagonally across the field, Army recovering on Navy's 45-yard stripe. Stecker drove through for 3 yards, but was hurt and Army took time out.

A new set of Cadets warmed up. Kilday on a double reverse won 3 yards as the first period ended, with the ball on Navy's 39-yard line in Army's possession.

SECOND PERIOD

The Army made 11 eight replacements, including an entire new backfield composed of MacWilliam, Herb, Glattley and Fields. The new ends were Mallor and King. Starting the second period, from Navy's 39-yard line, Fields picked up a scant yard through the line. Fields then punted to Kirn, who took the ball on the run and galloped to his 34-yard line. Cannon on a reverse won 3 yards but Pullet Lou Kirn bumped into a stone wall at Army's left tackle. Price, Gannon on a fake buck, raced back and passed over the line but Hasberg missed the ball and it was grounded. Beem got off a beautiful punt to MacWilliam, who returned from his own 22-yard line to the 44.

Glattley and Herb advanced 3 yards in two bucks and Navy called time out to make a few changes. Stecker threw a long pass down the alley but Kirn grabbed the ball out of the mitts and it was Navy's ball on their own 30-yard line. Gannon, on a cutback, gained 5 yards, but Kirn again bustled into the wall at the line, Price bringing him down. The Navy interference failed to click and Gannon punted only a few.

Bowstrom's punt to MacWilliam, who fumbled on his own 34-yard mark, but recovered and the Navy backfield smothered him. MacWilliam was tackled behind the line by Steffanides for a 5-yard loss. Fields fumbled but recovered at the line and then punted to Kirn, who was downed in his tracks on Navy's 38-yard line. So far it was a tight defensive battle. Navy tried to open things up with a pass, but Johnny Gannon threw widely to Hasberg as the latter was out in the open and it was incomplete. Kirn slashed through center for 2 yards. Gannon was stopped on a reverse and Bowstrom punted to Army's 20-yard line, Fields was downed by a few yards from the side line by a Navy player, but the referee ordered out an Army's ball.

The Navy made several substitutions, Black replacing Tuttle at center; Reedy replacing Underwood at left guard. Fields failed to gain in two tries and punted to Kirn, who fumbled as he took the ball at midfield. Dale Bauer, Navy's quarterback, recovered on Army's 48-yard line. In the middle backfield, Hurley replaced Kirn and Williams replaced Bauer.

Another Gannon-Hasberg pass was incomplete after a line plunge. Herb knocked down Gannon's wide pass and Navy was penalized 5 yards. Bowstrom punted out of bounds on Army's 21-yard mark.

Fields and Herb, in three rushes, gained 7 yards and Fields then placed a nice punt on Navy's 21-yard line, where the Middies allowed it to be downed by their rivals. Carver replaced MacWilliam for Army at quarterback. Johnson, who had replaced Gray at right guard, was hurt after a few plays and Thompson replaced him.

Torgensen went in at Navy's left end for Stefanides. Gannon on a cut-back broke through the left side of Army's line for 7 yards. Hurley picked up a yard, but Gannon fell as he tried another cut-back dash and failed to gain. Bowstrom punted to Army's 37-yard line.

Carver and Herb failed to puncture the Navy line for more than 5 yards in three plays and Fields punted. Williams, Navy's quarterback, returned only a few yards before being forced out on his 21-yard line.

Gannon was thrown for a 2-yard loss as the half ended with the game still scoreless.

THIRD QUARTER

The Army line-up at the outset of the third period was the same as starting was with the exception of Lazar at center, and King at left end. Navy's line-up was the same as at the start.

Army kicked off and Bauer ran the ball back 10 yards to Navy's 32-yard line.

Three line plays gained barely a yard altogether, and Bowstrom punted to Kirn, man, who was downed on his 33-yard mark. Stecker found a big hole off his right guard and tore through for a first down on Army's 44-yard line on the first Cadet play. Stecker hit the same spot for 2 yards, going straight by the Navy secondary. Bowman shot off his right tackle for another first, but the Navy's 44-yard line and the Midshipmen took time out. Tuttle, Navy center, was in on the play.

Hasberg also needed some first-aid treatment before play was resumed. A low pass spoiled the next Army play and on a short pass, Stecker to Frenzel, the latter tripped over his own interference and there was no rain. Stecker hurled a long pass to King, but it was batted down by Kirn. Frenzel then kicked out of bounds on Navy's 24-yard line.

Navy fumbled on a double pass and Tuttle, who had replaced Gannon at left half, barely recovered for an 8-yard loss. Bowstrom's punt was fair catched on Army's 48-yard line as the Cadets swung into attacking formation again. Army was penalized 15 yards for holding, setting the ball back on the Cadet 41-yard line.

Carl Carlmark

Bowman broke around his right end after taking a short pass behind the line from Stecker and was nearly away when he was forced out of bounds on Navy's 46-yard line. It was second down with 7 to go. Stecker picked up 3 yards but on the next play Bowman was smeared behind the line for a 2-yard loss after grabbing a pass from Stecker.

Taschirsi slanted off his right tackle for 6 yards, then on a cutback dashed to Army's 43-yard line for a first down. The next rush failed and Bauer fumbled on a reverse, Stecker recovering for Army on the latter's 44-yard mark. The Cadets took time out. Stecker raced wide to the right for a gain of only 2 yards, and Kilday ran the ball out of bounds on Army's 48-yard line.

Stecker threw a long pass down the middle, but it was knocked down by Kirn. Frenzel punted out of bounds on Navy's 20-yard line. Taschirsi was spilled on a reverse play without gain but Kirn slipped through a hole in Army's left side for 6 yards. He tried the same spot but found it plugged up and Bowstrom went back to renew the punting duel. His kick to Bowman was returned 6 yards to Army's 44-yard line.

Stecker broke through Navy's left guard for an 8-yard gain. The Middies decided to take a rest.

Stecker threw a pass to Frentzel but the latter fumbled after almost completing the play. Stecker ran wide for a first down on Navy's 43-yard line. The Cadets were showing a lot of drive and Kilday in two dashes off tackle, made a first down on Navy's 31-yard line. Frenzel was spilled by Tuttle for a yard loss on a reverse, and Referee O'Brien then penalized Army 15 yards for holding.

It put the ball on Navy's 46-yard line. Once again Stecker tried the air, but his toss to Ed Messinger was incomplete.

The period ended with Army in possession of the ball on Navy's 46-yard line as Stecker gained a yard.

FOURTH QUARTER

Starting the final period, Stecker finally connected and Bowman, taking a short pass, ran to Navy's 25-yard line. The play was called back, however, and Navy penalized 5 yards. On the next attempted pass, Stecker's throw was incomplete, and this time Army was penalized 15 yards for holding.

Frenzel punted to Kirn, who was tackled by Lazar on Navy's 26-yard line. Gannon's interference bogged down and he was thrown for a loss, but Army was offside and penalized 5 yards. Bowstrom kicked to Bowman, who fought his way through three tacklers.

Stecker broke off his own left tackle on the first play, straight-armed two tacklers and gained two more as he raced 37 yards before he was stopped. It was a spectacular play. Brosheous sent in to try the kick for extra point, missed the uprights. Score—Army, 6; Navy, 0.

Army kicked off, with a revamped lineup, and Navy punted after failing to gain in two plays. Army gained 3 yards on a line plunge from its own 36-yard line, opened a line attack, but gained only 7 yards in three plays.

Stecker punted to Kirn, who tried a surprise lateral pass to Williams, substitute Navy quarterback, but the latter failed to catch and was downed on Navy's 25-yard line. Kirn picked up a yard at center. Cannon passed, and an Army back was intercepted intercepting it. It was incomplete, and Bowstrom punted to Army's 37-yard line, where Bowman fumbled and the ball was Navy right end, recovered. The Cadets took time out.

Driving hard to capitalize the break, Kirn made 3 yards and Gannon passed to Byng, who caught the ball and made first down on Army's 25-yard line. Kirn was spilled at Army's left tackle, and Williams's pass was incomplete.

Byng came back to hurl a left-handed pass, but Bowman knocked the throw down and Navy was penalized 5 yards. Gannon's pass to Byng was incomplete, as the latter let the ball swerve from his grasp and let the ball go. Navy lost ball on its own 33-yard line, after another 5-yard penalty had been imposed.

Bowman broke through the line for first down on Navy's 48-yard line. Stecker on a reverse made 2 yards. Herb got loose for 8 yards more, but Navy was penalized 15 yards for unnecessary roughness, and the next result was a first down for Army on Navy's 24-yard line. Stecker then slashed through for 6 yards, and Herb plunged off his own left end for another first down on Navy's 12-yard line.

Frentzel and Stecker worked their way in three more plays to Navy's 7-yard line. Fourth down, with four to go, a pass from Stecker to Bowman was incomplete and Navy took the ball on its own 7-yard line.

Army was penalized for being offside on Bowstrom's first punt. The Navy captain then fated another punt, but it developed into a pass, Gannon to Byng, for a first down on Navy's 34-yard line. Army was penalized on the next play for offside. Another Army pass was grounded as the game ended.

Score—Army, 6; Navy, 0.

COMPTON, MENLO JAYSEES

Pine and uncorked a pass toward the goal line. Frenchy Lacombe, taking the part Riley played in the Chicago game, leaped high in the air to spear the ball, coming down with it on the goal line. It looked as though Lacombe realized the mistake of intercepting the ball and threw it to the ground. Slagle pounced on the pigskin in the end zone and the Tartars claimed either a touchdown or a safety. The officials, however, ruled that Lacombe never had possession of the ball and called it a touchback, giving the Oaks the ovaI on their 20-yard line. Strange to say, Arthur Badenoch, the field judge yesterday, was also the field judge in the Chicago game in which the disputed play occurred. Anyhow, that play ruined any chance of breaking a tie in the few remaining minutes of play.

After ruining one scoring opportunity early in the first quarter by fumbling on the Menlo 8-yard line, the Tartars drove 80 yards down the field for their touchdown, which came on the opening play of the second period.

Compton took the ball on its 20-yard line after McIntosh had punted over the goal line and started its attack functioning. Slagle made it a first down on the 31-yard stripe. On fourth down with a yard to go, Yancey, back to punt, picked up a bad pass from center and faked a run around left end. Seeing about four Oaks in his way, the Compton quarterback calmly wound up and passed to Schlelbaum, who had gone down to cover the punt, for a first down on Menlo's 25-yard line.

SLAGLE GOES OVER

Slagle smashed his way to the 7-yard mark as the first quarter ended and on the opening play of the second period skirted around right end behind perfect interference for a touchdown. McKee's place-kick was wide.

The Oaks ripped off four first downs in the second quarter, using tricky lateral passes and forwards to advantage, but the Compton defense checked them in scoring territory. An 80-yard punt from his goal line by Tom Yancey put Menlo back in the hole again.

Menlo took the second-half kickoff and drove right down the field to its touchdown. Peacock crashed his way to midfield to start the drive and then a lateral from Lacombe to Lattimore put the ball on Compton's 13-yard line. Gordon McLachlin passed to Norgard for a first down on the Tartar 9-yard mark, but the next two plays gained nary a yard through the Compton defense. Whereupon Lacombe worked one of Pop Warner's old standby plays, flipping Lattimore a short pass behind the line, with the Oak halfback darting around right end for the touchdown. Stringer missed the place-kick for the extra point.

Compton had all the edge in the remainder of the game, but an alert Menlo backfield ruined the Tartars' scoring chances by intercepting any and all forward passes attempted. With Krueger and Slagle smashing the line and running the tackles, the Tartars twice drove inside Menlo's 20-yard line, but from there the going proved a bit too tough.

The game was a miniature Stanford-U.S.C. battle, the Oaks using Pop Warner's system and the Tartars employing Howard Jones's style of football.

BOTH TEAMS HANDICAPPED

Both teams took the field handicapped, Menlo playing without its all-conference end, Art Rice, who was left at home suffering with the flu, while Compton had its two regular guards, Clark and Goss, on the sidelines with injuries suffered in last week's game at Riverside. Yancey also was unable to last because of a lame ankle, but you would not have thought there was anything wrong with his hoof from the way he uncorked that eighty-yard punt.

The rival lines played bang-up ball, shining especially on the offense. Krueger and Slagle for Compton and Lattimore and Lacombe of Menlo proved the best ground-gainers.

Compton fans might get some solace out of the fact that the Tartars turned in sixteen first downs to twelve for the Oaks. The fact that both teams made so many first downs shows what kind of an offensive game it was and why it was so thrilling from the spectators' standpoint.

NOVELTY OFFERED AT ICE HOCKEY RINK

Ice hockey fans will be treated to a novelty tomorrow night when a game is held as an added attraction at the Palais De Glace between the girls' teams of the Goodyear Rubber Company and the Palais. The contest will be staged between periods of the regular Senior League battle between the Los Angeles Bruins and the Hollywood Monarchs.

Strengthened by the signing of Al Ouimet, former Winnipeg wingman, and Jack Dawson, veteran Moose Jaw defense, the tail-end Monarchs will be conceded a good chance of tripping up the league-leading Bruins. Since Mike Fly, a veteran Canadian hockey man, took over the Movie pucksters they have been winning games.

Coaches Pick All-Star Team

Five members of Washington High School's championship football team won places on the All-Marine League squad picked by coaches from all the schools last week. Riis finished second in the league standings and also in the number of men placed on the all-star team. Four men from Riis gained recognition. The other two players to make up the team came from Narbonne High School.

Mills of Washington and Moore of Riis were unanimously selected at the end positions. The coaches were extremely free in their praise of this couple, declaring that they were as good as any the league has ever produced. Robb of Narbonne and Grant of Washington were hard pressed to win the tackle positions over Martinez and Randles.

Joe Cerniglia, Riis's four-year letter man, was an unanimous choice for one guard position, the other going to Henny from Washington. Henny was given the edge over Wilson and Campbell, both of whom showed up well during the year Solditch had little trouble in winning a place at center. The star Washington guard was easily the outstanding center in the loop.

Riis placed two men in the backfield. Pritzie Jacobs a triple-threat marl being given the signal-calling job by unanimous consent and Joe Gibson the hard-hitting line plunger drawing down the fullback berth. Gibson was also a triple-threat man and a demon at backing up the line. Cramer of Washington and Dawson of Narbonne were given the halfback positions after considerable competition.

The coaches also chose a second team which many believed to be almost as strong as the first with but few exceptions.

CADETS DEFEAT NAVY GRIDDERS

Army Wins Service Game by 6-to-0 Margin

Stecker Dashes 56 Yards to Score Touchdown

Most of Action of Game Is in Final Period

period, but in spite of that Army couldn't score. The Navy defense was scrapping with too much desperation to be carried too close to its own goal. After the first period the Navy rallied and came back with a rush. It could make no headway against a smart, aggressive Army defense, but it began to break up Army plays. The second and third periods carried little action. Both teams had to kick repeatedly on fourth downs. Neither side was able to threaten anything like a long march. It was not until the middle of the third period that the Navy made its first down. After that it added only one more, but a fumbled kick gave the Midshipmen a great chance near the finish. After Stecker had scored on his 56-yard dash Bowstrom lifted a high twisting spiral to Bowman of the Army on his own 36-yard line. The kick was high and far. Bowman, watching the high spiral come his way, signaled for a fair catch, but the ball bounded from his arms, and Byng, the keen Navy end, dived for it on the Army 38-yard line. Here was the Navy's big chance. The blue-coated section was in an uproar. The cheering racket of the Cadets was suddenly silenced. Gannon threw a forward pass to Byng, who ran 12 yards to the Army 24-yard line.

But this was as far as the Navy could go. The big Army line, with Price and others surging in killed off the Navy attack. Once more the tide of battle changed. With Stecker, Frentzel and Bowman carrying the ball, hammering away through the line, the Army started its final march. Yard by yard, 5 and 6 yards at a clip, the Army juggernaut hammered its way toward the Navy goal. The long 60-yard hike finally reached the Navy's 7-yard line. But here again a valiant Navy team gave everything it had to repel the last assault and the Army drive was halted.

The Army had too much power for the Navy to be stopped. The Army made thirteen first downs against three for the Navy and carried the ball 386 yards against a Navy total of 148. The forward pass on both sides was too much of the helter-skelter type with the ball passed out of range too often to be dangerous. The kicking of Bowstrom and Frentzel was high class all the way. And the downfield tackling of Byng, King, Carlmark, Messinger and others was high grade. But all in all the Army had too much stuff. It was the supremacy of a bigger, stronger Army line that kept the Navy bottled up and broke down its attack. But even with this advantage it took an old-fashioned sweep to settle the issue.

DESPERATE FIGHT

Both teams fought themselves out. The tackling and blocking was hard but clean, but you could see that both sides meant business. Of the Army's thirteen first downs only one actually counted, for this came after Bowman had returned a Navy kick. The big crowd, practically filling the huge stadium, with only a few vacant seats drew a perfect football afternoon and the two teams drew a playing field in good condition. Rather heavy penalties were imposed against both teams for holding and offside. After the first period it was easy to see that that neither team could quite carry out any sustained march. The defense strength on both sides was too great. The Navy made a fine stand against a better team and but for Stecker's great speed might have gotten away with a scoreless draw. But there were no Navy feet quite fast enough to catch Stecker when he once reached open ground. He was a greyhound then, not to be caught as he carried victory in his arms across the line and gave the Army one of the best seasons it has ever known.

Both teams deserved great credit for their play this late in the winter season. Both were well coached but the better team won finishing a season that missed an unbeaten record by just one point and that to Notre Dame. The Navy with Byng, Kirn, Bowstrom and others came along gallantly, but it had no attack strong enough to break the might of the Army line from flank to flank.

The total receipts for the unemployed are not yet all in but they will go well above $600,000, which is a football record.

Three Cincy Veterans on Trade Block

CINCINNATI (O.) Dec. 13. (AP)—Long Bob Meusel and Curt Walker, outfielders, and Johnny Gooch, catcher, members of the Cincinnati Reds, are on the trade block, Sidney Weil, president of the club, said today. Weil said Manager Dan Howley had asked and received waivers on the trio from all other major league clubs. All three players have been in the big leagues over ten years and cannot be sent to the minors without their consent.

Bruin Cagers Crush Pomona Five, 45 to 15

With Carl Knowles and Dick Von Hagen leading the U.C.L.A. scoring attack, Coach Caddy Works's Bruin basketeers crushed the Pomona quintet, 45 to 15, last night in a practice tilt held in the Sagehen gym. Knowles, lanky center, looped in a dozen points for the victors while Von Hagen registered one less.

The Bruins started off slowly, leading only 13 to 8 at halftime, but got up steam in the final period to run away from their opponents. The victory was the Bruins's second in two nights, Whittier having been vanquished Friday.

In a preliminary affair the Bruin reserves defeated the Pomona subs, 30 to 10. Kellogg of U.C.L.A. scored 9 points.

TIDE WILL NOT STOP EN ROUTE

Coach Wade has said he will take thirty-five players. University officials said today the passenger list for the trip was incomplete, but it is known that Dr. George Denny, president of the university, and Judge Henry Bacon Foster of Tuscaloosa, president of the board of trustees, will be among those included.

Interest throughout Alabama in the Tide's third western invasion is keen, and from all sections come reports of the faithful who will board one of the three special trains leaving for Pasadena the 26th inst.

In addition to the special trains, at least one bus load of students from the university will join the westward exodus, and plans are on foot to make an airplane party of ten from here.

During the past week, Coach Wade has polished up the team, drilling the players in meeting the Washington State attack in addition to long signal drills and perfection of new plays.

Next week the Tide will open its bag of tricks against reserves in Washington State formations and see how well they work. The squad is being watched carefully so that every man will be in tiptop condition New Year's Day.

COUGARS PUT THROUGH HARD INDOOR WORKOUT

PULLMAN (Wash.) Dec. 13.—While snow fell steadily outside, Washington State's Cougars, drilling for their all-important New Year's Day game with Alabama at Pasadena, were sent through a stiff two and a half-hour indoor workout today by Coach Babe Hollingbery in the mammoth field house. The practice started at 9:30 and was not halted until noon.

A roll call did not produce a full quota of players, several being absent making up back student work, while Ellingsen, Lainhart, Hein and Edwards are still on the sick list. A full squad is expected out for Monday's practice by the busy Cougar coach.

After the entire crew had put in a siege with the tackling dummy and the linemen kept busy at the bucking sled, Hollingbery and Assistant Coach Buck Bailey lined up three teams and sent them through signal practice.

Hollingbery stressed fundamentals and followed the squads, watching for and correcting mistakes. Past reverses, spins and fake passes were the principal plays used. The Cougar coach is not satisfied with the way these plays have worked this season and is taking special pains to see that they are functioning perfectly against Alabama's Crimson Tide. Today each play was worked in lightning fashion with every movement as charted.

The Cougar players are taking this Alabama game seriously and are out to be at their very best before the critical Southern California audience of fans that will be out to see the team that first knocked over the 1932 Trojans. The field house fairly trembled with noise as the Coast champions dug into their work and boomed on each play.

Hollingbery also put the Staters through a snappy passing drill, indicating that the Cougars intend to take the air against 'Bama's champions of the South. Tonkin, Sander, Schroder and Dahlen took turns at fading back for short tosses over the line. The Cougars also have been working hard developing a tricky lateral pass attack. Hollingbery is priming his men for a wide-open game and the Cougars will "shoot the works" when they face Alabama in an effort to start the new year right.

REDONDO BOWS TO JACKRABBITS

Injuries Wreck Seahawks' Chances to Win

right tackle, broke his arm late in the second quarter, while Ray Wright, the Seahawks' steady right guard, was removed from the battle in the third period with a cracked rib. In the second period Leonard Doyle injured his ankle.

He had to sit on the bench for the remainder of the contest. Doyle started at right end. With three substitutes playing all on one side of the line it is easy to see how the Jackrabbits amassed the huge total of 309 yards from scrimmage to Redondo's 105.

FIRST-DOWN EDGE

After holding the Long Beach eleven even in the first quarter as far as first downs were concerned, each team making three, Redondo weakened and final statistics show the Jackrabbits on the long end of a nineteen-eight first-down score.

Late in the fourth quarter Capt. Seifert passed to Herwer on the 45-yard line. Herwer had possession of the ball, but fumbled and Long Beach recovered. On the second play Sweet broke loose and would have scored, but Howard Ward, Redondo left end, caught him from behind on the 2-yard line. However, it was all in vain for on the third down Sweet ran through right tackle for the third touchdown of the day. Sweet's attempt to pass for the extra point was incomplete.

Soon after Long Beach got its second score, Coach Landreth started substituting and by the end of the game every man in a suit had been used.

Walt Schell failed to impress the assembled crowd of some 10,000, although his 28-yard drop-kick, which carried 38 yards in the air in the first quarter was exceptional. His ball packing seemed to lack the usual vigor and vim shown in earlier games.

While "Dynamite" Walt's defense work in the first half was very good he failed to do much the last two periods, Sweet and Franklin both getting away for long runs with Schell standing by.

Landreth employed the two stars on the same order that "Head Man" Jones used Duffield and Mohler. Franklin started and after he had worn down the Seahawks, Landreth inserted Sweet into the fray, who proceeded to run the poor Seahawks ragged.

Long Beach's feat of winning the Southland championship twice in a row equaled Chief Newman's Coast record. The Colts took a pair of Southern California football titles in '25 and '26.

NEW YEAR'S MEMORIES

REMEMBER Daniel Boone?

Not the crack rifle shot but the pigskin-toting expert.

The gent who lugged the oval over for one of Washington State's two touchdowns against Brown fifteen years ago.

Well, Mr. Boone has turned up in Glendale as head of an automobile finance company and with some leftover impressions of W.S.C.'s 14-to-0 New Year's Day victory over Brown.

"Maybe you saw the 1916 game," he writes, "and if you did you know the field was not as bad as the reports would sound. A good layer of sawdust was spread over the field and the footing while not perfect was still good.

"Our line won for us that day as is nearly always the case. The backfield man doesn't live that can gain regardless of his line. I remember on our second touchdown Dietz went into the line alongside of me, and neither one of us touched a soul. Dietz didn't stop until some excited fan jumped over the rope and hugged him. The line opened the hole!

"Looks to me like a great game coming up New Year's and the line will win the game again. I don't know how good Alabama is, but I'd hate to be the man who bucked it all day. Here is hoping they make W.S.C. the underdog again. We will see some fine line work that is the real stuff.

"However it goes, neither the West nor South will feel bad on account of the showing of their teams."

JUST CHICKEN FEED

CONSIDERED in the light of present-day football financiering, the intake for the 1916 game at Pasadena was a laugh.

Although the exact figures are not at hand, the outgo just about ate up all the gate receipts.

Brown was guaranteed $7500 to make the trip.

Washington State was alloted $4000.

Compare this with the possible receipts at the Rose Bowl this year—in the neighborhood of $400,000 if all the 85,000 seats are sold. And a three-way split of the two teams with the Tournament of Roses Association.

When Mr. Daniel Boone, who went under the good old-fashioned handle of Ralph in those days, says he hopes W.S.C. will be the underdog again he refers to the '16 game.

Brown was the favorite because it was an eastern team and ranked up with all but Harvard and Cornell that year.

And it was held that no western team had a chance with an eastern aggregation.

But, as has so often been the case, the underdog crushed the favorite badly.

Washington State scored two touchdowns, and missed two others on fumbles within the 5-yard line—on a field that saw Pollard, the Negro halfback flash, unable to get started at any time.

POOR WALLACE WADE

THE following excerpt from a story in The Times describing the game is interesting because one of the gentleman mentioned (Wallace Wade) is the present Alabama coach.

"Early in the second half Quarterback Durham found that holes could be made in the right side of the Brown line, and he marshaled his forces to batter it down. It soon looked like a well-constructed sieve. Two linemen would shift over, the backs would form a V-shape behind them, and then the man with the ball would go plunging in. He would start for the tackle and then veer, charging straight through the guard.

"Wade, the first right guard, was taken out of the game, exhausted. Maxwell, the second man to try the job, could hardly walk off the field. Farnum, the giant tackle, sat down three or four yards behind his own line after every charge. At the end of the game he was calling for a pillow and his tongue was hanging out. Capt. Andrews, in a vain effort to stop the attack, flung himself into the line. The Washington interference wrecked him. Butner, the end, also retired.

"Boone, who replaced Hanley (present Northwestern coach) for the winners at the beginning of the second half, was easily the star for Washington. He carried the ball three out of five times. He shot through tackle as if he had been hurled by a gun."

NOTRE DAME PSYCHOLOGY

ANOTHER version of Notre Dame's victory over Southern California.

From E. C. C.:

"Here's a thought. No wonder the Notre Dame boys made themselves right at home in this town and mistreated our nice home-town boys.

"The Spanish name of Los Angeles in full is "Nuestra Senora Reina de Los Angeles.

"Notre Dame is merely the same thing in French.

"Maybe they felt the town was named for their school."

"GRANNY" SCHWARTZ'S FAVORITE

Notre Dame Grid Star Gives Grandmother Credit for Success on Football Field; Started Halfback on Road to Fame as Prep School Player

By a Staff Correspondent

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 13. (NANA) Football fans in other parts of the world may credit Knute Rockne with Marchmont Schwartz's rise to gridiron greatness, but those who know the Schwartz family here say that the powerful Notre Dame halfback is an all-American because his 76-year-old grandmother is a good sport.

MARCHY SCHWARTZ

"Granny" Clark has never seen her "Marchy" play, but she reads the sporting pages and sits at the radio in her home at Bay St. Louis, Miss., seventy miles from New Orleans, during every game on the Notre Dame schedule. And "Marchy" knows it. After every game he sends her a "love note."

Marchmont, his friends say, regards his grandmother as the individual most responsible for his success of football. Without her aid he couldn't have made the run that beat Army or couldn't have thrown the passes that demoralized the University of Southern California.

It was "Granny" Clark, according to Marchmont's former teachers in St. Stanislaus College at Bay St. Louis, who made it possible for the great halfback to play his first game of preparatory school football.

The all-American halfback, born in New Orleans, was, in 1924, what former Coach Forster Commagere of St. Stanislaus considered a "spoiled boy."

His place in the constellation of great athletes had been predicted at birth when his uncle asked that he be named after a famous race horse. His athletic ability had been demonstrated at 3, when strangers observed how the graceful, black-haired, brown-eyed little fellow made his playmates look like a lot of plow horses compared with a derby winner as he romped on a vacant lot. His prowess as a football player was obvious when he generalled one of the midget teams at St. Stanislaus, but at 16 he wasn't even out for the school's eleven.

Coach Commagere and Brother Peter, president of the college, believed the boy to have the makings of a great football player, and they wanted to know why he wasn't out for the "big team" in a school boasting fifteen football elevens, with almost every student a player.

The coach asked "Marchy" to he'd ask his parents. They objected strenuously.

There was one member of the family who didn't object. She was "Granny" Clark, white-haired and Irish. She knew that "Marchy" had been pampered and that she had helped to "spoil" him. She loved the school at Bay St. Louis and she believed that "Marchy" should be permitted to play football.

Edward Schwartz, the boy's father, insisted that he never wanted to know when a game was being played and never wanted to see "Marchy" play, but "Granny" Clark, with her Irish determination and Irish wit finally obtained the consent of Marchmont's parents.

The great halfback's record is now a matter of football history. He starred for St. Stanislaus. "I don't deserve any credit for him," says former Coach Commagere. "He was a natural athlete, and I just coached him. The thing that pleases me most is not his football as much as the fact that I have seen him grow into a fine, clean young man, and I realize the part that football has played in making him just that."

Leaving St. Stanislaus, "Marchy" came to New Orleans for one year at Loyola of the South. Then he went to Notre Dame. The sporting pages have told of his feats. His father and mother have sat in massive stadia to cheer him.

"Granny" Clark reads about her all-American grandson in the sporting pages, but she expects to get more information in the letter she knows he wrote her Saturday after the University of Southern California game.

"Granny" is a good sport.

BARELY BEATEN

Notre Dame hasn't beaten Army by more than one touchdown in eight years and this year the margin was only a single point.

BRUIN QUINTET RATED STRONG

L.A.A.C. Team Plays Trojan and Tiger Fives

Basketball will take its place as the premier current sport this week with three important preseason games on the schedule for local fans. U. C. L. A.'s 1930 edition in basketball, hailed as the strongest team ever to play for the Westwood university, and the Los Angeles Athletic Club quintet will meet in the feature game of the week on Saturday night, thus officially opening the cage season at the Olympic Auditorium.

Tomorrow night will see the Mercury quintet playing the University of Southern California team at the Trojan pavilion, and inasmuch as Coach Sam Barry's collegians lost to a not over-strong Hollywood Athletic Club team last week by a 29-to-26 score, the L.A.A.C. is favored to win. The club team will play the Occidental Tigers on Tuesday night at Eagle Rock, and should win hands down.

Coach Caddy Works of U.C.L.A. will send his men against the Hollywood Athletic Club on Wednesday night at the club in the third important game of the week. The Hollywood Mercuries have a fair club featuring the work of Sammy Balter, former captain and running guard for the Bruins, and "Chuck" Kearney, veteran cager.

The U.C.L.A.-L.A.A.C. game on Saturday night is rated as something of a toss-up with the college team getting any edge available. The club team boasts such stars as "Rags" Wilcox, player-coach; Charley Hyatt and Tom Pickell, two alleged "all-Americans," and Carl Shy, who was a stellar running guard last year at U.C.L.A. Jimmy De Mers, a Mercury stand-by for several years, is playing standing guard.

ARMY AND NAVY ELEVENS POLITE

line as he went streaking down the field to beat out this earnest little committee from Annapolis, but he was a half step too fast for Williams, who plunged at him from the rear and flopped on his face with longing arms. Kirn didn't get close enough even to make the gesture.

Stecker crossed the goal with his brakes on as Williams raised his head and followed with an offended gaze.

Broshous was sent in to kick the goal but failed.

The Army side of the stadium became a tumbling mass of gray as the Cadets let fly an impulsive bellow of triumph and the civilians crowded around the battle yard yipped with no particular heart interest perhaps, for it was not a service crowd, but with usual response to a sudden decision of a hard fight. The game was drawing to a close now and the Navy had no chance, barring some accident which the Army was alert to prevent.

The game was attended by all the remembered ceremony of the Army-Navy rivalry and some new forms devised for the occasion. Always a little more collegiate and informal than the West Point Cadets, the Midshipmen flaunted their symbolic goat along the sidelines in charge of a record detail that dragged the proud Angora by a halter attached to his corkscrew horns. They formed names, mottoes and funny pictures of the goat butting the Army mule in a system of colored cards held aloft in their cheering section and they brushed the welkin over and anon, if not more so, with the ringing challenge of their battle song "Anchors Aweigh." It has been a long time since the "Anchors Aweigh" was last heard sung with the proper authority in New York, although it has been moaned and otherwise desecrated in the night clubs since the crooning tenors of the orchestras discovered it last summer.

MERELY TOLERANT

Patrick Hurley, the Secretary of War, and Charles Francis Adams, the Secretary of the Navy, sat together on terms of tolerance if not friendship as the boys fought their battle and Grover A. Whalen, the promoter of the show, was seen in a state of truce with James J. Walker, the Mayor. Mr. Walker is presenting another football game between the New York Giants, the professionals, and a team of Notre Dame alumni, at the Polo Grounds, for his own Tammany unemployment fund, Sunday, and Mr. Whalen's opera, with its attendance of dudes has been smothering His Honor's piece. Moreover, in the important matter of personal dudes, Mr. Whalen has outscored Mr. Walker by a large plurality.

Altogether, a pleasant, polite and comfortable afternoon was enjoyed by the 60,000 customers and the poor are $600,000 richer in consequence.

ARMY-NAVY CONTEST HEARD AROUND WORLD

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. (AP)—Navy men in almost every one of the seven seas groaned in unison today as Ray Stecker, Army back, shook himself loose for his 57-yard run.

The game, through an arrangement with the National Broadcasting Company, was broadcast to every navy post and ship. A special wire ran from the field to the Navy Department here, where it was rebroadcast over the Atlantic Ocean and to San Francisco. San Francisco sent it to Honolulu and over the Pacific and Honolulu broadcast it to Manila, where it was sent to ships in Asiatic waters.

Navy communications said reports reaching them were that the relays were clear and speedy. "Too good when Stecker got loose," one cablegram said.

Alexander of Georgia Tech Rates Alabama Strongest Eleven South Has Produced

GEORGE DYE SAYS TIDE COMPOSED OF BEHEMOTHS

Ex-Trojan Center Claims Tackles Weigh More Than 230 Pounds; Wade's Record Brilliant

BY BRAVEN DYER

"Wallace Wade will bring to Pasadena the most powerful team Alabama ever produced. The present eleven is probably stronger than any ever turned out in the South."

Such is the verdict of Bill Alexander, Georgia Tech mentor, who was here for a few hours last week. "Alex" coached the Golden Tornado which blew into Pasadena two years ago and wrecked California, 8 to 7.

GEORGE DYE

"Alabama's line is one of tremendous strength and power," continued Alexander.

"Is the backfield better than the Hubert-Brown-Gillis combination which defeated Washington?"

"Yes it is, in that the players work together better. They have played great ball all year and have been free from injuries. While there is no Johnny Mack Brown on the present team, the co-ordination is a thing of power and beauty."

DYE TELLS OF TIDE

Eager to get the lowdown on Wade's eleven the writer buttonholed George Dye the other day and the former Trojan center was a veritable fountain of information. George played center and tackle at Alabama in 1927, came to Los Angeles the following season and after a year of ineligibility as a transfer, became one of the bulwarks of last year's Trojan line. He played with many of the present Alabama team as a freshman at Tuscaloosa in 1926.

Speaking with that easy, southern drawl so characteristic of Dixie residents George allowed that Washington State would run into a lot of trouble at Pasadena New Year's Day.

"Freddie Sington and "Foots" Clement are probably the two largest tackles in captivity," said George. "Why I weighed 230 pounds as a freshman at Alabama and both of these men are bigger than that. Sington will weigh all of 240, despite what the programs say about his 215 pounds. Clement won't weigh a pound under 235. He is a regular man-mountain. Wears No. 14 shoes and has a hand like a ham. He wears such a large ring on his little finger that you can shove a 25-cent piece through it and that's no baloney."

"Sington is a Phi Beta Kappa student, gets his nickname "Big Train" from his prowess as a baseball pitcher, and is the home-run king of Alabama's Southern Conference championship baseball team. It might be whispered that he plays the saxophone in the college orchestra. He hails from Birmingham, Ala.

Clement has a special shoe built for football. Naturally, the boys call him 'Foots,' or 'Big Dogs.' He has a 230-pound brother in the freshman class, and it is also natural that the boys call him 'Little Dogs.' Clement comes from Rover, Ark., and his mates claim it is twenty-five miles from a railroad, but 'Foots' swears it is only nine miles. He played prep football in the Razor Back State before coming to Alabama.

SIDE BY SIDE

"These two chaps stand well over six feet in height and they play side by side on most of Alabama's offensive formations. If you don't think they pack a punch you're balmy.

"Suther, weighing 190 pounds if he weighs an ounce, is one of the hardest running backs in football. As a high school player6 he was the star of the Tuscaloosa team, which ran up more points than any other Alabama prep team in history. He is much on the order of Eray Pinckert.

"I'll wager that Alabama's line will average more than 200 pounds from end to end and that's a lot of meat. Everybody on the line but the ends will weigh 200 or better and the ends won't be small men by a long shot.

"Wallace Wade goes on the theory that if your opponents can't score on you they can't beat you. He builds his defense first and then goes after offensive strength. The present team has been scored on only twice this year and passes did that."

You may assume from the foregoing that Dye thinks rather highly of the Alabama bunch. You're right. George knows what he's talking about, and when he says Sington and Clements are behemoths of exceptional avoirdupois you can bank on it. Sington has been picked on more all-Americans than any other tackle in the country this year.

Southern teams are noted for their fight. With Wade coaching his final Alabama game at the Rose Bowl, you can bank on it that his players will battle their heads off. Somebody asked Alexander the other night why it was that southern teams always fought as if they were doing the Civil War all over. "They don't," replied Alexander. "If they did we'd need only five men to your eleven."

GOING TO DUKE

Wade has been at Alabama since 1923, and goes to Duke University next fall. He was an assistant at Vanderbilt under Dan McGugin before going to Alabama. During his first year Wade lost two games, one to Syracuse and another to Florida. The next season the Crimson Tide won the Southern Conference championship, losing only a nonconference game to Centre. Conference titles were won again in 1925 and 1926 and it was following the 1925 triumph that Wade brought his team to Pasadena and scored a sensational 20-to-19 victory over Washington in what was probably the most thrilling Rose Bowl game of history. The following year the Tide returned, and held Stanford to a 7-to-7 score, this Stanford team being one of the strongest Coast elevens of all time.

Wade's material fell off in 1927, 1928 and 1929 and his teams did not enjoy the success of former years. Back-biting alumni started to work and Wade told them they could have the job, signing with Duke at a substantial increase in salary.

Frank Thomas, assistant to Henry Mehre at Georgia, will replace Wade next fall, and in all probability install the Notre Dame system at Alabama, which means that the next time the Tide comes to the Coast a beef will have disappeared to some extent and Alabama may truthfully be "the thin red line" of old.

CLEAN-UP MAY BE MADE SOON

Board of Inquiry Conducts Searching Quiz

BY FRANK ROCHE

Boxing is in for a housecleaning. That much is evident even to the most casual fan who has watched the game fade from a gold mine to a gold brick in the last two years in Southern California and elsewhere in the State. But the sure sign that the game is going to be taken to the disinfectant plant is given in the presence here during the past week of the board of inquiry representing the Governor of the State, C. C. Young.

JAMES E. WOODS

This committee, headed by Allan Bixby and composed of the following members: Harry Brand, C. A. Hutson, William Coffman, John A. Sinclair, Leon French and Maj. James McFarland, has been probing the conditions throughout the State for more than a month. They have turned the searchlight full force on the boxing game and some very startling information has been uncovered which is very likely to lead to one of the biggest upheavals in the history of the sport in this State.

For some time, according to Allan Bixby, the press of the State has been demanding an investigation into the situation, and on top of the cries from that quarter came a demand from the grand jury in San Francisco to clean up.

The inquiry was given further zest when Frankie Campbell was killed during a contest with Max Baer. This was only an incident, however, Bixby insists. The investigation was already planned when that happened.

During their sessions in San Francisco and Sacramento, which were held first, the committee learned a number of sensational things concerning fixed fights, crooked managers, shady promoters and other leeches who hang around boxing pavilions and training quarters.

Coming to Southern California the board was well fortified with information. In short order they obtained some very startling testimony. Commissioner James Woods of the southern district, Jack Doyle, dean of promoters, and other leaders in the boxing game here, voluntarily appeared before the board and gave them all the possible information at their disposal.

The testimony of one witness was particularly interesting at the sessions here, inasmuch as he had names, dates and other data for almost three years back concerning slimy dealings around the fight racket.

The board of inquiry plans to make a full report of its findings to the Governor's office. In this report are expected to be names of more than 100 men who it is evident the fight game can get along very well without for all time.

Leon French is representing the Attorney-General in the inquiry.

Chairman Bixby, when asked as to what is expected as the result of the investigation, stated: "To use the words of one of our witnesses, the boxing game is very sick at the present time, we are going to try to restore it to health again if possible. However, I do not know at this time just what action will be taken in the matter. We will have to wait for that after we file our report."

PERFECT FISHING CONDITIONS PREVAIL

OCEAN PARK, Dec. 13. — Capt. Max Watt announced here today that perfect winter fishing conditions were prevailing off his pig barge Billings anchored two and a half miles off the coast of Ocean Park. Bonita, sand dabs and occasional mackerel are being hooked by local anglers.

UTAH'S STELLAR CENTER

Here's Marvin Jonas, great pivot man for the powerful Utah eleven. He plays in the Coliseum one week from Saturday against the Notre Dame all-stars. Jonas has been all-Rocky Mountain center for three years running. He weighs 175 pounds.

ALL-STAR CARD IS MAT FINALE

Daro Will Stage Last Show of Year on 22nd Inst.

An all-star card is being scheduled by Promoter Lou Daro with which to close the wrestling year at the Olympic the night of the 22nd inst. The next mat show will be held on a Monday instead of a Wednesday night.

Nick Lutze may be one of the feature eventers on this card. It stated yesterday that Daro would give the popular young lifeguard one of the biggest bouts he has ever had here if he could line up the opponent he was seeking for him.

Henri De Glane, Greco-Roman wrestling champion, who has held both Everett Marshall and Ed (Strangler) Lewis to draws here, is being spoken of as being in line for the proposed bout.

Until Don George won the world's wrestling title from Gus Sonnenberg here last week, Lutze was being considered for a return match with the youngster who toppled the former Dartmouth football star. The first match between George and Lutze ended when Lutze went over the top rope of the ring and fell down the steps leading from the dressing-rooms to the ring.

Sonnenberg himself is still in Southern California, resting. The injury he suffered to his shoulder is not as bad as it was first believed, and he is expected to be in condition to wrestle again in the near future.

George's victory over Sonnenberg was regarded as the biggest upset in wrestling history in several years. It was even more sensational than Sonnenberg's victory over Ed (Strangler) Lewis in Boston, January 4, 1929. Sonnenberg had scored a fall on Lewis in their first match, and was injured as he was trying for the second fall and the title.

Charity Game on Tap Today

SAN PEDRO, Dec. 13. — Two of the strongest independent elevens on the Pacific Coast—Benny Lom's San Francisco All-Stars and Manuel Laraneta's Longshoremen—come to grips at Trona Field, Point Fermin, tomorrow at 2 p.m. in a charity grid titanic that promises to play before a capacity throng of 15,000 fans.

Ignoring the 27-21 victory scored by Lom's eleven over the Blue Tide a month ago, harbor district followers have made the Longshoremen an even-stephen choice. Small odds favoring Laraneta's Cargo Hookers are to be found on some of the marts, although Lom's team, with seven former University of California stars in the first eleven, has a highly impressive record in the bay region.

CAL CHRISTIAN FIVE WINS

The Cal Christian basketball squad defeated the Los Angeles Olympics, 42 to 26, last night. Griffith was the high-point man of the game.

SHERMAN INDIANS WIN

RIVERSIDE, Dec. 13. (AP)—The Sherman Institute defeated the Phoenix Indians, 7 to 6, in the redmen's annual football classic here today.

SACRAMENTO JAYSEES TRIM PACIFIC, 20-0

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 13. (AP)—After three periods of scoreless football, the Sacramento Junior College Panthers turned two breaks into three touchdowns to defeat the College of the Pacific, 20 to 0, here today. The game, played for Sacramento and Stockton charitable agencies, was witnessed by about 13,000 persons, including Governor-elect James Rolph, Jr.

After a deadlocked first quarter, Sacramento showed a superior offense in the second period, but lacked the punch to score. The tide turned in the last minute of the third quarter when Sacramento got the ball on the Pacific 35-yard line. Fullback Bican scored the first touchdown.

It was Bican again who made the second score, falling on a loose ball behind the Pacific goal line when his team-mates blocked Hamilton's punt. Schweska, substitute fullback, scored the third touchdown in the closing minutes of the game, after Sacramento ran wild through the weakened Pacific team.

SAVOLDI TO PLAY HERE

Coming With Notre Dame All-Stars for Charity Game in Coliseum Week From Saturday

At the risk of thrusting his hairless and unprotected head into a horde of homing hornets, Knute K. Rockne, the Bald Eagle of Notre Dame, recently went on record regarding the abilities of Jumping Joe Savoldi as a fullback. In fact, K. K. went further; he named the Bounding One as the greatest fullback who ever took orders from him.

For one reason and another, Rockne gets along very pleasantly with the folks at Notre Dame, but even he is due for trouble when he starts using the term 'greatest' to modify "fullback." You may depend on it that some of the alumni will write the Bald Eagle a letter or two about that.

JOE SAVOLDI.

Savoldi is coming to Los Angeles with the all-Notre Dame team that will oppose a West-South machine in the Coliseum on the 27th inst., at the behest of the Los Angeles Elks Lodge No. 99. And if Joe should happen to have an off, or even awful day, the Notre Dame alumni of this community will chorus, "Well, Rock may be a good coach, but he's a rotten picker of 'greatest fullbacks."

Joe Savoldi got his start up the ladder in a little town in Michigan. Joe used to carry bricks and mortar up the ladder to Papa Savoldi, who was up on the second, or even the third story, building a building. After a year or so of this, Joe, instead of collapsing, began to expand. He expanded and expanded, chest, legs, shoulders and neck. When he was 12 years of age, the Chamber of Commerce in the little town where he lived glanced his way, and straight off changed the name of the place from Placid Center to Three Oaks, by which it is still known.

UNSUNG HERO

We next find our hero in a freshman football jersey at Notre Dame, where it was little suspected that he was anybody's hero. Like many a freshman at college, nobody knew he was there and you can still find professors at Notre Dame to testify that Joe was among those who didn't know it.

It was not until the football season of 1929 when Joe began to bull his way, chest, legs, shoulders and neck, through football teams, that he broke into any other papers than the "Three Oaks Breeze." He was still expanding, along with his reputation. But it was in the Irish-Carnegie Tech battle, which Joe saved by pounding the ball to the yard-line and then diving over, that he made the grade.

"JUMPING JOE"

Somebody, with a flair for alliteration, dubbed him "Jumping Joe" Savoldi and all any athlete needs to make the right-hand column on the first page is a good, catchy nickname.

Joe was well embarked on a new chapter of history-making in the 1930 season when a certain grave event caused him to leave college.

He had grabbed the opening kick-off in the Notre Dame-Southern Methodist game, score 20-to-14, and rambled down the field for some ninety-eight yards to a touchdown. They said he carried half the Methodist team on his back in that classic, which is not so improbable when you have seen Joe's back.

Then came the Notre Dame-Pennsylvania game, which, like one or two others, was doped to be close—before it started. Rockne let Joe alone for ten or twelve minutes and he managed to scrape through for three touchdowns.

In naming Savoldi his greatest fullback, Rockne picked Joe ahead of Elmer Layden, one of the main cogs in the famous Four Horsemen. Layden, more than any one man, was given credit for defeating Stanford here in the Rose Bowl game in 1925. Los Angeles fans thought they were watching a good fullback that day, but now Rockne tells us we haven't seen anything yet.

And while this brain-tangling study in comparisons is proceeding, we can ponder this: If Savoldi was good enough to keep Mooch Mullins on the bench, and Mullins was a better fullback than Bucky O'Connor, and O'Connor was able to run wild against Southern California, how good is Savoldi?

Perhaps this is the reason that Rockne, who normally shows about as much change of expression as the facade of the Flatiron Building, is reported to have gulped once and blinked twice when the news of Savoldi's premature departure from the halls of Notre Dame became known.

At any rate, Savoldi will make a local appearance on the 27th inst., and if he's as good as Rockne claims, he will be worth the price of a ducat without further discussion.

CASANOVA KAYOES CHIEF WHITEHORSE

Sandy Casanova, Mexican battler, knocked out big 300-pound Chief Whitehorse, Indian fighter, in the fourth round of the main event at last night's fight program at the Main-street Athletic Club. Casanova took all four rounds, knocking out the Indian Chief with a short uppercut.

Nish Kerkorian, promising boxer, won a six-round decision from Jack Charvez in the semi-wind-up. Tony Cadena won a six-round decision from Arcadio Nebres and Manuel Vasquez won four rounds of hard fighting from Al Cruise.

PIERCE CAGERS WIN

The A. E. Pierce Company basketball team of San Francisco defeated the E. F. Hutton team of Los Angeles last night in a stock exchange ploy-off, 31 to 30.

VARNER, TORRES HEAD HOLLYWOOD FIGHT CARD

Claude Varner, bantamweight who made Newsboy Brown extend himself to win over him, fights Sid Torres, Filipino, in the main event Friday night at the Hollywood American Legion stadium. Varner is getting a main event which will be his first at the stadium. Torres is an aggressive boy who has fought the best in California. He may find the going too tough, as Claude Varner is a great puncher.

In the semi-wind-up Young Sport fights Jimmy Mack. The boys are bantamweights and look like they might be in the new crop of main-eventers which will have to bring the fight game back to life. Sport beat Canto Robleto at Pasadena a few weeks ago. Mack dropped a close decision to Ernie at Hollywood recently. This fight should give the main event a run for honors.

Other fights on the bill are Augie Curtis and Pepi Sanchez, bantamweights, in the special. Curtis is under the management of Willie Rooney, who expects to make him a champion. Rooney is devoting his time to developing Curtis.

The four-rounders will be Freddie Hawkins and Joe Soldivar, lightweights, in the second spot, and Midget Wiswell and Eddie Lloyd in the curtain raiser.

Baby Joe Gans Returns for Olympic Battle

Babe Anderson Will Clash With Black Boxer

Forty Rounds of Boxing on Doyle's Bout Card

BY KAY OWE

Baby Joe Gans—idol of Central avenue and reputed to be one of the best welterweights in the country—comes back to the Olympic Tuesday night. He has been away over a year.

BABY JOE GANS.

The Negro star's opponent will be Babe Anderson, the hard hitting 147-pounder from San Jose. Anderson showed at the Olympic on the Young Thompson-Joe Cordova card several months ago. He knocked Leo Hernandes out in a round.

The Olympic announces a holiday scale of cheaper prices and also boosts the card to forty rounds.

Anderson gained popularity in the north when he stopped Oakland Jimmy Duffy and became feared for his kayo punch. He was bested in a ten-round bout at Hollywood by Benny Miller when the local Jewish boy was "hot."

RATED HIGH

Gans is now attached to the Kid Chocolate stable in New York. The East gives Gans a high rating among the welterweights.

He has had nineteen fights since he last appeared in the Olympic and met defeat but once. By coincidence that was to another Los Angeles boxer, Jackie Fields.

Some of the eastern fighters Baby Joe has whipped are Young Ketchell, Eddie (Kid) Wagner, Jackie Brady, Joe Reno, Ham Jenkins and Sammy Baker.

In a second fight with Baker a few months ago the Sergeant was taken to a hospital where it was feared he had suffered concussion of the brain. It later developed to be only a temporary injury.

Gans came to the fore as a lightweight here about the same time Jack Thompson was on his way to the welterweight title. Now Thompson appears to be receding after losing the championship to Tommy Freeman, while Gans is better than ever, it is claimed.

While Gans and Thompson campaigned in the East, the last six months have seen another young Negro, Sammy Jackson, rise to the top.

Strange to say Gans can't even remember Jackson and yet here in California young Sammy is believed by many to be good enough to whip either Thompson or Baby Joe.

SINGTON RATES ALL BIG TEAMS

Miller in the line-up, any of whom could be included in an all-American line-up.

Alabama nosed out Washington, 20 to 19, the following year with Johnny Brown and "Pooley" Hubert in the line-up, both of whom had received all-American honors. The Crimson Tide made its second trip to the Pacific Coast for the January 1, 1926, game, and held Washington to a 7-7 draw, with "Wu" Winslett in the backfield and Freddy Pickhard at tackle, both of whom were all-American candidates.

Pittsburgh lost to Stanford, 7 to 6, the following year with "Gibby" Welch doing most of the ball packing, and in the following game, Georgia Tech brought Peter Pund, center, and "Stumpy" Thomason, fullback, to nose out California, 8 to 7, when Roy Reigels made his famous reverse run.

Pittsburgh returned the first of the present year and had such stars as Joe Donchess, end; Ray Montgomery, guard; Toby Uansa, halfback, and Tom Parkinson, fullback, but all of these couldn't hold the Trojans in their record-breaking 27-14 victory.

Sington, unlike most of the foregoing, is an outstanding player. He is recognized as the outstanding linesman of the South today, and one of the greatest forward-wall players ever developed in that section of the country. In addition, his scholarship has brought him Phi Beta Kappa, which is the highest scholastic honor which can be accorded to an undergraduate. He stands 6 feet 2 inches, and weighs 215 pounds. He ought to be a great rival for Glen Edwards, the Cougar tackle, who has received considerable all-American notice this year.

Hollywood to Meet Rambler Riders Today

Practicing for its game next month with the strong Chicago polo four, the Hollywood polo quartet will clash with the Rambler team today at 2:15 on the Hollywood Polo and Hunt Club field.

According to W. C. Du Brock the playing field is being completely reconditioned and a half-mile race track is to be installed in the near future. It was also made known that riding exhibitions would be staged during the chukkers by the Du Brock Riding Academy.

JEWFISH ANGLING ON UPWARD GRADE

HERMOSA BEACH, Dec. 13. — With two or more jewfish strikes being reported daily by Capt. J. M. Anderson, skipper of the big Olympic fishing barge, anchored two miles off shore, the jewfish or black sea bass season is on the upward grade. Last week Harry Smith of Los Angeles had a 400-pounder hooked for more than an hour, but the big fellow broke away when the line wrapped around the anchor chain.

down hook, line and sinker on the Trojans has been far less than that fired in by jubilant Irish rooters who rightfully take keen delight in pointing out how badly the palpitating public was led astray by one-time pigskin experts of the daily press.

Of course, now that we have all had time to reflect on the matter for several days it becomes evident that there was never any reason for assuming that Southern California could defeat the Irish. We all know that now, which is the knowledge that comes through experience.

But if ever there was a ballup in favor of any football team such a situation existed prior to the game last Saturday. You had the Trojans victorious over both California and Stanford for the first time in history. You had this team running up 115 points in 115 minutes against its two major opponents, a feat rarely heard of in football. You had Duffield and Musick followed by Mohler and Shaver and until the Irish came along with their hard-charging line this combination looked pretty formidable. You had that smashing win over Washington and the knowledge that Howard Jones's offense was the best he had ever shown on the Coast. And you had Southern California's 47-to-14 victory over Pitt last year, a team which was claiming joint ownership with Notre Dame of the national title. Adding to these points apparently in Troy's favor was Notre Dame's close call against the Army and the knowledge that Northwestern gave the Irish no end of trouble for 53 minutes. On top of this Rockne lost Savoldi and then Mullins. If that isn't a great build-up for making a team the favorite then Napoleon and Josephine were just a couple of platonic pals.

On the other side, favoring Notre Dame, you had Rockne; poor, old, ailing Knute, the sobbing Scandinavian who shuddered and quaked every time he even thought about bringing his boys to the Pacific Coast. From now on we know that Rockne is all the reason needed for making the Irish favorites. But in addition to "Rock" there was the knowledge that Notre Dame had won eighteen straight games. How all of us local writers ignored the time-honored axiom of sports, "String with the champion until he's defeated," is beyond me. Probably had our noses to close to the pigskin.

There was also the Washington State game to figure against the Trojans, but that took place two months prior to the Notre Dame romp and by this time there had been some evidence that the Trojans had improved.

When a team wins it's "our" team; belongs to the public, the community and all that. When the team loses it belongs only to the coach. But in this case the team still seems to belong to the university while, from the general vein of epistles received, the sports writers belong in the bughouse, crazy cottage, goofy garage or whatever you want to call it.

ROGERS LEADS ROVERS IN POLO CLASH TOD

Will Rogers's rough-riding Rovers tackle Lionel Pedley's Pirates on the Uplifters' polo field this afternoon in the feature polo match for the week. Rogers, who rides with an abandon gained from a lifetime in the saddle and who swings a mean mallet, will captain his team from the No. 3 berth. At various times in the past we have seen the famous comedian perform at No. 1 and No. 2 as well as at back, but this is the first time he has ever tried the pivot No. 3 position, but being by nature a versatile sort of fellow it is expected that he will turn in a creditable performance. Another member of the Rogers family, Will, Jr., the 13-year-old high-school "chip off the old block," will ride at No. 2 in front of his illustrious dad. Winslow Felix, mounted on probably the handiest string of ponies at the club, will play No. 1 for Rogers's team, with John Brandeis rounding out the quartet at back.

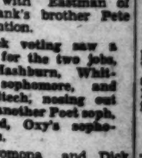
"Battling Bill" Shuler, son of the militant minister, was the lone candidate to receive seven votes. Shuler is in his second year at Caltech and played a bang-up game at tackle for Pop Stanton's championship crew.



HANK BEIDEN.

Hank Beiden, Redlands' great pass receiver, was next in line, grabbing of six votes, three of them being for quarterback, while the other three placed him at one of the halfback positions. Even at that Beiden received more ballots for the signal-calling job than any other candidate, the closest being Stoney Johnston, who pulled down two votes.

SNEDDEN LEADS

Dave Snedden, Occidental's captain-elect, was given five ballots for the other tackle position. Snedden was the only player to get five votes, while three others, Crawford, Caltech end; Mashburn, Whittier halfback, and Dilley, San Diego fullback, received four votes apiece.

The voting was very scattered, thirty-nine players being mentioned in the balloting; guards were the most plentiful, with nine being mentioned. Eight ends drew attention, while the good work of Snedden and Shuler rather overshadowed the other tackles, only two, Cox of San Diego and Hanson of Pomona, having been mentioned.

Hayes and Crawford of the championship Caltech eleven were the outstanding ends in the conference, with Crawford being the better of the two.

Allen of San Diego and Bell of Redlands were next in line, with other good wingmen being Wykoff, Pomona sophomore; Adams of La Verne, and the two Occidental ends, Meeks and Green.

Jack Schurch, the Tigers' versatile lineman, and Nicholaus of La Verne led a long list of guards. Four Whittier players received mention at this position. This was due undoubtedly to Chief Newman's stuffing his linemen around from game to game. Gibbs, the Poets' star soph; Daugherty, Jones and Dietrich were the quartet drawing attention.

BAKER HAS EDGE

Baker, the Whittier captain, received two votes for center and two more for guard, which warranted him a place on the first eleven.

Jerry Chappell, Oxy captain, nosed out Berry of Pomona for second-string honors, while Anger of Redlands and Robinson of San Diego were also given consideration.

Hank Beiden, Redlands' great pass receiver, was head and shoulders above the rest of the quarters in the conference. Stoney Johnston of Oxy was next, with Eastman of Caltech and Hank's brother Pete also getting mention.

The halfback voting saw a wild scramble for the two jobs, with Merle Mashburn, Whittier's great sophomore, and Dicky of Caltech; nosing out Bill Krueger, another Poet soph, and Tuffy Reed, Oxy's sophomore sensation.

Putnam of Pomona and Dick Glover were also given consideration. Glover started the season like a whirlwind and after games with Mexico and Whittier, was tied with Johnny Kitzmiller of Oregon State for Coast scoring honors.

BY IRVING ECKHOFF

With one unanimous selection, the all-Southern California eleven for 1930 was compiled yesterday from individual votes chosen by each one of the seven conference football coaches.

"Bill" Shuler, son of the football coach, was the lone candidate to receive seven votes. Shuler was the only player to get five votes, while three others, Crawford of Caltech end; Mashburn, Whittier halfback, and Dilley, San Diego fullback, received four votes apiece.

The voting was very scattered, no-vote players being mentioned in the balloting; guards were the most plentiful, with nine being named. Eight ends drew attention, while the good work of Snedden and Shuler rather overshadowed the other tackles, only one of San Diego and Hanson of Pomona, having been mentioned.

Hayes and Crawford of the consistently Caltech eleven won the outstanding ends in the consensus, with Crawford being the belter of the two.

Allen of San Diego and Bell of Redlands were next in line, with the good wingmen being Wyhoff, Pomona sophomore; Adams of La Verne, and the two Occidental halfbacks, Hicks and Green.

Johnston of Occidental, the Tigers' versatile fullback, and Nicholaus of La Verne led a long list of guards. The Whittier players received mention in this position. This was due undoubtedly to Chief Newman's shifting his linemen around from game to game. Gibbs, the Poets' regular guard, Dougherty, Jones and Beachler were the quartet drawing honors.

BAKER HAS EDGE

Baker, the Whittier captain, received two votes for center and two votes for guard, which warranted a place on the first eleven.

Jerry Chappell, Oxy captain, and Berry of Pomona for outstanding honors, while Anderson of Redlands and Robinson of San Diego were also given consideration.

Both Bolden, Redlands' great pass thrower, was second and shoulders above the rest of the quarters in the balloting. Stacy Johnston of Occidental was next, with Eastman of Caltech and Hank's brother Pete getting mention.

The halfback voting saw a real scramble for the two jobs, with Hank Mashburn, Whittier's great sophomore, and Bobby Hall, Oxy's sophomore star, sharing honors.

Captain of Pomona and Dick Hall also given considerable support, started the season as a substitute and after games with Redlands and Whittier, was tied with Johnny Kitzmiller of Oregon for Coast scoring honors.

However, Glover was bottled up for the rest of the season, failing to add much to his total of some 80 odd digits.

Dilley of San Diego barely nosed out Watson of the Engineers for fullback honors, the ballots being four to three in favor of the Aztec line plunger.

KELLEY KAR AND GIANT NINES MIX

Schupp, Ballou Will Hurl Against Colored Outfit in Twin Bill Today

BY BOB RAY

Presenting their strongest line-up of the Winter League season, Fred Haney's Kelley Kars are confident that they'll be able to stop the sensational winning streak of the Philadelphia Royal Giants in today's double-header at Wrigley Field.

Haney has switched his line-up around in an effort to obtain more punch and believes he now has a combination that will topple the colored outfit, something which hasn't been done in the Giants' last eight games.

The Kelley Kar skipper will himself play shortstop today, with Jigger Stats being brought in from center field to hold down third base, a position which he held down creditably for the Angels during the latter part of the Coast League season. Art Parker at second and Cedric Durst, Boston Red Sox star, form the right side of the inner defense. In the outfield will be a trio of heavy swatsmiths led by Walloping Wally Berger, the Boston Brave Bambino. Fred Berger, Wally's younger brother, will be in center field, with Wes Schulmerich, the 215-pound slugger who reports to the Braves next spring, out in right field.

Ferdie Schupp, former New York Giant southpaw, and Win Ballou, Angel curve-ball pitcher, will be the starting hurlers, with Johnny Basler and Dick Cox behind the plate.

Winter baseball followers acclaim the Giants as the greatest colored team to perform here in the last twelve years. The Giants have just about everything that goes to make a ball club. They have five good pitchers, a marvelous catcher in Mackey, a spectacular keystone combination in Wells and Allen, a wallop in their batting order and a smart bunch of base-runners. On top of this they have plenty of pepper and are great crowd-pleasers.

If you haven't seen the Giants play this year come on out to Wrigley Field and watch them in action. The first game starts at 1:30 o'clock. Ladies are admitted free to all Winter League contests.

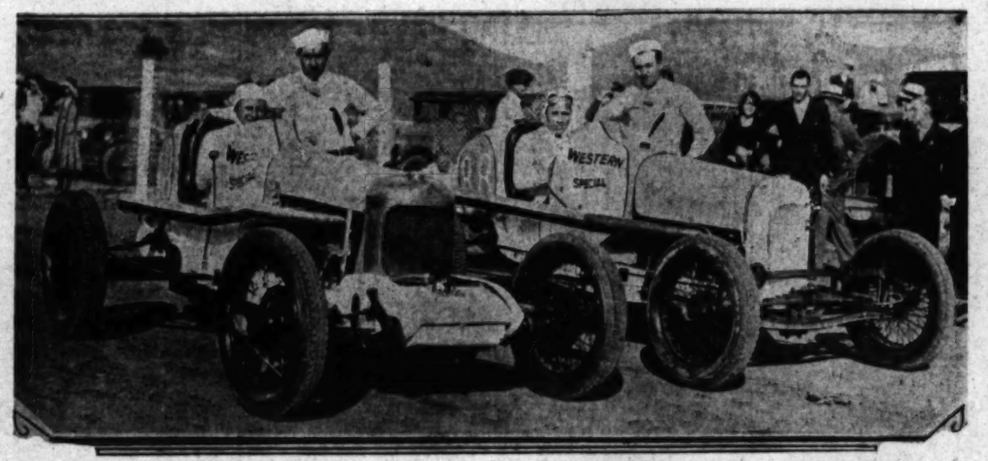
TWO MEN WHO'LL BE IN A HURRY AT ASCOT

Introducing the well-known racing team of Winn and Schurch, who will be among those going to the post for the 100-lap sweepstakes at the Legion, Ascot Speedway this afternoon. Winn, an eastern star, is in the No. 49 on the left. The car is the property of Schurch, a Hollywood boy, who is shown at the wheel of No. 88.



CANTLON PICKED TO WIN

"Underslung" Detroit Pilot Favored in 100-Lap Race Today at Ascot Speedway

William (Shorty) Cantlon, Michigan's pee-wee racing sensation, will head a list of fourteen speed kings at the Legion Speedway this afternoon in competition for prize money in a 100-lap grind. The "underslung" Detroit pilot, who ranks as the youngest "veteran" in the game as a result of ten years spent on the speedways, was the whole show last Sunday afternoon and he is picked to bring his Miller home to first money this afternoon.

Cantlon had a great season in the East this year but when he arrived in Los Angeles as the Crown Prince of racing, he was beset with a string of hard luck. His No. 16 didn't ramble as it did last winter and in several races he failed to finish in the money.

Last Sunday the Miller was clicking perfectly and "Shorty" drove one of his typical races. He got in front in the first lap and was never headed thereafter. He increased his lead as he went along, and when the finish line was reached he was more than a lap ahead of Francis Quinn.

Although only 26 years of age, "Shorty" has driven practically every board, brick and dirt oval in the country. He started manipulating a roaring mount at the age of 16.

Cantlon's performance of a little more than fifty minutes for the century has caused an upheaval in the racing game. This afternoon the other drivers undoubtedly will have their own mounts traveling faster than ever before.

Francis Quinn, the Pacific Southwest champion, will make his appearance as a teammate of Walt May this afternoon. Quinn, who drives No. 3, has turned over his No. 8 Miller to May. The pair undoubtedly constitute one of the fastest teams ever seen at Ascot.

A second team is the Herman-Schurch-Billy Winn combination. Recent arrivals from the eastern circuits, Schurch and Winn have had trouble getting accustomed to the track. However, they should qualify fast enough for the 100-lap grind this afternoon.

Among the others who should be up there facing Starter Fred Wagner's flag for the century journey are Lou Moore in 35, Arvel Brummier in No. 48, Ernie Triplett in No. 40, Bill Cummings in No. 19, "Stubby" Stubblefield in No. 7, Nick Martino in No. 5 and Sam Hoffman in No. 65.

The two who hit the fence on the south bend last week may receive their thrills on the sidelines today. Wilbur Shaw is nursing a cracked rib while Lester Spangler has an injured hand.

The qualifying today will start at noon. One of the predictions being made is that some driver will circle the track in less than twenty-eight seconds. The prevailing mark for a non-supercharged car is 28.3—held by Walt May.

Local fans will be offered 122 laps of racing altogether. The program includes the twenty-lap consolation, two-lap Helmet thriller and the ten-lap crowd chaser.

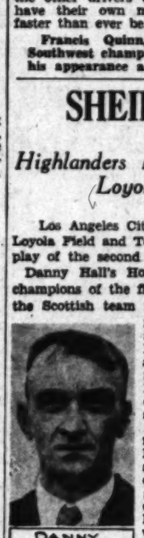
Louis Meyer, 1928 and 1929 national speedway champion, will referee.

SHEIKS BATTLE SCOTS

Highlanders Run Into Soccer Leaders Today at Loyola Field; Mags Play Victorias

Los Angeles City League soccer football clubs swing into action at Loyola Field and Tournament Park this afternoon in the opening day's play of the second round of the split schedule.

Danny Hall's Hollywood Sheiks, champions of the first round, meet the Scottish team in today's banner 3 p.m. game at the Venice Boulevard stadium. Danny Stevenson's Highlanders are coming along at a speedy clip now and their meeting with Holly wood should produce one of the greatest battles of the month of December. It was the Scots who turned in one of the prize upsets of the current campaign when they defeated the Los Angeles A. C. Mercuries, 2 to 1, at Tournament Park last Sunday.



Hollywood, only losing out, 1 to 0, in the last half. The Vics also won last week, nosing out the Sons of St. George, 4 to 3, in a hectic battle at Tournament Park. Today's game between these two foes should be productive of some mighty good football, giving fans an excellent double-header to witness at Loyola Field, the home of Los Angeles soccer.

Two more games will be played at Tournament Park this afternoon. The 3 p.m. game will pit the Vikings against the Sons of St. George. The Norsemen finished in a tie for fourth place in the first round and are now determined to win all their games in the second round and give Hollywood a battle for the championship. The Sons always play good football and figure to battle the Vikings to a finish today.

The Crown City opening game brings into play the Richfield eleven against the fast-stepping Pasadena A.C.C. crew. Richfield was the surprise team of the first round of games, finishing with 7 points. Pasadena has a young, fast team which is a threat in any company.

DE LA CRUZ DEFEATED

MANILA, Dec. 13. (AP)—Rough Dumaguilas of Manila decisively defeated Angel de la Cruz of Manila tonight in a twelve-round fight in which Cruz was knocked down four times. Dumaguilas weighed 121, and Cruz, 122.

EARL SHEELY BATS .403 TO TOP COAST HITTERS; SCHULMERICH IS SECOND

Earl Sheely, leading batter of the Pacific Coast League in 1930, was one of the few players in organized baseball to finish with an average above .400. Official figures released yesterday from the office of President Harry A. Williams show the demon slugger of the San Francisco Seals to have amassed an average of .403. Sheely played in 183 games, was at bat 718 times and connected for 289 safe hits. He was the leading manufacturer of safe hits and also topped the runs-batted-in column with 180. Sheely came within four points of reaching the all-time high batting average for the league established by Ike Boone of the Mission Reds in 1929. He is the fifth Coast League player to bat .400 for a complete stason.

Wes Schulmerich, Los Angeles outfielder, who trailed Sheely in batting for many weeks, finished in second place with a mark of .380. Ernie Lombardi of Oakland was third with .378. Henry Severeid and Johnny Baseley of the Hollywood squad were fourth and fifth with averages of .367 and .365. The statistics present the unusual situation of three catchers being listed among the first five swatsmiths.

Frank Crosetti, brilliant San Francisco shortstop, proved the leading run scorer of the circuit crossing the plate to tally 171 times. Schulmerich was second in runs scored with 162.

Dutch Holland's two-base hit total of seventy-two is the best in five seasons and only three under the league record set up by Paul Waner in 1925.

Jess Hill topped the league in triples with thirteen, the fewest for a leader in this department in many years. Hill's record, however, is quite impressive for he participated in only 115 contests.

Dave Barbee carried off the home run honors with forty-one. Ed Dittmar had forty-seven sacrifice hits. Fred Haney pilfered fifty-two bases, to lead in this department for two successive seasons, something no other player in this league has ever done.

The official figures follow:

Midwinter Golf Schedule Starts Friday With Pasadena $4000 Open Tournament

FAMOUS PROFESSIONALS HERE FOR MONEY EVENTS

Crown City Officials Seek Large Amateur Entry; New Ball Makes Bow in Southern California

BY EDWARD LAWRENCE

Slightly delayed in transit, but finally here as big as life, Southern California's midwinter open tournament season gets off to a flying start Friday, Saturday and Sunday over the Brookside municipal course with the third annual Pasadena $4000 open.

Assured of an outstanding field, including the two winners of past Pasadena opens, Horton Smith and Craig Wood; Tommy Armour, national P.G.A. champion; Leo Diegel, winner of the Oregon and San Francisco opens, and at least a score of famous professionals nominated for the American Ryder Cup team.

Eighteen holes of medal play are scheduled for Friday at which time the field will be cut to the low 100 and ties; the field will again be cut after the second eighteen holes on Saturday, low sixty and ties playing the final thirty-six holes on Sunday.

AMATEURS SOUGHT

A. K. Bourne, prominent Pasadena sportsman, sponsors the tournament, which is directed by the Pasadena Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Max Turner, chairman of the tournament committee, has spent a great deal of energy preparing for the tournament and expects a banner event. With the leading pros lined up, Max is concentrating on a large amateur entry, and announced last night that amateurs with handicaps of 2 and under are eligible to enter. Johnny Dawson of Chicago, winner of the recent A. K. Bourne gold ball at Pasadena, is planning to play along with Fay Coleman, Southern California amateur champion.

That much cussed and discussed new ball, which becomes official for tournament play on January 1, next, will have its preview at Pasadena. The old ball is barred and real golf fans will have an opportunity to judge the larger pill under actual playing conditions. Opinions vary as to the desirability of the new ball, a number of the professionals looking on it with decided disfavor.

Horton Smith, winner of the 1929 Pasadena open by a margin of six strokes with a brilliant total of 280, played over the municipal links the other day and was pleased with the condition of the course. Horton is just under the weather, having recently undergone an operation in which he lost his tonsils.

Southern California professionals expect to cut into the purse money again this year. Otto Dutra of Brentwood, who was one of the big winners a year ago, will be pressed by Fred Morrison, Mortie Dutra of Virginia, Willie Hunter of Montebello Park and others.

THE TEN PER CENT

With the decision of the National Professional Golfers' Association to assist from attempts to finance the tournament bureau by collecting 10 per cent of the purses put up for open tournaments, it looks like Bob Harlow will once more be able to get the bureau through smooth waters.

We spent a very pleasant evening with Bob the other night and thrashed out the whole business. Harlow agrees that the 10 per cent method of obtaining finances was ill advised, but is confident that there is a place for the bureau, which will continue to function despite the rumors to the contrary. There is no doubt but that the bureau can be of considerable assistance to communities staging open money tournaments, providing it keeps its place and does not attempt to become dictorial.

A method of paying the expenses of the bureau has not yet been decided upon, but the professionals themselves will probably carry the burden if the money cannot be obtained otherwise. At the present time the bureau is running on funds turned over to the P.G.A. by Hal Sherbey a year ago.

STRONG SCHEDULE

Harlow at the present time is in communication with some fifty cities throughout the country and expects next year to have tournaments throughout the Rocky Mountain district, the Pacific Northwest, Southern California and the South without a break.

Despite the withdrawal of Long Beach, Glendale and Catalina for this year's schedule the array of tournaments is stronger than a year ago. Harlow pointed out that beginning with the Santa Monica $5000 amateur-pro tournament the last week in January, the pros will have a steady schedule through January, February and March with the money for the winter season amounting to approximately $120,000.

There are one or two weak spots, but these will be filled in with the Motion Picture open here the week of January 18, and the possibility of a $5000 open at New Orleans during the Mardi Gras.

Practically all of the leading professionals will be in Southern California this winter.

Of the five players definitely selected for the Ryder Cup team, Walter Hagen, Leo Diegel and Horton Smith are already here. Gene Sarazen, winner of the 1929 Agua Caliente $25,000 open, returned to New York on business following the San Francisco open, but will be back for the Los Angeles $10,000 open. Johnny Farrell is the only one not sure of coming out. Johnny is not in the best of health and realizes that he cannot play competitive golf the year around and do himself justice. He is resting at Lake Placid at the present time, and writes Harlow that he will be out, providing he is playing good golf. Otherwise he will teach in Florida during the winter.

STARS HERE

Of the professionals nominated for the team, Al Espinosa, Al Watrous, Johnny Golden, Joe Turnesa, Olin Dutra, Craig Wood and Frank Walsh will all be on hand.

Denny Shute, winner of the 1929 Los Angeles open, has failed to answer any letters and it is not known whether he will be here.

Only a few outstanding players have definitely decided against playing in Southern California. Billy Burke has a position at Bel-Air and will not make the trip, and MacDonald Smith has not indicated whether he will be out. Mac will no doubt show in for the Los Angeles open, however, as he won the tournament at Wilshire in 1928.

Among the other stars who have indicated that they will play at Pasadena are Joe Kirkwood, Charley Lacey, George Von Elm, Harold Long, Johnny Rogers, Lew Waldron, Harold Long, Ralph Guldahl, Larry Nabholtz, Wiffy Cox and a number of others.

Following is the complete list of winter tournaments released yesterday by Harlow:

PRO SWEEPSTAKES PLANNED TODAY ON PASADENA LINKS

Visiting professionals holding P.G.A. cards are invited to play in the Pacific Southwest P.G.A. sweepstakes today over the Pasadena municipal course at Brookside Park. A number of prominent eastern professionals are expected to take advantage of the invitation to get in a practice round for the Pasadena $4000 open, which starts Friday. Ernest Martin is chairman of the event.

CAMPING ON THE GOLDEN TRAIL ONCE MORE

Here are six of the nation's foremost professionals who will play through Southern California's 1930-31 midwinter open tournament schedule, starting with the Pasadena $4000 open this week. Al Espinosa, Al Watrous and and Johnny Golden have been nominated for the United States Ryder Cup team, while the lower trio, Horton Smith, Leo Diegel and Capt. Walter Hagen have already been named, along with Gene Sarazen and Johnny Farrell, for the team. Horton will be out to win his second Pasadena open tournament. He trimmed a fine field by six strokes a year ago, scoring a winning 280 for the seventy-two-hole grind. Diegel, after losing out in the national P.G.A. championship, has started off the winter schedule with victories in the Oregon open and San Francisco match play championship. Pasadena expects a fine field of amateurs in addition to the pros for its tournament, which starts Friday and winds up Sunday.

FOURSOME PLAY IN FINAL ROUND

Match Play Event Ends at Los Angeles Today

Eddie Meyberg and Miss Barbara Barthelmi of Hillcrest fact Jack Gaines and Mrs. G. K. Thompson of Oakmont in the finals of the mixed foursome match-play tournament over the north course of the Los Angeles Country Club today.

The match appears to be a toss-up, as both teams have played splendid golf during the tournament.

In the second flight finals Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Rhoades meet Frank Deliot and Mrs. Paul Hill; third flight finalists are Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Martin and Dr. and Mrs. R. A. Speicher.

MOSS RETAINS TITLE AT MOUNTAIN MEADOWS

George Moss successfully defended his Mountain Meadows Country Club championship recently when he defeated Jack Bowen, 2 and 1, in the thirty-six-hole finals. Both players turned in fine cards, Moss carding 76 and 78, respectively, against 75 and 74 for Bowen.

In the first flight W. S. Caypless defeated H. P. Eastman, 2 and 1, in a thrilling fifty-four-hole match.

Barrier to Be Sprung Christmas

AGUA CALIENTE (Baja California, Mex.) Dec. 13.—The gates of the Agua Caliente Jockey Club will open on Christmas Day for the second winter meeting of the beautiful $2,000,000 plant for an eighty-two-day session of the "sport of Kings." Interspersed in between the inaugural meeting and the coming one was a very successful meet that opened on the Fourth of July and closed on Labor Day. Racing as usual will be held daily except Mondays.

EXHIBITION MATCHES ON TAP AT PASADENA

Two nationally prominent tennis stars and two other star racketwielders who are famed in this vicinity will present a singles and doubles exhibition this afternoon on the Huntington Hotel courts under the direction of Stanton P. Welsh, director of sports at the hotel. Henry Ellsworth Vines, Jr., Pacific-Southwest singles and mixed doubles champion, from Pasadena, will meet Cliff Johnson, local luminary, in the first exhibition at 2:30 this afternoon. The other singles duel will feature Frankie Parker, national indoor and outdoor doubles champion for boys, versus Jess Millman. The doubles exhibition will bring Vines and Parker against Johnson and Millman.

TENNIS TOURNEY PLANNED

Dates Arranged for First Annual Midwinter Court Championships

The stage is set for Southern California's first annual midwinter tennis championships, the 22nd to 28th inst., at Palomar Tennis Club. Sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce at Los Angeles, the event takes its place on the winter sports program either staged or sponsored by this group of young business and professional men.

Although there has been doubt in the minds of some followers of tennis as to the practicability of another outstanding tennis tournament in Southern California, indications are that the south will and can support a midwinter tournament. Bert McKee, director of the junior body and chairman in charge, has made public the fact that 75 per cent of the boxes for sale for the event have already been sold. The boxes have not yet been put on the market for the general public.

Entries are indicative of a fine field. Sidney Wood and Ellsworth Vines, two of America's most promising young net stars, are among the first to forward their entries to Bill Ackerman, referee. Listed with these two are Lester Stoefen, the local youth who defeated both Johnny Doeg and Ellsworth Vines in competition this year. Dolf Muehleisen, Bob Muench, Jack Tidball, Keith Gledhill, Helen Marlowe, Dorothy Weisel, Gladys Patz, Dorothy Workman, Caroline Babcock, Dorothy Robinson, Violet Doeg, Esther Bartosh and others are already entered.

The courts at Palomar are being resurfaced for the affair and boxes and stands installed. This tournament takes its place among the important sports events being held in Southern California during the winter months. It is the purpose of the Junior Chamber to stage or sponsor outstanding sports events throughout the year in this section. Many of its major events are scheduled during the winter months, as its Los Angeles open golf tournament, national midwinter sailing races, winter sports carnival, etc.

Reservations for the championship matches may be made at the offices of the Junior Chamber, Bert McKee has announced.

MANY ENTRIES FOR L.A. OPEN

Thirty-five Amateurs and Pros on List

English Star, Horton Smith Among Players

Brilliant Entry Expected for Annual Event

Entries for the sixth annual Los Angeles open golf tournament now total thirty-five, according to announcement made yesterday by Clifford Rawson, secretary-manager of the Junior Chamber of Commerce. Entries received the last two days include John De Forest, four-handicap player of Addington Country Club, London, Eng.; Jimmy Thompson, Broadmoor, Colo.; Craig Wood, T. H. Ballin, local amateur; Thomas Davis, Horton Smith, Charles Lacey, British professional; Joe Kirkwood, Tommy Armour and Frank Walsh.

The early list of entries is one larger than that of a year ago which would seem to dispute the statement of certain followers of golf that open play is on the decline. Qualifying will be on January 7, over several courses to be designated later, according to Emerson Spear, chairman of the technical committee of the tournament and official starter. Dunsie Pyle of Wilshire Country Club will serve as assistant to Spear, it was announced yesterday.

The Wilshire Country Club course is now in excellent condition. President J. A. Crawford and Willie Welsh, professional, claim that it is in better shape now than any time the past year. It was last in 1928 that the Los Angeles open was held over this course, it being the only one, excluding Riviera, that has twice been awarded the event.

Word received from the East to the effect that Johnny Farrell will play through the event, barring the unforseen, is made public. Reports low, in receipt of a letter from Gene Sarazen, states that the big Italian will in all probability be in the Los Angeles tournament.

The entries of Lacey and De Forest, both English golfers, furnish a foreign flavor to the event. Both participated in the 1929 event. Entries to date follow:

Allen Baker, unattached, Los Angeles; Chet Best, Riviera; Ernest Bowden, Chester Country Club, Chester, Pa.; Ben Brown, Hollywood School of Golf, Hollywood; George Barton, Los Angeles Country Club, Chester, Pa.; Ben Brown, Palos Verdes; Ian De Forest, Addington Country Club, London, Eng.; Ed Brian, New York; Glen Dolph, Los Angeles; Ed Dudley, Los Angeles Country Club, Chester, Pa.; Jimmy Demaret, Del Monte; Chet Chase, Los Angeles Country Club, Chester, Pa.; Jimmy Demaret, Del Monte; Chet Chase, Golf Club, Culver City; Charles Lacey, Chase Golf Club, Chester, Pa.; Ralph Guldahl, unattached, Los Angeles; Ralph Guldahl, unattached, Los Angeles; Ralph Guldahl, unattached, Los Angeles; Reno Country Club, Reno, Nev.; Nunnally, unattached, Los Angeles; Ernest Sweet, unattached, Los Angeles; Ernest Sweet, unattached, Los Angeles; Willie Hunter, Bryn Mawr Country Club, Bryn Mawr, Pa.; Willie Hunter, Montebello Park, Los Angeles; Otto Dutra, Brentwood Country Club, Brentwood; Mortie Dutra, Brentwood Country Club, Brentwood; Jimmy Hines, Riviera Country Club, Los Angeles; Dan Barron, Dan Barron, Inc., Chicago; Ed Dudley, Los Angeles Country Club, Chester, Pa.; Jimmy Thompson, Broadmoor, Colo.; Craig Wood, T. H. Ballin, local amateur; Thomas Davis, Horton Smith, Charles Lacey, British professional; Joe Kirkwood, Tommy Armour and Frank Walsh.

MAKING OUTDOOR STICK MODEL

Chance Yours to Win Pilot Rating by First Building Craft Designed by Air-league Member

BY ELWOOD V. CHANDLEE
Los Angeles Playground and Recreation Department

This interesting model was designed by Howard Evans, who is a member of the Gyrfalcon Squadron, The Times-Playground Aircraft League's advanced group.

Howard has shown his ability to design and perfect a model that is envied by all his friends. This model now holds the Pacific Coast record of five minutes and twenty-three seconds, which is some record. This model also is a consistant flyer, having done three minutes on several occasions. In view of the fact that this model is such an exceptional flyer, we are offering it as a test model.

The first requirement on your pilot card calls for an outdoor-stick model, and with a little study of the drawings you should have no trouble in passing your test as soon as you have completed this model.

THE FUSELAGE

First make the fuselage. You will need two pieces of balsa 1-4x5-16x31 inches long. Each piece should be sanded to an oval shape. After this done you will be ready to start assembling.

Next draw a line three feet long on your work table. This line will represent the center of the fuselage. The rear end of the fuselage is ten inches wide and that means five inches out from the center line. Remember this width is at the trailing edge of the auxiliary wing and not at the shaft hangers.

After you have marked the location of the main spars then cement the trailing edge of the auxiliary wing in place. This edge is made from balsa 1-8x1-4x10 inches long.

Next refer to Fig. 8. Here you have the drawing of the rib. There are seven of these ribs in the complete assembly.

When you have cut out each rib, glue them to the trailing edge. Be sure you are working on a flat surface so that each rib will be in line.

To complete this assembly cement a piece of balsa 1-8x1-8 inch to the front of the wing. This is the leading edge. This wing is now complete and all that remains is to cover it. The covering is minosilk tissue.

At the front end of the fuselage is a small rubber clip, and in Fig. 10 you are shown how to form it. All wire fittings are made from No. 12 piano wire.

As soon as you have formed this clip then slip it on to the nose and cement it. While the cement is drying wrap this joint with fine silk thread. Then when you have completely wrapped the joint, recement it and allow it to dry.

The two "X" braces are made from split bamboo 1-16x1-8 inch. They are cut to proper length and then cemented to the main spars.

The "cans," which help to guide the rubber, are made next. There are six of these, three on each side. In Fig. 12 and 13 you are clearly shown how to make them.

Figs. 14 and 15 show the shaft hanger. These hangers are 1 1-4 inches long and are made from 1-16x3-32 inch brass. These hangers are the same as you have used on your previous test models.

Be sure and wrap each hanger to the main spar.

THE MAIN WING

Fig. 1 shows the layout for the wing. You will note that this wing is thirty inches long and has a width of 5 1-8 inches.

There is nothing radical in the construction of this wing as it is built in the same manner as the models you have built in the past.

Fig. 7 shows the wing curve and it is because of this curve that Howard got so many fine flights. He has worked on this curve, making changes from time to time, until he has perfected it as an excellent curve for models of this type.

Be sure you copy it carefully as you will want to duplicate his performance.

There are eleven of these ribs in the complete assembly. Each rib is three inches apart.

The trailing edge is balsa 1-8x1-4x 30 inches long. You will note that this edge is not planed to a "V" shape. The lower side comes up past the center line and the top side is but a continuation of the top curve. The main spar is 1-8x1-4x30 inches, balsa. Each rib is notched out to fit this spar. The leading edge is 1-8x1-8x30 inches, balsa, notched into the nose of the rib.

There is a 1 1-4 inch dihedral in the wing and by cutting part way through the spar, trailing and leading edges you may get the desired angle. A small quantity of glue is all you need to complete the dihedral.

Fig 2 shows the dihedal of the main wing. The covering is another important item. Be sure you get it on neatly and also make sure that the paper sticks to the under side of the rib. You will lose the efficiency of the wing curve if it fails to do so.

Next make the stabiliser, or forward wing, as it should really be called.

This wing (see Figs. 3 and 4) is thirteen inches long at the trailing edge and twelve inches long at the leading edge. It is two and one-half inches wide.

There are only two spars in this assembly and that is the leading and trailing edges.

The leading edge is 1-8x1-8 inch balsa and the other is 1-8x3-16 inch balsa. Fig. No. 6 shows the wing curve.

There are seven ribs in the complete wing and the method of assembling and covering is just the same as the other two wings.

The dihedral is one inch, so for its size it has a great deal more angle than the main wing.

THE PROPELLERS

Fig. 17 shows the top view of the propeller and Fig. 18 shows the side view. These propellers are made from medium balsa 1x1 1/4x10 inches long. Lay out both blanks just as they are shown in the drawing, but do not carve each one the same.

One propeller turns to the left and the other turns to the right and you must carve them accordingly.

Do not put the shaft in like you did on your previous test models, as this model is a pusher and not a tractor. Refer to Fig. 16 for the proper installation of this shaft. When you have formed it up then press it into the hub and cement it.

Fig. 11 is the forward rubber hook. You will need two of these, one for each rubber motor and they are important because if you did not have them it would be impossible to use a winder.

Fig. 9 shows you what the model looks like when finish. This model is not hard to adjust and you should not have any trouble in passing your test, which is only twenty seconds.

It is great to know that you have a model that will easily fly for three minutes. Just think of all the sport you can have watching it fly over the tree tops and sail around just like a big one!

THE PUZZLE COLUMN

—1—

In the winter scene below there are a number of articles which begin with the letter S. How many of them can you find? There are at least fourteen.

—2—

And how many different words can you form from the letters in WINTER? Rearrange them any way you like, but each letter can be used only once in one word. There are thirty words in our answer—can you make that many?

—3—

Remove the middle letter from a part of a flower and get to ring. Remove the middle letter from a dervish and get beautiful.

—4—

Each of the following queer-looking words is an article of clothing worn in winter, but the letters have been jumbled up. Can you straighten them out?

1. VACOROTE
2. FELFRUM
3. SEOSHOAL
4. BOSULE

THE KITCHENETTE

GERMAN POTATO SALAD

Four cupfuls cooked potatoes.
One teaspoonful salt.
On-eighth teaspoonful pepper.
Two slices bacon.
One teaspoonful celery seed.
One tablespoonful water.
Two tablespoonful vinegar.
Flour to thicken.

Boil potatoes, peel and slice while warm. Sprinkle with celery seed, salt, pepper and a bit of finely chopped parsley and onion. Dice the bacon, fry until brown, and add to the potatoes. Make a sauce of the water and vinegar and enough flour to thicken, and bring to the boiling point. Pour over the potatoes and mix thoroughly. This may be served hot or cold.

BOTTLES

By Dorothy Dertina, West Hollywood

In ancient times bottles were made of skins, and in many parts of Asia and in Southern Europe such primitive vessels are still in use. The chief disadvantage of skin bottles lay in the fact of their affecting and being affected by their contents. The same objection applied to metal bottles, and it was not until glass was utilized that a bottle was obtained which did in no way affect the contents.

In making a glass bottle the operator takes a mass of molten glass from the smelting furnace. This is placed on the end of a hollow metal tube through which air is blown, either from the lungs of the workman or by machinery. When blown out into a pear-shaped hollow, the glass is placed in a red hot mold, the size and shape of the bottle required. The blowing is continued until the glass is forced by pressure of the air into all parts of the mold. It is then cooled and removed, the neck and mouth being worked to the desired size and smoothed by special tools.

SNOOPY IN DO-DO LAND

The rabbit, looking down at the green valley with its green sun and ticking Ampis, felt none too sure of himself. He turned to his companion, who sparkled bright as diamonds, asking her:

"What do you make of this strange sight?"

The Guardian of the Woods shook her bright little head, telling him she was greatly puzzled. Undoubtedly the emerald valley beneath them was filled to the top of its humpy ridges with friends of the Ampi Waumpus.

"But," objected Snoop, "my dear old friend called to me from your cottage, then, when I stepped over your sill, he disappeared. Who are these two-tailed creatures? How did they get here, and what do they want? Do you realize we are dropping closer and closer to them?"

As the last words left his lips, the sparkling creature before him lost some of her brilliant light. It dwindled like a candle in the dark, until she appeared quite drab and gray.

"This is certainly a tragedy," she complained, "the Ampis have a magic of their own that will make me powerless in their kingdom. To make matters worse, they do not like visitors. Dear me, if our house would only stop whirling."

But to their amazement, it beat to and fro so furiously that they found themselves pitching head-first into space, and before they knew it, they were floundering among the Ampis, who each had a tiny pendulum upon its tail. Hundreds of these, wagging at one time, filled the air with a steady roar, so it was with great difficulty they heard the largest of the scaly creatures say:

"You shall be punished for disturbing us. Usually we would take you prisoner, but since you know our old and kindly friend, who met you on the road to Do-Do-Land, we will give you a better fate. Turn about, and walk through this valley. At the end you will find seven trees, with a door in each one of them. They will be hard to find, and harder to leave, once you enter the tunnel that lies before you. But should you fail to discover the knob on these trees, and follow the path that lies before you, sure disaster will overtake you."

Up went Snoop's ears, as he looked curiously at the girl, who no longer appeared lovely and young. Her hair was quite gray, and her cheeks were withered and old. Judging from the sad droop of her lips, she was not enjoying the Ampi's conversation. The rabbit, however, hastened to say:

"We will leave at once, kind friend, but do not be out of patience if we have a hard time finding the knobs in the trees."

Tick went the pendulums on the Ampi Waumpus's tail, as his shiny little eyes glittered like points of fire. "Not out of patience," he answered Snoopy Long-Ears, "just anxious to see you start on your new adventures."

The rabbit smiled carefully behind folded paws. Adventures, thought he—what a suggestion, when he had lived through such dreadful happenings.

The Ampi saw his smile, and continued, "I shall be right behind you," he promised, "so don't lose any time." The rabbit and the Guardian of the Woods exchanged hurried glances, then started running through the long green valley, which had seven gnarled trees at the end of it.

"There you are," chuckled the Ampi, "try the first one, and don't forget to open the door."

Snoop looked at the trees in bewilderment. They were covered with the roughest bark, yet not a crack was visible. Then, suddenly, as he was patting the surface of them, with his fuzzy little paws, the front of one of the trunks gave way, and a long, black tunnel came into view.

"Enter," invited the Ampi, gnashing his pointed teeth, "and when you come back, remember where the door is."

The rabbit, his heart pounding, hopped one or two steps nearer the opening. Then, gathering his courage, leaped inside it. Instantly the bark closed behind him. He was alone, in utter darkness, in such a black and dreary spot, it seemed as though there was no escape from immediate disaster . . .

JUNIOR HONOR ROLL

We had such a wonderful response when we put in our "Aunt Dolly" doll, as our artists are getting better all the time. Virginia Brown of Arcadia and Bernice Owen of Hollywood are our topliners this week. Bernice used pastel shades, which were very effective; Virginia gave her doll pale blue and pinks. Both of these members will receive ten points for being the winners, so who will be the next on our list? Laura is going to have oodles more dolls for you to color, so be sure to watch for them soon! You all have an equal chance to be the winner—so show us what you can do with our next color chart!

Other names on our junior roll follow:

Virginia Brown, Bernice Owen, Corinne Larson, Margaret Terpening, Edith Marion Chase, Lois Strong, Jean McCart, Marion Fowler, Gloria Johnson, Stella Sarfatty, Helen Squires, Elsie Sinclair, Winifred Ratcliff, Clarita Dole, Janice Nesbit, Mary Hutchinson, Florance Colver, Elizabeth Moon, Mary Lou Hare, Dave Drew, Eileen Ball, Ann Marie Norin, Betty Grace Gardner, Wilfrie Schulz, Sheila Lloyd-Butler, Doris Carl, Lucille Carl, Bonnie Jean Cerveny, Harriet Ennis, Betty Blair, Helene Pirie, Virginia Turner, Barbara Hirshfeld, Barbara Leigh Grass, Tracy Harris, Henrietta Lurie, Masami Miyaya, George Natsume, Mary Jane Lynch, Frances Keeley, Mable Fujimoto, Mary Crippen, Ardis Hazel Wainwright, Marion Shannon, Arthur Ketch, Frank Higman, Helen Brown, Clorinde Johnston.

UNIQUE FACTS

BY VERNON MILLER, Vancouver, B.C.

In the year 1883 an island known as Krakatoa was virtually blown to bits by a terrific volcanic outburst. Every trace of animal and vegetable life was extinguished and when it had cooled down it was seen that only bare lava remained.

After forty years tiny lichens and mosses began to grow, and then seeds brought by birds produced plants. When vegetation came, birds and insects did likewise and even four-footed creatures appeared there, how, it is not known unless they swam the sea.

It is definitely resognized, however, that there are 175 species of animals on the island at the present time, and that it is covered with a dense growth of vegetation from end to end.

A racing motorist carries his life in his own two hands. The least bit out of his course and the car will slew broadside on.

At the wonderful pace set up, equally amazing things can happen. For instance, if the driver wanted to turn the least bit, the car would have traveled thirty or forty yards before the thought reaches the nerves of the hands.

A fly or a small piece of stone may quite easily stun a driver during a speed burst.

Sometimes a driver has to put wet sponges over his mouth to keep out the dust, or he would choke, and a car doing 200 miles an hour is no place to start choking!

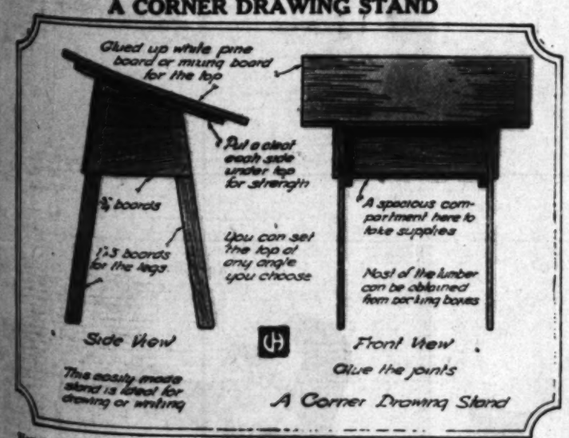
SOMETHING TO DO

A CORNER DRAWING STAND



How would you like a comfortable, spacious drawing stand for the corner of your room, right between those two windows? A stand made largely from scrap lumber with plenty of leg room and a large space below the top to take your supplies? We believe that this is about as nice a stand as you could wish. It can be used equally well for writing or reading and when painted to match your room, will be very attractive.

If possible, begin with an old mixing board. This will probably be about 20 inches wide and 24 inches long. You could buy one of these new and that would insure a dandy job. Or you can get some white pine boards, saw them all to the same length, coat the adjoining edges with best quality liquid glue, and then force them together and lay on a smooth surface for the glue to dry. Later you can plane the edges and sandpaper the top.

With the top on hand, plan the frame whose top is about 8 inches smaller each way than the top proper. Use 1 by 4-inch boards (a 1 by 6-inch board ripped lengthwise will do just as well) for the legs and build one side at a time. To do this, lay two legs upon the floor, spread them as shown, then nail boards on the top for a distance of about 10 inches. Then saw off smoothly and make the other side, using exactly the same angles. Finally saw off the top edges which will give the proper slope to the top. The bottom ends of the legs are also sawed to set evenly upon the floor.

With the two sides done, all you have to do is to nail boards on the back side to connect them, then cut and nail and glue in the bottom as shown. In fact, glue and nails should be used at every joint so there will be no looseness when the glue is dry. And to strengthen the top itself, glue two cleats underneath next to the sides of the frame as shown, especially if narrow boards are used for the top. It will also pay you to put glue blocks under each end of the bottom for greater strength.

The only thing left now to do is the finish. This can be any suitable paint, duco or lacquer, or, if you wish a natural finish, use clear duco. The top, however, need not be painted. If the wood is a little soiled, then sandpaper it well.

Be sure, of course, that the left hand edge of the top is straight, for your T-square will slide along this edge.

You can glue a small wooden cleat to the top near the lower edge to prevent pencils from rolling off.

BOOK REVIEW

"ELIZABETH AND ESSEX"
By Lytton Strachey

Reviewed by Ruth Romerio, age 16 years, Riverside.

An interesting glimpse of the social life of sixteenth-century England is given in this tragic history of Elizabeth and her ardent lover, Robert, Earl of Essex. One senses, however, the glamorous feeling of that glorious age, one of the world's truly "golden" ages.

Some of the greatest characters of that time must of necessity enter the story, for they were part and parcel of the Virgin Queen's life; it was with these that Elizabeth surrounded herself for companionship. Her chief advisors were Lord Burghley and Robert Cecil, while two other constant companions were Walter Raleigh and Bacon.

The author pictures Elizabeth as a shameless shuffler, content to abandon the last shreds, not only of consistency, but of dignity, honor, and common decency, in order to escape the apalling necessity of having, really and truly to make up her mind.

This absorbing biography ends with Elizabeth, after having destroyed the only thing she ever loved, left a passionate, lonely figure, fighting death to the last, only to succumb, helpless and friendless.

CHRISTMAS WITH THE "PRESIDENTS"

James Monroe and Mrs. Monroe entertain President Jefferson and guests at a Christmas dinner at Ash Lawn, in the beginning years of the last century, a scene posed with historical accuracy by students of the University of Virginia. Around the festive board, in addition to the host, who himself is to be elected President fifteen years later, and the hostess, are James and Dolly Madison and Capt. Jack Jouette. Ash Lawn has recently been restored as a national shrine.

THEY CARE!

For the twenty-fourth year, 4,500 Los Angeles children, of all races, colors and creeds, are to be the guests of the Shriners of Al Malaikah Temple in Shrine Civic Auditorium, Tuesday evening, Dec. 23, when Santa Claus will distribute thousands of dollars' worth of presents. James W. Jump (left) has been chairman of the committee since the work started, and Gen. Robert A. Wankowski was Potentate when the work was sanctioned.

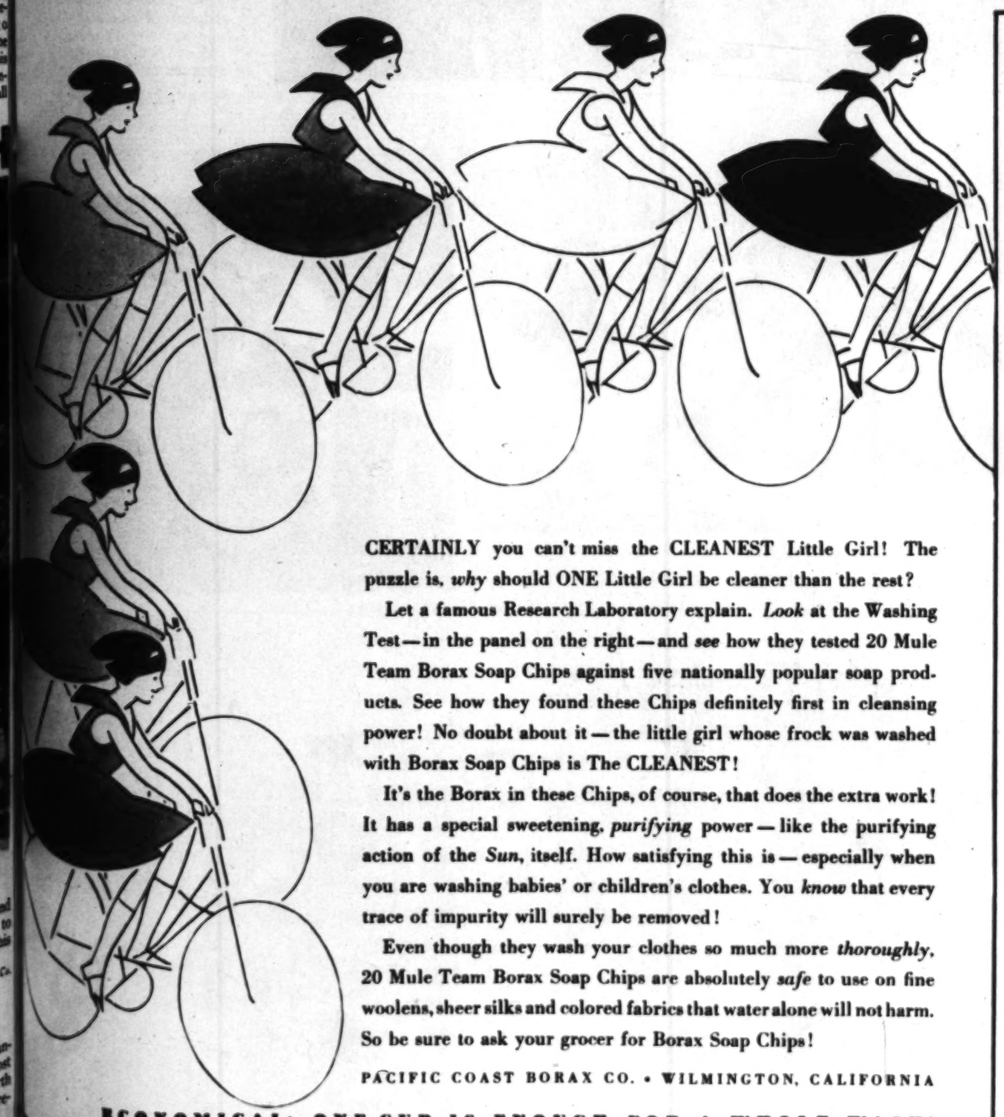
LOOK FOR THE CLEANEST LITTLE GIRL!



CERTAINLY you can't miss the CLEANEST Little Girl! The puzzle is, why should ONE Little Girl be cleaner than the rest?

Let a famous Research Laboratory explain. Look at the Washing Test—in the panel on the right—and see how they tested 20 Mule Team Borax Soap Chips against five nationally popular soap products. See how they found these Chips definitely first in cleansing power! No doubt about it—the little girl whose frock was washed with Borax Soap Chips is The CLEANEST!

It's the Borax in these Chips, of course, that does the extra work! It has a special sweetening, purifying power—like the purifying action of the Sun, itself. How satisfying this is—especially when you are washing babies' or children's clothes. You know that every trace of impurity will surely be removed!

Even though they wash your clothes so much more thoroughly, 20 Mule Team Borax Soap Chips are absolutely safe to use on fine woolens, sheer silks and colored fabrics that water alone will not harm. So be sure to ask your grocer for Borax Soap Chips!

PACIFIC COAST BORAX CO. • WILMINGTON, CALIFORNIA

ECONOMICAL: ONE CUP IS ENOUGH FOR A WHOLE WASH!

WASHING TEST

made by a nationally known research laboratory*

This cloth was white before it was dipped in a horrible solution of heavy oil, grease and grime. 6 pieces of this dirty cloth were washed by the laboratory. Each piece by a different nationally popular soap product. With the same amount of the soap. For the same time. With the same machine!

RESULTS:

Not so good
Washed by a popular soap product.

Hardly better
Washed by a 2nd popular soap product.

Only a little better
Washed by a 3rd popular soap product.

Better
Washed by a 4th popular soap product.

Still better
Washed by a 5th popular soap product.

BEST OF ALL
Washed by 20 Mule Team Borax Soap Chips!

So it is no wonder, is it, that the report of this famous laboratory ran as follows: "The combined results of this test indicate clearly that 20 Mule Team BORAX SOAP CHIPS possess the best detergent (cleansing) action!"

*Name given on request.

The borax in Borax Soap Chips insures QUICK, LASTING SUDS—even in HARD water. Immersion in these suds, too, is actually beneficial to your hands, because of the "healing" power of borax. One reason why these Chips are valuable for dish-washing as well as all laundry work!

CURRIER & IVES, MODERN SERIES

Beloved of the print collectors, who can get them, are the old Currier & Ives' prints of the winning of the West and other subjects connected with the making of America. Now the old firm has been revived to make a series of modern prints, of which the two shown here are A1 and A2 in the series. No. A1 shows Bobby Jones winning the British open championship. The other pictures the first intercollegiate championship football game in America. Both are reproduced through the courtesy of Currier & Ives, Inc., New York City.

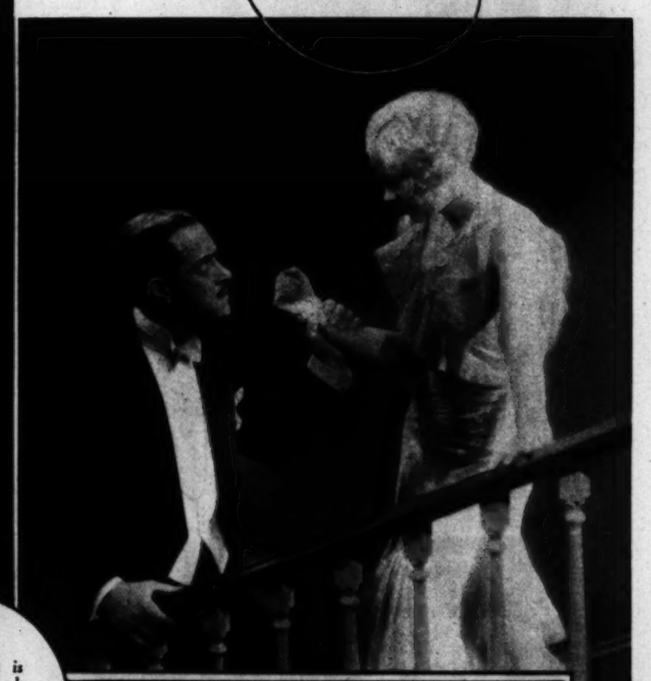
STILL THE ROMANTIC

EVEN though he has completely forsaken the operatic togs in his latest exploit, "The Southerner," Lawrence Tibbett will continue to be the colorful adventurer. Tibbett's new picture, directed by Harry Pollard for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is what its title implies, a story of the South, thus having a familiar and also a modern setting. The star, therefore, will be seen in a role strongly contrasting with "Rogue Song" and "The New Moon," in both of which he appeared in Russian surroundings. In "The Southerner" he will have an opportunity to render music of the negro spiritual type, which is again a variation from either of his previous pictures.



Purnell Pratt is the caddish brother of the hero, married to Miss Ralston.

Again Tibbett is a vagabondish character, as the younger scapegrace son of a well-to-do southern family.

"THE ARCHES"

COMEDIAN DEDICATES HOUSE

Harry Langdon and his wife hold open house for friends at their new Beverly residence.

Music, both vocal and instrumental, lent glamor to an evening at the Harry Langdons. —Photo by Albert.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

"HARK! I hear chimes playing a tune!" exclaimed Stella to Price Dunlavey and me, as we rang Harry Langdon's doorbell. The Langdons have moved into their own home in Beverly Hills, you know, and this was to be their housewarming.

Just then the door was opened by the butler—and the chimes stopped ringing! The Langdons have one of those new-fashioned chime doorbells, which plays a tune as you enter.

"But wouldn't it be awful," remarked Renaud Hoffman, who arrived with his charming wife just then, "if the chimes played 'I Don't Care if You Never Come Back'?"

WE FOUND Cornelius Keefe, Vernon Rickard, Jean Hersholt and his wife and Thelma Todd and Harvey Priester, in the drawing room, which is beautifully done in an English period. After being greeted by Harry Langdon and his wife, the latter radiant in a new white evening frock, we made suggestions about the tunes that those chimes might play. "'Please Go 'Way and Let Me Sleep' wouldn't be so good, either, would it?" inquired Thelma Todd.

"But 'Come and Make Whoopee' would be all right, wouldn't it?" demanded Glenn Tryon, who had just arrived with his attractive wife.

"And, of course, the servant who got away with all Harry's best shirts and ties could play 'Something to Remember You By,'" put in Jean Hersholt.

"I suppose Harvey Priester would like it to play—when Thelma Todd entered ahead of him—'My Future Just Passed,'" Victor Schertzinger, who arrived just then with Mrs. Schertzinger, contributed, after he learned what all the talk was about.

But Helen Langdon sweetly remarked that the chimes would always play for the crowd then assembled, "There's a Light in the Window for You."

DUCI DE KEREKJARTO, the noted violinist, arrived with Helen Morton. Miss Morton, you may recall, owns a little island near Catalina, where she plans to build a yachting club.

Miss Morton told us that Marilyn Miller had been on the train with her, going East—and that the lively Miss Miller had given a treat to each little station through which the train passed by hopping off, clad in her lounging pajamas, and saying hello to the inhabitants.

Hobart Bosworth and his charming wife were among the guests, and there were Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Barker, Mr. and Mrs. Lucien Littlefield, Mrs. Elmer Harris, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Halperin, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Halperin, John Reinhardt, Julian LaFaye, Billy and Ella Wickersham, Reginald Hammerstein, Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt Brewster, Eddie Shubert, George Ullman, Dr. and Mrs. Stuart Nolan, Hasel Hayes, and others.

Reginald Hammerstein, you know, is son of Oscar Hammerstein, and has himself, though a very young man, staged several important New York hits.

Mrs. Langdon's daughters, Virginia and Edith—who have, by the way, taken Harry's name—were assisting their mother in entertaining.

"NO HOUSE like this can be properly dedicated without somebody playing the violin or some musical instrument," remarked Renaud Hoffman.

And just then Mrs. Langdon prevailed upon Duci de Kerekjarto to render a violin number. He has a way of playing even the highest-browed music in a manner that appeals to everybody. Probably all the finest music would be popular if it were rightly presented. And doubtless Kerekjarto learned everything about winning audiences during his long engagement as a vaudeville headliner.

Hasel Hayes, a society girl who is preparing herself for grand opera, sang some numbers beautifully.

Vernon Rickard sang in that excellent voice that you hear over the radio two or three times a week, and which you may have listened, too, also in "Temptations of 1930." Thelma Todd remarked that Vernon was altogether too good looking to be heard and not seen.

Supper was served at little tete-a-tete tables, and there was more music, some dancing and bridge.

"IRMA WARNER and Ona Brown are giving a luncheon at the Embassy in honor of Hope Hampton," Stella told me, "and we're invited."

Hope sang in grand opera here some weeks ago. She had just returned from a visit to Honolulu, and was preparing to leave for New York.

She appeared exquisite in a pale-blue afternoon gown. She said she had adored Honolulu, and had tried surf-board riding with some success.

She looked very slim, declaring she had solved the avoirdupois problem by losing weight in between singing engagements. She said she simply had to eat when she was singing heavy operatic roles, because they are so taxing to one's strength.

SHE told us that Gigli, whom everybody here adored, was a little rascal to work with, as he loved cutting up on the stage, and often whispered nonsensical things under his breath to his prima donna.

She is going on to London and Paris, where she is to sing.

The guests included Leatrice Joy, an old friend of Hope's, Mrs. Charles Rogers, Mrs. Harry Rapf, Mrs. Finis Fox, Paulin Garon, Lillian Asher, Jackie Saunders, Mrs. Joseph Schnitzer and others.

Mrs. Schnitzer, by the way, has, herself, a very fine voice, and was on the concert stage before she married her husband, who, you know, is head of the Radio Pictures Company.

Pauline Garon was wearing a most becoming brown velvet dress, and when we asked her where she bought it, she responded with her elfin smile—"At Mary Pickford's Thrift Shop; it cost $5, formerly belonged to Mary, and is my very best dress!"

We wished Hope much success and a return to the Coast.

Pauline Garon's wit was in evidence at the luncheon given in honor of Hope Hampton. —Photo by Fryer.

★ NORTH STAR
PUREST WOOL
★ BLANKETS

BLANKETS have come very definitely under Style control. The old days, when a blanket was merely a blanket, have passed. Today, blankets are largely chosen for their decorative values in bedroom and boudoir. But whatever the effect desired, the quality of the blanket—the fineness and purity of the wool that goes into it—is a prime consideration, as are also surface beauty, finish, lustre, delicacy and correctness of color. Measured by all these attributes, North Star Blankets are perfect.

The beauty of North Star Blankets has made them ideal decorative accents, just as for nearly seventy years they have been preferred for purest wool and cozy warmth. On Sale in Your Local Store. Or write to North Star Woolen Mill Company, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

A FAMILY Glorified

"THE ROYAL FAMILY"—it achieved notable success as a stage play and on the screen should score with no less effect. Sketching the humorous domestic life of the family Barrymore—the characters could be none other than belonging to this ancient clan, although actual names are purposely omitted in the billing—this adaptation of the popular comedy brings into prominent relief the varied idiosyncrasies and vagaries of the members of the family, particularly Fredric March, who interprets John. March is co-featured with Ina Claire, and in principal supporting roles are Mary Brian, as Miss Claire's daughter, and Henrietta Crosman. Paramount is producing.

The son of the house arrives home after a tour of the world, accompanied by innumerable bags, native servants and a varied assortment of pets.

The Dutch supper episode should evoke gales of laughter.

THERE'S NOT A MAN ALIVE WHO WONT WELCOME SLEEPING COMFORT

Faultless Pajamas, in combinations of material, color, pattern and design to suit every taste, are waiting at the store. . . . Each pair has the famous Nobelt waistband

. . . LUXURY that was unknown before the Nobelt's invention . . . fine materials in the smartest new patterns . . . a guarantee which completely removes the doubt of enduring quality—these are all essential parts of a Christmas gift of Faultless Nobelt Pajamas.

The wearer of Faultless Pajamas forgets knots and bows—slipping and binding. . . . For Faultless Nobelts require only the buttoning of a single button. Then the broad, flat band of live sheet-rubber encased in soft webbing—the Nobelt—maintains perfect fit and perfect comfort permanently.

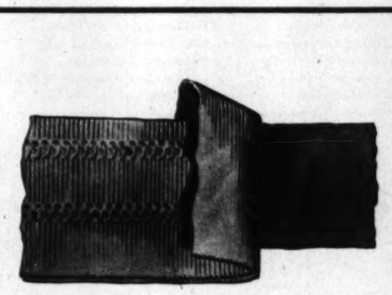
The Faultless Nobelt is so gently resilient that its pressure can scarcely be felt. It breathes with the wearer, yielding with quick, light flexibility to each motion of the body. It is guaranteed never to lose its resilience.

Imitations Must be Avoided

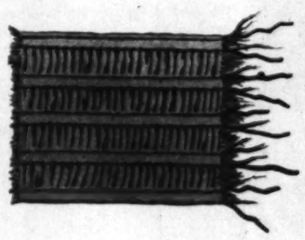
So widespread has been the popularity of the Faultless Nobelt that many imitations have recently appeared. Since the Nobelt is patented, imitators use thread elastic, the inferiority of which is explained by the diagram at the right. To protect yourself against substitution, look for the Nobelt label, which every Faultless Pajama carries on the waistband.

At any leading haberdashers' or men's wear department you can select the Faultless models which best express your individual taste. There is practically no limit to the variety. . . . The time before Christmas is growing short. Visit a men's wear shop tomorrow, and order sleeping comfort for your friends. The Faultless Manufacturing Company, Faultless Square, Baltimore, Md. Los Angeles Sales Office, 720 Haas Building (7th and Broadway); New York City Sales Office, 452 Fifth Avenue (at 40th Street); Chicago Sales Office, 209 South State Street.

The Nobelt feature is covered by a broad guarantee. If your Nobelt waistband should lose its resilience, we will replace the entire garment without formality or delay. A guarantee slip to this effect will be found in every pair of Faultless Nobelt Pajamas.



Construction of the Faultless Nobelt waistband: a broad, flat band of live sheet-rubber, encased in resilient webbing. The sheet-rubber gives equal resilience to the entire band and is under no tension until you put on the garment. This results in the gentle, even pressure that can scarcely be felt by the wearer, and prevents loss of elasticity.



Construction of waistband made from ordinary elastic: note that the only resilience is supplied by a few rubber threads. To supply sufficient tension, these rubber threads must be stretched about 100% when in the waistband, which subjects them to early deterioration, and causes them to press into the flesh, leaving marks upon the skin.

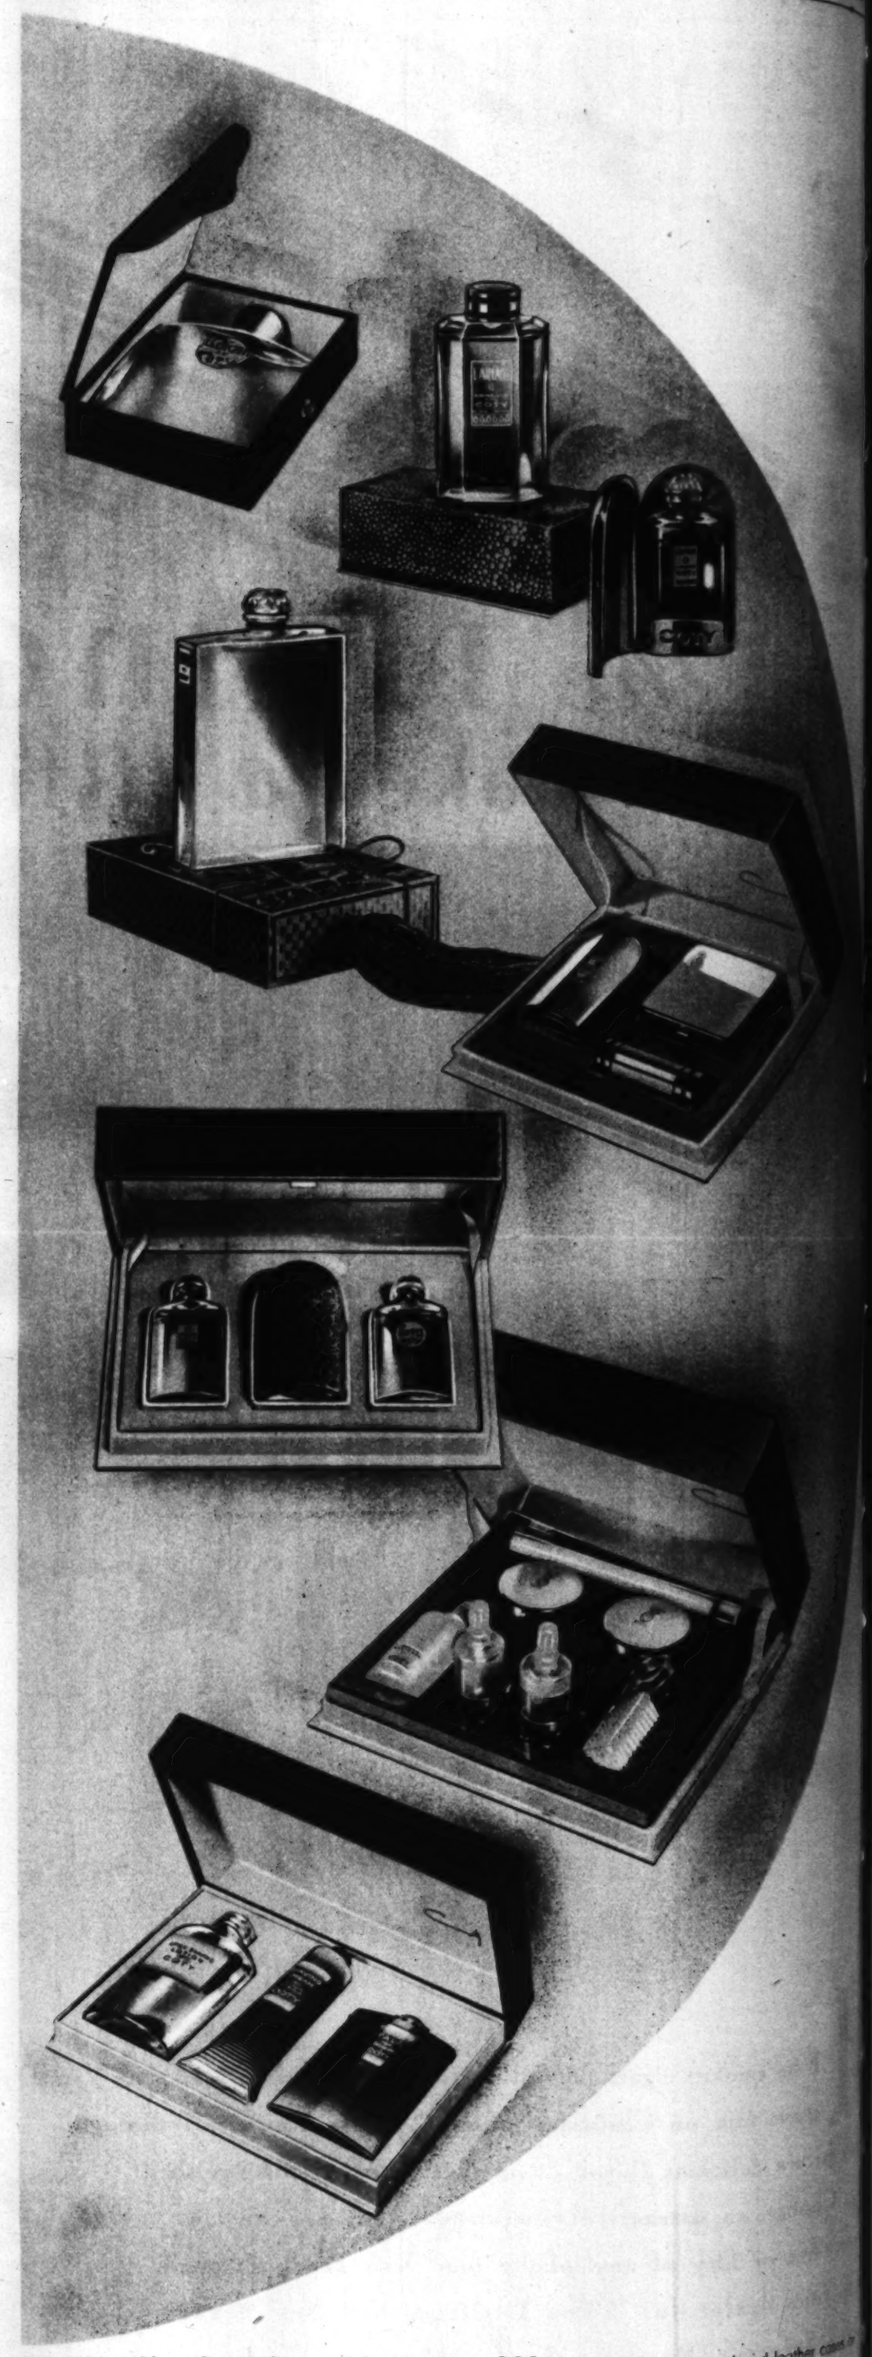
These are Perfumes which women themselves, the world over, prefer to all others—to give them is to give the greatly desired. The aura of luxury, of preciousness, the artistic detail of each flacon and its box or leather case, the matchless glory of the Coty fragrance—together with their exquisite usefulness—make a presentation which reflects perfect taste informed with subtle understanding. And they are not necessarily costly—there are charming "Purse Sizes" for as little as one dollar, or elaborate Ensembles for as much as two hundred and seventy-five dollars—but all of the same supreme quality.

Coty



THE PERFUMES—L'Origan, "Paris„ and the other classic COTY fragrances; in smart colored leather cases or silken tasseled boxes, $6.75 to $7.50; in metal cases, $1.50. L'Aimant, shark skin effect box, $5.00.
THE COFFRETS—Purse Requisites, platinum-tone metal, $5.00. Perfume Ensemble, with metal case, $3.00.
THE PERFUMED MANICURE—Ensemble of Perfumed Manicure Essentials, $5.00. Others, $4.00 and $3.00.
THE MASCULINE GIFT—Shaving Cream, Lotion and Talc, $2.50. Other Men's Sets, $3.50 and $6.00.

Graham McNamee introduces Jack Dempsey to the radio audience.

True Love Stories of Famous People

Graham McNamee

The Radio Romance of a Beautiful Heiress and a Poor Young Singer, Who Tuned in on Station L-O-V-E

By Charles B. Parmer

SUPPOSE a chap with a touch of genius in him met you, hindered your career, put stones in your pathway as you climbed the artistic heights.

Could you tame such a man? Could you make him come to heel, humbly kneeling, begging forgiveness? Is your beauty so gorgeous that he would beg you to marry him? And would you stand by him until he became world-famous?

If so, you're a superwoman.

Josephine Garrett did this. And but for the love she bears this man, today she might be as famous as he. More of that later.

He is Graham McNamee.

If you are one of the hundred million—and you are!—who tune in the radio nightly, you know his personality. The world's greatest radio announcer; a man whose showmanship is so superb that Florenz Ziegfield once became excited—but more of Ziegfeld, too.

This is a strange thing I'm writing: the story of an idyllic love as beautiful as it is rare in a day when public personalities change mates with the nonchalance they would show in lighting cigarettes.

When Josephine was a young girl—and this was only a few years ago—she lived in the quiet dignity of her father's luxurious home in Bronxville.

Know Bronxville? If not, you'll have to undertand a few things about it: Bronxville is one of the aristocratic suburbs of New York City. A place where the broad English a is stressed, where children have tutors, households have butlers—get the idea?

And Josephine, of all things, cast her eyes toward the stage, instead of a trousseau. She would be the greatest soprano of her day. She would be the spiritual child of all glorious heroines of opera.

Josephine turned to say good night, there he was with a boyish grin hanging by the steps, "I'm going to see you all the way home." And he did.

Father Garrett listened, and said nothing. But he resolved many things. No daughter of his for the footlights. He'd let her train her voice a bit; no harm in that. Knowing the ways of the world he knew that before long the right man would come along.

He never dreamed it would be a mere choir singer. For that was all Graham McNamee was in those days. And choir singers—even in the exclusive Dutch Reformed Church in Bronxville, which is where Graham was singing—don't rate much social standing in any aristocratic suburb. Isn't that so?

So Josephine continued to study and sing, and dream a bit. But as for the stage? No! Mr. Garrett was positive.

"But, father, the rector of the Episcopal Church at Mt. Kisco (a near-by suburb) is putting on Gilbert and Sullivan operas for the benefit of his church. I can sing there, can't I?" she asked, one bright summer's day.

Yes, she could sing in church; he didn't mind that.

Truth is, that rector—who has quite an ear for music—had urged her to take the leading role in his coming production of "The Gondoliers." She rushed to him eagerly, saying:

"I'm going to be with you, positive!" No daughter of his for the footlights. presented her to that amateur company with a flourish. Not only did she have a voice of surprising range and timbre and sweetness, but she was what the vulgar would call class.

I say he introduced her to the company. But one member was absent. The leading baritone.

"Who will he be?" Josephine asked.

"Graham McNamee, the choir singer, you know."

Yes, she knew him. He was just another man to her. She had met him once at a Red Cross social. He had made no impression at all.

On the day of that second rehearsal the girl rode into New York City for some music. Her musical godmother—a wise, clever woman of Bronxville—rode with her.

Josephine told her all about her good fortune. "Remember, I'm to be the prima donna," she added, naively.

"Is Graham McNamee in that cast?"

"Why, yes, I think he is. But he's a high baritone—and it's the tenor who sings to me."

"Never mind who sings to you, child, it'll be Graham McNamee that you'll marry."

"What!"

A shrewd, knowing smile swept over the older woman's features. "I feel it in my bones," she said, with a little laugh.

Gifts of Living Green Prolong Christmas Joy

GRACEFUL house plants, ornamental or flowering, are among the most appropriate of gifts—living Christmas remembrances that will constantly delight the recipients and indefinitely prolong the joyous spirit of the season. The following are suggested as especially acceptable in any home—tokens of character and distinction:

Indoor Fountains of Soft, Lacy Foliage

Aptly may thus be described the beautiful Phoenix Roebelenii, those admirable palms from North Burmah with which any or all the rooms in the home can be permanently adorned and made refreshingly livable. They do not require direct sunlight, will grow for years, outlast any ferns and provide refined decorative effects that will be a source of pride, pleasure, charm and cheer. Truly exotic offerings.

Splendid plants, 5-inch pots, $1.50; fine specimens, 7-inch pots, $3.50; extra-choice subjects in 10-inch pots, $7.50

Aspidistras—Rich, Luxuriant Decoratives

Incomparable for combined hardiness, ornate effectiveness and general utility, these handsome plants thrive in hallways or rooms where little light can reach them and nothing else would grow. Their bold, glossy dark-green leafage is exceedingly attractive, harmonious and companionable in any setting. Excellent on a shady porch or in a cool fern border. Increasingly pretty for years.

Select plants, 6-inch pots, $2; elegant specimens in 8-inch pots, $5.

Kentias—Fascinating Home Ornamentals

Kentia Palms take precedence over nearly all the cultivated species for home decoration. They flourish for years in the ordinary living-room, requiring little more attention than judicious watering and occasional repotting. We offer the desirable variety Foresteriana, a strong grower, with rather broad pennae and gracefully-arched and recurved stems. Dainty and showy.

Plants 15-18 inches tall, 4-inch pots suitable for small jardinieres, $1.50: Choice plants in 6-inch pots, 32-36 inches, $3.50.

Elegant Cyclamens to Bloom for Months

The finest strains of Cyclamens extant are embraced in our collection—vigorous giant-flowered types with blossoms of wonderful size and substance and lovely foliage. They will bloom for many months after the holidays and afford the recipients continual pleasure. Remarkable and exquisite new shades in the favorite pink and salmon groups. Captivating presents.

Fancy plants in 5-inch pots, $1.50; magnificent subjects in 6-inch pots, $3.

If you desire to send cards with plant gifts enclose same when ordering and we will carefully attach and deliver them

BUNGALOW BEEFSTEAK PIE

¾ cup Globe "A1" Spaghetti
3 tablespoons Globe "A1" Flour
2 tablespoons butter
¼ cup grated cheese
2 tablespoons shortening
1 lb. round steak
2 or 3 onions, minced
2 or 3 carrots, diced
1 cup canned green peas
Salt and pepper

CUT the steak into bits about an inch square, place in a frying pan with the shortening and stir over fire until meat is lightly browned, remove it, place minced onions in pan and fry to a light golden color. Now place the diced raw carrots in the bottom of a large casserole, add the onions, then the meat and 1½ cups of boiling water. Cover the casserole, place on asbestos mat over a low fire and simmer for 2 hours, then add salt and pepper to taste, pour the cup of peas with their liquor over the meat and turn over all the spaghetti which has been cooked for 20 minutes in 2 quarts of boiling salted water and drained. Blend the butter with the flour over a low fire, add a cup of the water drained from the spaghetti and boil for three minutes, then pour over the spaghetti. Strew the cheese over the top and place in a quick oven for 15 or 20 minutes.

Common Scolds

By ALMA WHITAKER

A LITTLE woman who was feeling a bit overwhelmed with life generally, and particularly with a hypercritical husband, suddenly had the idea of writing to some of those damsels on newspapers who undertake to give advice on love, matrimony, the raising of children, and anything else under the sun.

It was the little woman's first offense. Caught her in a weak moment, and, of course, all that was really necessary was a little sympathy and a cheerio.

She bared her heart to three separate columnists in local papers. And all three gave her a round scolding. If her husband was hypercritical, it was probably because she herself was most unworthy. She was to look for the trouble within herself. The chances were that her man was entirely justified in his criticism. These lady columnists had no doubt whatever that it was their separate duty to chide and admonish. One said the trouble was she probably loved her children more than she loved her husband, and that in itself was a scarlet sin.

So, you see, the little woman went bang up against three more hypercritical souls who were willing to believe there was nothing good about her, and all she did was to let herself in for some more round scoldings. Just before committing suicide . . . feeling that she was unworthy to live, she wrote to one more columnist. For pity's sake how did one please a forever-critical husband? What on earth could a wife do to please a husband, who, apparently, took such a malicious joy in never being pleased? Could one learn to be charming? Was it possible to learn how to be right, just once or twice a month anyway?

Luckily this fourth columnist had a hypercritical mother, who had blighted her whole girlhood with her everlasting carping. So she wrote to the little woman, a jolly gay letter of sympathy. She said she had been up against the breed herself and she hadn't discovered how to handle 'em. Suppose she and the little woman each tried out some schemes and then reported to each other which worked the best. They could turn it into a game, and see which discovered the secret first, whether prayer and docility, laughter and teasing, meekness or fighting back, silence or loquacity, attention or neglect, etc., etc., turned the trick. She said that if, between them, they could discover the best way to cure a nagging husband, they would be doing the world an enormous good turn.

This letter brought a pitifully grateful reply, in which the little woman told about former replies received from professional scolders. She entered into the spirit of the game and got any amount of repression out of her system in those gay weekly reports she exchanged with the sympathetic columnist. Life was worth living again. Hypercritical husbands had become a mere species to study. Instead of feeling horribly inferior, she now enjoyed a mild little sense of superiority. She had a great time disconcerting the gentleman with varied tactics. She found it quite easy to keep her temper under this amusing system . . . much to the surprise of the gentleman in question. She had him guessing for the first time in their married life of ten years and it was very good for him. Now, as Christmas approaches, she is sending quite gay jolly reports to her columnist friend . . . and thanking God that anyway scolds are only three to one.

Now what is the matter with the Advice-to-the-Lorn columnists that they always feel it their duty to scold? Who are we writers, anyway, to set ourselves up as judges of our fellow man? When they don't scold, they preach . . . and preaching is pretty close to scolding. As a matter of cold fact, writers don't know a bit more about this disconcerting matter of right living and correct family behavior than the rest of the population.

Scolding is altogether too cheap . . . and a little jolly encouraging sympathy altogether too scarce. If it wouldn't be such bad form, I'd like to indulge in a few columns of scolding of some of these sister-writers of mine right here. Think of their nerve. We, their fellow-writers, know just about how successfully they run their own lives and the lives of their families. They make all the mistakes the rest of us do. You bet they do. And the worst mistake they make in their columns is scolding people who are already frightfully miserable. It is almost always unhappy people who write to such columnists.

Scolds are horrid any old time, but thrise as objectionable round about Christmas.

Ever hear little children playing, and note how one or two of them love to scold the rest? You can wager your life those youngsters have either a scolding mother or a scolding father at home. Those children are not only being made unhappy themselves but are being trained to make life wretched for everyone they have to deal with later on.

I had a neighbor once. He never saw me without complaining about something, or pointing out something we had done wrong. He scolded about the quality of our fence and the man we had hired to put it up. He scolded because the drips from our roof made a little gutter along the ground and wondered why our contractor hadn't had the sense to build the roof differently. He would deplore that our flowers weren't as healthy as they should be, and draw attention to blight on the roses. He thought our windows had been put in the wrong places, and we certainly had bought the wrong kind of lawn mower. When we hired a gardener, he told of a much better one we should have hired. In fact, there wasn't a thing about us or our house that pleased him.

So one day, after a year of it, I said, "I'm sorry we haven't a thing to please you. Do you know you have never spoken to me yet without criticising something we own or do? Now I rather like you and I think you and your family and your house and your yard and the way you do things are pretty good. I do wish there was just something about us that you felt was all right."

He was the most astonished old dear. He spluttered and said he hadn't meant to give that impression. But I insisted upon reminding him of the many things about us he hadn't approved of, and he certainly looked worried.

He hasn't criticised a thing about us for two months now. We are pretty good friends. I don't think he realized what an unfortunate attitude he had taken. It's just an unpleasant habit with some people and they are ever so surprised to find people don't like it.

Very well, sister writers, that's meant for you. I wouldn't scold you for the world, you understand, but, oh, darlings, do stand off and look at yourselves just once, with the same critical, scolding attitude you have toward other people. Just being a female writer with a column doesn't give us the right to scold . . . not even, when tired, unhappy people write to us for advice. If we are to do any real good in this world we must begin with sympathy. We must be ever so understanding. We must cheer and comfort. Or, in the few cases where we feel a little criticism is necessary, we must do it with humor, lightly, gently.

It's all right, dears, lots of men can be common scolds too . . . even men who write. But it's the women writers who have to preach or scold all the time . . . and it's like our infernal cheek.

High prices for cocoons have caused many silk mills in Italy to close.

or hot cakes is a dietetic indiscretion—something which even the strongest of stomachs cannot withstand.

Mixtures such as jams and coffee, pickles and ice cream, sauerkraut and oranges, creamed pastries and onions, or hot cakes with maple syrup, are all wicked offenders.

Now, we have a choice of three different methods:

(1.) The hot packs which open the pores very well.

(2.) The sweat cabinet.

CARE OF THE BODY

a broad-hipped woman is much more suitable for motherhood than her narrow-hipped sister.

If the woman be tall and slender, she will usually have an easier time than the short or "dumpy" build of woman.

The first child usually entails a longer labor than the second or those ensuing, with the possible exception that there is a greater likelihood of complications if the woman becomes a mother past the age of 38 or 40.

Notwithstanding popular opinion, the large-breasted woman is not necessarily the best nursing mother. This is not true if the breasts are too pendulous.

For that matter, it does not necessarily follow that the small-breasted woman will have less milk than the woman with a full bosom.

Not all of the milk can be felt at the external surface of the breast. A considerable part of it flows through the ducts imbedded deep in the chest wall.

Next—it is not true that a woman who has had an unattended laceration will find it easier than one who has been properly sutured.

The existence of the laceration prevents muscular contraction.

A woman whose abdominal muscles are firm and well developed will have an easier time at labor than one whose abdominal muscles are weak, flabby and fatty.

Prolapsus of the womb may often be responsible for abortions, miscarriages and, in many cases, total sterility. On the other hand, where one carries to full term, uterine prolapses or mal-positions are often said to be responsible for wrong presentations such as breech presentation, feet first, and so forth.

Nausea and the "morning sickness" of pregnancy are not normal symptoms. They are abnormal, co-existent with the universality of constipation, stomach trouble, gaseous fermentation and other stomach and intestinal ailments. However, where they do exist, their onset is generally from the sixth week of pregnancy and they last about six weeks. They often furnish an aid of diagnosis to determine the length of pregnancy.

If one knows the date of conception, one may figure two hundred seventy-nine days and twelve hours as the period of incubation.

Life is not felt until the eighteenth week and even then but faintly.

The fetal heart is present from the third week of pregnancy, although it is practically impossible to hear it until at least the fifth month.

The cessation of menstruation is not necessarily a sign of pregnancy. Many women will menstruate throughout the entire nine months of pregnancy although generally in lesser and lesser quantity as the embryo covers a large surface of the mucous membrane of the uterus.

Leucorrhea is not a normal phenomenon of pregnancy. There should be no discharges, whatsoever. Since leucorrhea is such a constant symptom of catarrh, it generally becomes aggravated by maturity.

For the average woman there is little which can be done to relieve the pressure symptoms of frequent and lessened-control urination, constipation and bowel pressure. We must remember that the average uterus expands from a total length of five or six inches to as much as twenty-two inches, proportionately displacing the balance of the abdominal contents.

The breasts are active from the time pregnancy commences, secreting a yellowish secretion known as colostrum from the seventh month of gestation to the day after confinement.

Twilight sleep is obsolete and is used only by a tiny fraction of the medical profession.

Every prospective mother should visit her dentist before the baby is born to see that all fillings are properly attended and cavities repaired. Under no circumstances should she wait until after baby is born, for the nervous irritation consequent to dental visits will frequently be responsible for nervous milk or for a loss of milk entirely.

Mothers do not gain anything by consuming large quantities of milk or other gland-stimulating foods before the baby is born. The time for them to "eat for two" is after the baby comes—not before. Then they will have ample quantities of breast milk without the complications of a too-large baby.

Douches are dangerous and always fraught with the peril of abortion or miscarriage if taken any time after a known pregnancy has started.

There is no satisfactory method of sex determination.

The old-fashioned maternity support or corset has gone out of vogue. It is high time that it has, for I know of few measures more vicious.

The danger signals in pregnancy are excessive swelling of the limbs, the presence of albumen in the urine and a high blood pressure. Beware if these exist. If they do and your doctor still lets you eat anything you please, he is either crassly ignorant or grossly negligent in his implied duties to his patient.

Ectopic gestation is the technical term we use for pregnancy outside of the uterus. This may be a tubal pregnancy, an ovarian pregnancy or an abdominal pregnancy. If any of these are positively diagnosed and one is sure of the existence of an extra-uterine pregnancy, there is absolutely no choice but surgical interference.

A Caesarean operation is never justified on the basis of pre-confinement measurements. It should always be the last resort—the emergency to save life. Then it finds a noble place, indeed.

As a pain-preventer or as something to free the woman from the pains of childbirth, it is a procedure that is little short of criminal.

These are but a few disconnected ideas that I have taken from the mass of correspondence on the subject.

If there is anything further that you want to know about it, I would advise that you write to me.

Care of the Child

It is a sad state of affairs when we glance at statistics and see the tremendous number of deaths due to a lack of knowledge along proper feeding lines for infants and children.

Your baby is the product of your body. When it is born it acquires its strength and vitality from you.

Some children have a better start than others. Some are more susceptible to trouble than others.

There is no doubt but that, irrespective of the bad start most children obtain through heredity, it is possible to bring them up in a healthful, normal fashion if we know how to feed them.

Children do not work or worry. They are not subject to the emotions of the adult. They are simply products of food, water and air. If these are given in balanced doses, there is no reason why this mortality should exist.

It is essential that an enormous amount of information be distributed among mothers along the line of infant feeding. The sort of milk to give them, the proper proportions, the exposure of the naked body to the sun, teaching the child to breathe properly, giving it outdoors activity, training its little mind toward self-control, and many similar problems of this nature—these should be of vital interest to every serious-minded mother.

BUNIONS

We have invented a day and night appliance for bunions and overlapped toes, and we have ever reason to believe it will correct nine cases out of ten.

The night splints are worn while sleeping and the muscles are relaxed, to stretch the contracted tendons that distort the toes and cause this hideous deformity.

The day reducing appliance shields the bunion, hides the deformity and holds the toes in proper alignment and the normal traction for the bones will be re-established and in a short time the bunion disappears completely and forever.

Seen from the Wander Trail

Aboard the "France Fassio" Monday, Oct. 20

After I had come in from my lone watch on the deck, late last night, I found the captain of the ship and the chief engineer engaged in a game of chess.

I do not know much more than the first thing about the game of chess, but I know when I see two men engaged in desperate conflict. And that was the very thing that was now before my eyes.

These two men who were associated in very responsible ways in the operation of a sea-going vessel, and who at meals and on other occasions treated each other with unfailing courtesy and friendliness, now appeared to be deadly enemies.

Studying them as types, I picked the captain to be Phoenician and the chief engineer to be Roman. So, to myself, I settled down to visions of a far past and to old wars. The chess board was the plains of Italy. I saw Hannibal facing Scipio Africanus.

The ship that had been doing acrobatics of a most amazing nature right along on this Gulf of Lion, now in the most obvious manner took a hand in the battle of the chess board on the side of the Phoenician, which was no more than right, according to my way of thinking, for the reason that we were on Phoenician waters.

The way it was. Scipio Africanus had Hannibal in a corner and was about to annihilate him when the ship hopped to the top of a huge wave that came along just in the nick of time. It spun around like a top on the crest of the billow, two or three times. Then it took a nose dive, down how many fathoms no man will ever know. Out of the depths it came up straight, whirled around again, shuddered like a thing stricken in its last agony, resuming its equilibrium with a shriek of defiance and the rattle and bang of everything that was loose from prow to stern.

The result was to scatter hopelessly from the chess board every king and queen, castle, bishop and pawn that was upon it, and thus to let Hannibal out of the corner he was in to fight another day.

I heard Scipio Africanus swear fearful oaths in a language I was glad I could not understand. And I heard also the groans and moans of the victims of the ship's maneuver from the cabins below, not to speak of sailors who rushed up with white faces from dark holes to the shivering decks.

This morning at breakfast the captain and the chief engineer were as friendly as ever. But, there were no others, except myself, to join them at table.

All this second day on the Mediterranean we sailed in view of the Italian Riviera, past Monaco and the quaint cities of the coast. We were thinking how very like the coast of our California was all that we saw, except for the character of the towns. It is lovely, surely, but not so lovely as our own Riviera that we remembered with a homesick ache in the heart. The purple sweep of the Malibu and the golden coast of glory with the blue Pacific breaking in white spray against the shore. And at night the miracle of the lights.

No, there is nothing here to match the beauty of that which is ours at home. There is nothing here to rival the splendor of mountain and valley and sea that lies between Santa Barbara and San Diego.

Our sturdy little "Franca Fassio," done with its pranks and safe across the tricky waters of the Lion's Gulf, steered into the harbor of Genoa at candle light in a downpour of rain.

Genoa, Oct. 24

I think I have already told the folks in the Synagogue that we arrived in Genoa from across the tumultuous Gulf of Lion at candlelight and in a driving rain.

It is always necessary to make a record of the weather when one voyages in ships. Sailors never fail to do so in the logbooks. And to all travelers whether they fare by sea or by land, the weather is of prime importance. To whoever sits sheltered from storm and cold at home at a warm fireside it is not a matter of concern, one way or another, if the elements without be at war or at peace, but to the wayfarer it is always a thing to be anxious about.

And so, it was gloomy and dreary enough in Genoa when we sought our beds after the wild passage we had experienced over the most inhospitable of all the wide waters of the Mediterranean. But, morning broke clear and sunny, and old Genoa awaited us in its best and kindliest mood.

"Old" Genoa, indeed. Genoa that is older than Rome and from the ports of which sailed silken argosies when the world was young. Genoa that was ever lovely, and more so now than ever, its ancient beauty augmented by the newer beauty that is being ever added to it. Men call it "Genoa the Superb," and not without reason. Old Genoa that still boasts the most reserved aristocracy of Italy and the most independent peasantry. The city that was once the richest in the world and that, when it received Charles V of France, threw with a superb gesture of prodigality into the sea the golden vessels used at the banquet. Genoa that is the custodian of the ashes of the head of John the Baptist and the emerald that shone in the Holy Grail.

There are cathedrals and stately palaces in Genoa for eyes to see gorgeous citadels of both religious and temporal wealth and power. But, before we sought them at all, before we made the least effort to revel in Genoa's beauty, we searched out the humblest house in all the city's hill-walled expanse.

We made a pilgrimage to the house in which Christopher Columbus was born.

It is strange enough that the doges, the princes and the kings who were born in Genoa have no one now except the guide posts of books to point out the stately rooftrees in which they were born, while the very arabs of the streets will lead you with the readiest ease to that little gray house, vine-covered and battered by the winds of time, where he was born who adventured uncharted seas and found a New World.

So it is that it is only the deed that counts and is remembered. The good deed, the brave deed, the deed that sets the feet of man forward on the long road of his struggles and his dreams—it is only that which counts and is remembered.

We bared our heads before that little house. Two wandering Americans paying their humble tribute to the memory of the great admiral, the immortal Genoese, prince of sailormen, the discoverer whose name Death cannot dim.

It seems that Genoa never wholly lost its place as a maritime city of the first importance. And just now it is experiencing something like a rebirth of its ancient greatness. It bustles with life and is jubilant with an air of prosperity that is at once infectious when a visitor enters its portals.

Indeed, we have been struck with the air of progress and prosperity that we have encountered everywhere we have been, so far, in Europe—in Paris and other parts of France, in Madrid and Barcelona in Spain, and everywhere in Italy.

We are told that it is really only in Germany and Austria that times are generally very bad.

Zurich, Oct. 27

It is surprising with what rapidity and ease one passes from one country to another in Europe. Swift railway trains and automobiles work magic for the traveler.

After all, in these days, the whole world has come to be really not a very big place, and Europe is only a small part of that world.

So, one day you are in such and such a country, under its flag, counting its money, hearing the speech of its people. Next day, another country, another flag, another tongue, wrestling with another kind of money.

We left our own country on a certain day, since which time, less than one month, we have crossed the Atlantic Ocean, caught a glimpse of England in passing, have visited France, Spain and Italy, and here we are now in Switzerland.

It sounds big, but it is really no more than though we had journeyed down from Portland, in Oregon, to San Diego, in California.

Yesterday we went with friends, whose home is here in Zurich, on a little motor trip for a part of the day, starting not very early in the morning and returning a little after dusk. But, in the course of the trip we crossed the historic Rhine and dined in a village of Germany not far from the edges of the Black Forest.

As far as the gorgeous profligacy of nature in its lavishment of beauty is concerned, we are ready to declare that there is nothing to compare with Switzerland.

Though I were to live a thousand years I shall never forget the road from Genoa to Zurich, the majestic snow-capped mountains, the shining lakes, the sparkling rivers, the white, misted waterfalls, the ravishingly beautiful valleys tilled to the last inch with lovely little farms that are like gardens—surely it is here that God revelled in His final throb of glory when He flung our earth from the hollow of His hand.

be made without bringing about a patient's sudden demise, thus—important point!—causing the loss of the surgeon's fee. Hundreds of years of trial and error have evolved this chart.

"Chinese methods of first aid seem to be brutal but effective. In a rickety, hired motor car—1905 model—I found myself one day charging down a crowded street in Hankow. I stormed at my Chinese driver: I implored him to go more slowly. He smiled, waved his hand and shouted an answering 'Maskee'—'Never mind!' I cowered, awaiting the inevitable. It came. Our car struck a strapping coolie squarely abaft the beam. Down he crashed and lay still. My heart gave a leap of fear; I was convinced that we had killed a man. The crowd that gathered sprang upon the coolie. They lifted him to his feet. They shook him. They cuffed his cheeks. They shook him again till his lolling head was snapped back and forth. In my amazement I shouted, 'Do they want to kill him?'

"The chauffeur shrugged. Out came the customary 'Maskee!' Then: 'It is good for coolie to be shaken. His soul no can leavy body. If he sleeps, soul steal away. If not, everything all right.'

"This prophecy proved true. The astral portion of the coolie decided to rejoin the flesh. His head stiffened on his neck. His eyes opened. He looked about him dazedly. Despite my driver's protests, I gave him five dollars. Face wreathed in smiles, he limped away. Whereupon an old man detached himself from the bystanders, laid himself down before my car and mutely begged to be run over. The stipend, I presume, was to be five dollars."

Stomach Attacks in the Child

From ancient times mothers have become accustomed to consider the stomach the source of most ailments affecting the child.

When these ideas become firmly rooted through the years, as a rule there is a large amount of truth in them.

The condition of baby's stomach is an excellent way of telling whether or not he is in good health.

Baby's stomach "goes wrong" more frequently than any other portion of the body.

If we analyze the troubles we can very quickly find out some of the reasons.

With most children it is a case of overfeeding—nothing more. The child's stomach reacts the same as that of the adult.

If too much food is put into it, it protests. If it is overloaded, it breaks down. If it is clogged, it becomes helpless and sends up signals of pain and distress.

The foolish combinations which mothers permit are usually the next important reason for this trouble.

To give a child an ice cream cone immediately after he has had waffles or hot cakes is a dietetic indiscretion—something which even the strongest of stomachs cannot withstand.

Mixtures such as jams and coffee, pickles and ice cream, sauerkraut and oranges, creamed pastries and onions, and so forth, cannot be withstood by any child.

The trouble is that most mothers think the child desires the kind of food in which they, themselves, like to indulge. It is difficult for them to realize that a child should be fed simply—that five and six courses of food at one meal should be strictly forbidden.

Parents should understand that simplicity—less seasoning, less pepper, salt, paprika, and all of the irritating condiments—will help more than any other measure, to prevent stomachache.

Another factor responsible for gas attacks in children is the overconsumption of laxatives. Time and again when a child has been given laxatives regularly, the action of the laxatives on the stomach is injurious. They irritate and inflame the membrane lining and retard normal digestive activity. They affect not only the stomach but oftentimes the entire intestinal tract.

In addition, overeating and wrong feeding are responsible elements for stomachache in children.

No matter what the child's weight may be, don't worry if he misses a meal or two.

Give him nothing but water.

Use water to clean the lower bowel.

If his little abdomen is tensed and contracted because of gas, apply warm applications over the entire abdomen and put him to bed with a hot water bottle to his feet.

Take his temperature. If it is above normal, don't feed him solids until his temperature is down. Remember, a very small child usually registers from a half to one degree higher than an adult. Also remember that rectal temperature is one degree higher than mouth temperature.

Keep him warm and free from excitement and noise.

When he commences eating again, give him fruit juices. Don't be afraid to keep him on fruit for several days until all bad symptoms have disappeared.

You will be surprised at the good results you will get following these measures.

Enlargement of the Liver

Question: In hypertrophy of the liver or excessive secretion of the liver, what should be the remedy?

Answer: Decrease the amount of secretion by means of diet or what I sometimes humorously call a "nono" diet—abstinence from diet, or frequently a fast, thereby making the organ smaller.

If the organ is increased in size we have congestion—an excessive blood supply or an enlargement of that area. Every increased organ has added increased nutrition to that area—whether it be the stomach or any other part of the body.

In the treatment of jaundice the most satisfactory method is the eliminative diet.

In a typical jaundice case—that is, the average type, with no other complications, I recommend a diet of fruit, only, for one day per week and for the balance of the week, the following classifications of food:

Breakfast: Fruit only.

Noon luncheon: Seventy-five per cent of total meal, a raw vegetable salad; the balance, cooked vegetables.

Evening meal: The same as at noon, varying the individual items.

The next thing with which we are concerned is the discharge of the bile pigment from the skin.

How can we best accomplish this?

By sweating.

How can we procure sweating in a cases of jaundice?

By active, passive, dry and wet sweating.

In a case of jaundice you will invariably find the patient thoroughly constipated, having little "pep" and strength.

If the sweating be of the passive variety, how are we able to open the pores?

By wet sweats through the application of hot packs. Or, we may use the sweat cabinet bath or the Turkish bath. The wet sweat increases the ease with which the pores can open and permits the discharge of the waste solution more eadily.

Therefore, if we want to clear the skin and our method of doing it is by sweating, we have a choice of three different methods:

(1.) The hot packs which open the pores very well.

(2.) The sweat cabinet.

(3.) The Turkish bath, which is the most practical of all. Most Turkish baths have a hot room and a steam room. The steam room is the better of the two.

Who should not visit a Turkish bath?

The patient having heart disease. Also, the person suffering from high blood pressure as there is much danger of the blood vessels' bursting. The pregnant woman should not visit a Turkish bath nor for that matter should she take an extremely hot bath.

In a case of acute jaundice, there should be practically no exercise.

There should be plenty of rest, calm and quiet.

Hot hydrotherapy and sun baths are valuable. The skin has all the pigment. Therefore, sun baths—in so far as they open the skin pores—are beneficial.

Massage will decrease hypertrophy of the liver. One can fairly well regulate the quantity of bile which flows into the intestines and which flows out into the skin. The massage should be passive and active.

If there is plenty of weight, the patient should go on a complete out-and-out fast or at least on a partial fast of orange juice for the first three to five days at least, then follow the general diet I have recommended.

Odds and Ends About Motherhood

The large number of communications on the subject of motherhood prompts me to present a series of unrelated ideas concerning this vital topic. Although I shall not develop any one thing from them, at least a general cursory idea of some aspects of this important epoch of women might be understood.

For most, we may make general deductions. We must realize, of course that there are a great many exceptions.

For instance, the general theory is that

TORTURING RHEUMATIC PAINS GONE FOREVER

You can be free from the torturing pains of Rheumatism, Neuritis, Lumbago, Sciatica, if you will take Corat.

Corat is a prescription perfected by one of England's most renowned physicians. It has been relieving pain and banishing the above diseases for over 25 years. Over 30,000 packages of this wonderful tablet have been sold in Los Angeles since its introduction a few months ago. As a consequence many sufferers in this city have voluntarily testified as to the remarkable curative effects of Corat.

You owe it to yourself to give Corat a trial. You risk nothing as it is guaranteed to satisfy you fully—to produce the results promised—or your money will be cheerfully refunded. Surely that's fair—isn't it?

Don't confuse Corat with ordinary "patent medicines." Remember, it is a physician's prescription of unusual merit—in exact accord with modern medical practice. Be free from pain—act today.

Don't suffer the excruciating pains of Rheumatism any longer. Get a package at the Owl-Liggett Drug Co., or your neighborhood druggist. In convenient tablet form, price $1.00.

True Love Stories of Famous People

"Yes, this love match is made in Heaven, child."

"But—but—" the girl protested honestly. "The man's nothing to me! Oh, nice, but so are a million other men. What gives you that impression?"

The smile passed from her companion's face. Finally she spoke, and seriously:

"Perhaps it's intuition. And maybe"—here her voice dropped low—"I am seeing into the future."

Abruptly she changed the subject.

Do you believe there is such a thing as seeing into the future? You do know instances, don't you, of predictions coming true? This musical godmother—I shan't give you her name here—seems to have such power at times.

But marriage was the last thing in Josephine Garrett's mind. She'd make a huge success in that little church production. Word of it would fly to the Metropolitan. The great Gatti-Casazza, ruling the destiny of that organization, would send for her. And her father would finally say, "Yes, dear, you may sing in opera." Then there'd come the night when the programs would cease rustling in the diamond horseshoe. The footlights would lower. The director would tap his music desk once. The orchestra would burst into the overture of "Madame Butterfly" and—

Something nudged her in the side. It was the elbow of the musical godmother. The train had drawn into the Grand Central Station.

"Dreaming of marrying Graham McNamee, darling?" she asked gently.

"Oh, bosh," Josephine said, as her face flushed.

When she walked into the rehearsal room at Mt. Kisco that night—a hall in the basement of the church—she noticed something peculiar about the players grouped together.

A week before they had been cordial, friendly, even worshipful toward her. Now they were frigid, austere. There was an air of coldness about the place. Instead of half a dozen girls rushing forward with hands extended, exclaiming. "Oh, we're so glad you've come," they did just the opposite.

They snubbed her!

Poor Josephine! She didn't know what it was all about. Deeply embarrassed, humiliated, she turned aside, seeking just one friendly glance. There was not one.

Standing alone, ostracized, she battled against the impulse of flight. In everyone's life there's a distinct turning point. A moment when we make a decision which we can never change—and a decision which alters the entire course of our lives. Sometimes, not until years later, do we know that we stood at the crossing of destiny.

That's where Josephine Garrett stood at that moment. If she had given away to embarrassment, if she had turned coward and fled, the world would never have known her. Nor Graham McNamee, either. For 'tis she who has made him—but we'll talk about that later, too.

She didn't flee. There's blood in the Garrett's fighting blood. And for all her charm and loveliness, Josephine Garrett McNamee has her full share of it. All right! They'd snub her, would they? But she'd show them that she could sing—could sing better than anyone there.

Very deliberately she walked to a vacant soft and sat at one corner.

A moment later a door opened. In walked a chap with a compelling personality—some years older than Josephine—with the air of the conquering hero about him. A dozen "Ah's!" went up from the huddle, and a dozen feminine voices exclaimed: "Oh, good evening Mr. McNamee. We were just dying for you to come!"

He bowed right and left—bowed from the waist!—and took the homage given him. After he exchanged pretty nothings with all the pretty girls he stepped back with a grand air.

He would now retire and meditate before beginning that arduous rehearsal.

But he didn't retire. He saw Josephine Garrett sitting on that settee. H-m-m-m. She had not arisen or greeted him. He approached.

His attribute was: If you have anything, suppose you show it—wonder what you really can do?

He glanced down at her, nonchalantly. She looked up at him, calmly.

Could he sit down? He could. He did. He talked a bit. Then he said:

"Oh, I forgot my score; may I look on with you?"

Yes, he could.

The rehearsal proceeded. When it was all over he turned to her and quite casually asked: "Shall we walk down to the station together?"

And quite casually she answered: "Yes."

While they were strolling toward that railroad station he said: "There's something that I think I—I should tell you."

"Yes?"

He was silent until they came to the shade of overhanging trees—trees which hid the moonbeams.

"I—I guess you noticed that everyone was cold toward you at first tonight, didn't you?" he finally asked in a low voice.

"Were they?"

She'd admit no such thing to any mere man!

"I—I'm sure they were," he said.

Just then they stepped from under the trees. His hat was in his hand. "I have a confession to make to you—something that I'm sorry for from the bottom of my heart," he whispered.

"Yes?"

In that moment Graham McNamee showed the thoroughbred strain.

"Listen to me just a minute," he pleaded. She waited by his side for the words that hurt him so much in the saying.

"I caused that coldness toward you," he was saying. "The night before I asked the crowd: 'Who's the soprano?' They said you, and asked me what I knew about you.

"You know I've sung in these productions before. In 'Pinafore,' 'The Pirates of Penzance,' and all that. I've been—Oh, well, I guess I belittled you to them—but I didn't know you, then. I said, 'Oh, that girl Josephine Garrett? How'd you happen to get her? She'll never fit in with us. I thought our last year's soprano was good enough. This girl, she's high-hat, big-headed, and all that.'"

He was silent for an instant, then continued: "Please forgive me. I'm sorry. Tonight you changed my mind. I was wrong.

"Please, won't you forgive me?"

"Suppose we forget it all," she said in her low, cultured voice. "I'm not angry—" her voice dropped almost to a whisper as she finished the sentence, "with you."

Never mind what he said then. Only those who know it and they will never tell. The whistle of that approaching train shrieked.

"Come," he cried, "we've got to run for it."

Run they did. He flung her up the steps of a passenger coach just as the Bronxville accommodation was pulling out. She turned to say good night. There he was, hanging by the steps, with a big, boyish grin on his face.

"I'm going to see you all the way home." And he did.

I doubt if a performance of "The Gondoliers" has ever been given with the elan that characterized that little church production.

But the audience didn't see the play within the play that took place on the stage. While the tenor sang words of ardent love to the soprano, she was casting tender glances toward the baritone.

The spectators thought it was the contralto's charms that inspired that baritone. Truth is, it was Josephine Garrett, the soprano, for whom he was singing his words of love.

After the performance a gracious gentlewoman—Josephine's musical godmother—pushed through the admiring friends and shook a droll finger under that lovely miss's nose. She had understood it all.

"What did I tell you, darling; what did I tell you?"

After that Graham and Josephine saw each other constantly. They were continuously together: Walked together, talked together, and went to concerts side by side. And when he made his Aeolian Hall debut that fall she was in the front row as a friendly critic—just as she had been present at all his concerts since the night of "The Gondoliers."

Just a year after that eventful performance they were married, having reached the decision that two careers could go along together. Little did they know that some day circumstances would demand of her a great decision—one of the greatest that a talented woman can make. But more of that later.

(This is one love story that doesn't end with matrimony: the end hasn't been written yet, won't be for years and years!)

Two busy, happy years followed. They gave joint recitals and sang in concert together. But all the while, woman-like, she was seeking not to advance herself, but the man she loved.

Wasn't there some field that would offer great chances to a man of his unique talents? Some field not so dreadfully overcrowded as the church and concert field always is?

There was radio. One day she suggested it to him. He laughed saying: "Oh, I don't know anything about it."

"Neither do I," she answered, "so we're even; but I wish you'd try it, some day—for me."

She had planted the suggestion in his mind.

One day he was downtown, doing jury duty. In a few off moments he strolled up Broadway. He passed Number 195, radio headquarters. He remembered her suggestion. Well, it wouldn't do any harm to step in.

The rest is radio history. It was discovered that he was that rarest of things—a natural radio personality.

He became a radio announcer. Within half a year he got his chance to pioneer in news reporting. He broadcast his first prize fight, round by round. It was an instant success. His first world series followed.

But what of Josephine Garrett McNamee?

She was leading a life of three careers. In her own concert field she was succeeding more than ever. And she was acting as a program builder for Graham,

Graham telephones her after every hour on the air — asking her, "How was the job?"

who was continuing his concert work with great success, but keeping it entirely separate from his new love—radio.

And she was developing the role of critic, also. She listened in every time he was on the air. At first she made suggestions, hesitatingly, to him. But they were corking good ones. Soon he began telephoning her after every hour on the air—just as he does today—asking her "How was the job?"

But his own star was rising fast. Concert managers found that she had that rare thing, a distinct platform personality. They believed she was going to be the great concert star of the future. They told her so—tried to sign her up to contracts, to plan her artistic future.

Abruptly she turned her back on all that.

That was one of the great decisions of her life—a decision inspired by that old-fashioned thing called love. She realized that there can be but one great star in a family; she determined that Graham McNamee should be the one. She knew that it would be a full-time job being the proper kind of wife to him.

Back of this main reason for giving up her career were others just as good: for one thing, she could listen in to his big hours; but he could seldom go to her concerts. And she believed then, and still believes, that husband and wife, in love, should encourage one another.

If he couldn't encourage her—well, she'd stay at home and inspire him.

And yet another reason—

There are still a few people left in this

"Pills of Ten Thousand Efficacies"

We are not alone in our blind worship of mysterious drugs and concoctions with magic powers. The Chinese, with a civilization several thousand years older than ours, are as deeply immersed in the ancient traditions and superstitions as we are.

The following condensation of an article from "Asia" which appeared in The Reader's Digest, gives one some inkling of the evils in "pilology:"

"According to the Chinese, there are special medicinal properties in the deer. In Hangchow I visited a prosperous pharmacy which maintains a herd of them. Whenever an animal is slaughtered, nothing is wasted. Certain fevers are treated by the infusion of powdered deer hoof. For giving stamina to the weak, the antlers are excellent. Even the visceral organs are carefully preserved, to be desiccated, blended with herbs, then moulded into pellets. Just outside the door of the salesroom of this shop lay tray upon tray of glistening white deer pills receiving a final, solar baking. Pills to the number of—there must have been a million of them. In a special tray were the prize pellets of the shop, compounded of the entire deer, including even skin, hair and bones, and guaranteed, the clerk said with a wave of the hand, to cure any ailment under heaven.

"I was taken to the workroom, where sat some twenty very shabby men, grinding and mixing. One of them turned at my approach.

"'What's the reason for this?' I whispered guardedly. "These blind men?'

"'If they can't see,' he explained, 'how can they steal the formula? For two or three hundred years this shop has been making these pills. Many pharmacies would like to steal our method by bribing one of our workmen to work for them. The clerks here are all cousins of the man who owns this shop. I am the owner's grandson. Only the poor men who grind and mix our pills—they do not belong to our family. They are coolies. One or two of them were so poor that they blinded themselves so that they might come here to work.'

"We passed into the general shop where other medicaments were sold. My guide pointed to a glass of Tibetan bear paws soaking in alcohol—prepared at a customer's order as a remedy for gout. He tried to expatiate upon the value of a jar of carefully baked infant's brains, quite marvelous as a preventive of all skin diseases, including leprosy. He showed me desiccated lizards, centipedes and snakes, which would be mixed with sugar-cane sap or honey as an aid in Bright's disease, as nearly as I could comprehend the symptoms. Less gruesome were the bins of ground, dried buffalo hide, the powdered cobwebs, bats' wings and rats' bones. In the naming of the various drugs the Chinese love of flowery nomenclature was given full scope. I was shown, for instance, 'The Pill of Ten Thousand Efficacies' and 'The Great Blessing Pill,' which contained ten secret drugs and cured ten exceedingly diverse diseases.

"Not alone for pain or illness do the people of China go to their druggists. If a soldier contemplates a battle on the morrow, he will take from his tiny store of cash enough to buy the infallible specific for courage, the powdered heart of a tiger. Or he may even purchase the greatest courage-producer of all, the heart of a bandit. The clerk showed me an advertisement which read: 'The famous bandit Ah Tsong is no more. Should you not like to eat of the heart of the brigand Ah Tsong and henceforth fear no man? Come with surprising promptness, for only three of these pills are in existence.'

"Most Chinese remedies are concocted from animal bones and tissues. The single herbaceous drug that has captured the fancy of the Chinese is ginseng. Occidental physicians have never been able to discover any medicinal value in the herb. But it is eagerly sought after by old-fashioned Chinese as a cure for many ills. My guide, I thought, displayed a nice cynicism that day when he quoted a Chinese proverb to the effect that, if a man is not fated to die, a medicine will cure him.

"The Ming Emperor Kuang Tsung, we are told, when taken ill, tried a number of remedies without receiving the slightest alleviation. At last a courtier told of a 'Red Pill' that had been tried upon two sick men. One had recovered with magic rapidity; the other, with equal promptness, had died. A brave man or a weary one, Emperor Kuang Tsung, since he demanded that the Red Pill—about the size of a pigeon's egg—should be prepared and administered to him! Six hours later he 'ascended the Dragon,' and a new Emperor was proclaimed.

"Chinese doctors frequently advertise their wares in public places. One evening at a fair in Peking, I saw a man running through the crowd, hands to head, whooping with apparent pain. He drew up before a doctor's tent. The oriental Aesculapius came forth with alacrity. As the crowd looked on, he dosed the sufferer with several fat yellow pills. Even before the last of these had been swallowed, the man made so noisy a recovery that I began to smile. I questioned my 'Number One Boy.'

"'Yes, master,' he answered, 'every night, the man comes.'

"'But is anybody fooled?'

"My servant gave me a wise look.

"'Peking men are not fooled. Countrymen who come in for the fair, they are always fooled.'

"Walking once down an alley of Chungking, I found myself caught in a crowd. The next moment I found myself watching the surgical operation of acupuncture.

"A coolie, bare to the waist, was evidently in the throes of a stomach ache. A shabby Chinese with a wispy gray beard and a greasy queue was the operator. He heated over a charcoal brazier the blunt tips of a half-dozen bodkins, each the approximate length and thickness of a steel knitting needle. With a pair of pincers he removed a white-hot bodkin from the charcoal and thrust the unheated end, which had been sharpened, deep into the sufferer's midriff—deftly, I must confess, since his patient did not even wince. Soon the poor coolie was punctured by six of these gruesome needles.

"The operator had a chart of a human body spread before him. Arrows pointed to the places where the incisions could

The City of Vistas

Many Viewing Points From Which Inspiring Panoramas May Be Had Are Nature's Gift to Los Angeles' Scene-Gazers.

By JOSEF LYONS

LOS ANGELES is the champion city of vistas, the city of countless lookouts.

Other great urban centers of the world have their vantage viewing points, well known to the globe-trotter and the tourist guide. London offers the great dome of St. Paul's, Paris suggests the Eiffel Tower and lofty Notre Dame; Rome, over which the hallowed dome of St. Peter's broods, and closer home, New York boasts the dizzy eminence of the new Empire State Building as well as other skyscrapers by the legion.

But Los Angeles need not depend on artificial structures from which inspiring and breath-taking vistas may be had. Both within and without her corporate limits are natural eminences galore from which her radiant beauty may be admired in panorama, the lavish gifts of Nature to a favorite daughter whose cup of blessings is already brimming.

Man-made lookouts she has also, to be sure—lofty business buildings of the downtown section, towered over by the white shaft of the City Hall, that peerless artificial aerie perch of the scene-gazer.

To complete the doting gift of vantage viewing points Dame Nature also has included their complement—rare visibility. The atmospheric clarity of the region and the high percentage of days when visibility is excellent are equaled in but few parts of the world.

During the winter months, after a season of rain, when the clouds have given themselves utterly in blessed showers to a thirsty earth, the air of Southern California is so clear and pure that, from a high point, the eye may reach for a distance of more than a hundred miles. It is on days, and especially nights, like this that trips to the lookout points about Los Angeles are amply worth while to the lover of the scenic.

When there is a slight haze in the air, the scene from the eminent places is softened by an intriguing touch of the mysterious and baffling. The middle distance fades into the background of soft mistiness, the light lending to the atmosphere pastel tints running the gamut of the entire spectrum according to the radiance emanating from the heavens—blues, greens, golds and reds tinging the atmospheric scene. When the sun is hidden and great banks of billowing clouds ride the upper ridges, the white mists soften the distant panoramas like the dainty filminess of a bridal veil; and always the landscape is saturated with the tints of the dominating light or lies brooding under encompassing shadow. Truly, the scene-gazer is abundantly rewarded in this portion of Southern California.

To the thousands of residents and visitors who fear the airplane the natural high points are especially inviting and gratifying. Even the highest of these is accessible by automobile with safety or by hiking for those athletically inclined. Some of the vantage points may be attained via the bridle path, always a popular and enjoyable means of approach to the lover of the saddlehorse.

As Saul won the crown of Israel mainly because he towered head and shoulders above his fellow-men, so Mt. Wilson has become the chief of the lookout points about Los Angeles. With lofty crest rising 6000 feet above the level of the sea and in season crowned with a mantle of snow, Mt. Wilson is a viewing point well deserving the popularity accorded by Californians and visitors alike. From the eminence it offers the surrounding country, both mountain and plain, is so widely visible that one has the impression of being suspended between heaven and earth in flight.

From this grandest of Los Angeles lookouts if one chooses a clear day, his gaze may roam almost unlimited. To seaward, the island of Catalina is clearly defined and the San Clementes, those sea-girt crests of the Santa Monica range, are discernible a hundred miles away. Up and down the coastal plain the view is extended to embrace an almost equal radius, while serried ranges march away to the distant horizon in endless phalanx. Looking backward toward the hinterland the eye traverses peaks and ridges, rolling in countless billows, verdant with the covering of the upper regions, and presenting a picture of grandeur and vastness not soon to be forgotten.

But it is the panorama of the land between Mt. Wilson and the ocean which is especially fascinating—where man has builded his great cities and farms of the Southland. Like a gigantic mother hen resting with her brood gathered about her, the City of the Angels lies beneath the beneficent California sky surrounded by her suburban chicks, some snuggling close to the throbbing parent body, others apparently venturing on independent forays; but all seeming to be bound to the metropolis by some intangible and subtle family relativeness. Perhaps in no other way except by aerial flight can one get the real picture of the vastness of the great city and her environs than from this loftiest adjacent lookout point. After such an experience one ceases to wonder that Los Angeles has proven her right to the title of "Fifth City."

Between the cities and towns are interlarded the orchards, farms and ranches which give an orderly checkerboard appearance to the panorama. And traversing the whole, from a distance seeming to be a hopeless tangle of threads, run the great arteries of travel connecting the centers of life, trade and industry—the fine highways of Southern California, the arteries through which pours constantly the life blood of the Empire of the West.

After night has come the view from Mt. Wilson is as impressive as is that of the day. The myriad twinkling lights, in every variety of arrangement and formation; strung out in long threads which indicate boulevards, gathered in the dense clusters of congested urban centers, strings circling geometrically or twisting in agonized contortions. Flashing lights of electric signs; crawling lights of automobiles; swinging arclights stabbing the upper air with their powerful rays—and over all a radiant diffusion hovering like the spirit of light, itself.

Mt. Wilson also offers to the visitor an opportunity to view the heavenly bodies through the telescope of the government observatory, which is a branch of the Carnegie Institution, of Washington. In this observatory is the largest telescopic lens in the world—the famous hundred-inch lens through the use of which so many profound astronomical discoveries have been given to the world.

Nearby and almost as well known as a vantage viewing point as Mt. Wilson, is Mt. Lowe, which offers much the same advantages for scene-gazing as its more eminent neighbor, overlooking the same panorama from a slightly less elevation. Mt. Lowe is ascended for a part of the way by an incline railway which is a novelty attracting many visitors, and for the remainder of the trip to near the come stiff and the movements ungraceful.

Nearly always this is accompanied by some curvature of the spine so that there is more or less visible deformity as well as loss of grace in movement.

However, here, as in other cases, there are secondary results, and the secondary results are more important than the primary ones in inflammation of joints of the spine.

The ankylosis occurs alternately in the thoracic (chest) part of the spinal column. This is the part that supports the ribs and forms the dorsal column of the chest. Ankylosis in this region means a restriction of the movement of the respiratory apparatus and some limitation of the freedom of the heart. The blood supply and the heart supply of the entire body are affected at once by the stiffening of the thoracic part of the spinal column.

In addition to this, the bony outgrowths around the articular processes press upon the spinal nerves and by constricting the blood vessels they shut off the nutrient and oxygen supply to the spinal cord itself.

The result is a profound, far-reaching disturbance affecting almost every body function.

If the ankylosis is farther down in the lumbar region, the same effect is exerted upon the spinal cord and the spinal nerves in that region, and corresponding to the effect upon the circulatory and respiratory organs we have limitations of movement of the abdominal walls and the intestines.

Thus we see that the secondary effects of spondylitis may be of the most serious character imaginable.

We have mentioned muscular atrophy in the parts beyond the affected joints. This is most marked in the hands, where it often means complete disability. Besides this localized atrophy, however, we must mention that a progressive, general, muscular atrophy often results from a disturbed nutritional and nervous condition due to arthritis, especially when it is of the type known as poly-arthritis—that is, when several or many of the joints of the body are affected. This atrophy often sets in after only a very short time if the case remains acute.

Anemia is a common result of chronic poly-arthritis. This means a reduced number of red corpuscles in the circulating fluids.

The reason why this occurs is simple.

It is well known that the chief manufactory for the production of red blood corpuscles to replace those which are worn out and destroyed by the thousands at every breath is in the red matter of bone marrow.

In protracted cases of chronic arthritis the masses of cells in the bones also become affected. The cells which should produce the corpuscles become abnormal in their responses and the corpuscles are not formed.

The disturbances of circulation and nerve function to which we have referred above are also the cause of anemia.

Some degree of anemia practically always accompanies long continued poly-arthritis.

Enlargement of the glands and of the lymph nodes is a common accompaniment of chronic poly-arthritis and may occur in mono-arthritis—that is, in arthritis of a single joint.

The spleen in particular is often enormously enlarged. The spleen is an organ which functions in some way not yet clearly understood in the removal of worn-out red blood corpuscles and possibly in supplying new ones.

Profuse sweating occurs in many cases of arthritis. This is due to a disturbance of the sympathetic nerve fibers passing over the inflamed joints and to disturbances of the reflexes.

In this connection we may mention that one symptom of poly-arthritis is a marked increase of what we call the primary reflexes, especially in the early acute stages of the disease.

In extreme cases of spondylitis and where the nutritional conditions affecting the spinal column are much disturbed, there is degeneration of some of the bundles of fiber in the cord. As a result, locomotorataxia or other disturbances of the lower limbs, or even complete paralysis, may occur.

In nearly all cases of spondylitis or acute poly-arthritis, constipation occurs. Constipation usually takes place before the arthritis begins, being one of the most common causes of the trouble. It may also be the result of arthritis which has, in turn, been set up by some other cause. For one of the two reasons, arthritis and constipation are almost invariably associated.

I have a special leaflet which goes into the subject of arthritis very thoroughly. It is available to any Times reader for a self-addressed, stamped envelope and a loose 2-cent stamp.

The general discussion of this subject will be continued in each Sunday's magazine until we have covered the entire topic from the layman's angle fairly concusively.

Watch for next Sunday's issue.

Dietetic Combinations

There are many who are constantly seeking advice on the subject of food mixtures. Some make it a fetish. They worry about every morsel that goes on their plate.

Will this mix with that or that with this? Acids and starches don't jibe! Proteins and carbohydrates should not be consumed together! Liquids should not be consumed before a meal or after a meal! Cooked foods should not be mixed with raw!

And so on we find dozens and dozens of ideas along this line.

I have never tried to go into the subject very extensively principally because most of these so-called ideas are unproved.

One writer says certain mixtures will form a dynamic explosion in the system. Another says that the same mixture is satisfactory.

I would prefer that we ignore the subject of food combinations—at least for the purpose of simplicity and easy understanding. Suffice to say that the food is good, wholesome and natural. Let it be enough that we don't overeat of too many mixtures no matter what our ideas of combinations may be.

The most perfect balance we may create is unquestionably harmful if we eat it in the form of ten and twelve-course meals. On the other hand, even the most vicious combinations—combinations which most authorities would agree are harmful—become comparatively harmless if we are moderate in our habits.

However, for those who are interested in the question, I want to present a brief summary which—although certainly not all-inclusive—gives some general ideas on the subject of foods.

Tersely speaking, we may say:

(1.) All raw foods will mix whether they be starches and acids, or otherwise. They form a harmonious mixture.

(2.) Nuts will mix with anything.

(3.) Cooked foods will harmonize with nuts, breadstuffs and baked vegetables. The same is true of raw foods.

(4.) Baked foods will blend with cooked foods, nuts, breadstuffs and raw foods.

(5.) Fresh fruits will mix with nuts, and that is all.

(6.) Dried fruits will mix with nuts and cereals. You may have raisins,

ARE YOU SUFFERING from painful affliction of the feet, broken down arches, callouses, bunions, etc?

Ready-made Arch Supports are unsatisfactory makeshift because everyone's feet is different and the diseased bones, enlarged joints and deranged ligaments complicate matters still further. We make supports from carefully prepared plaster of Paris casts and alter them to accommodate changes brought about by the wearing of the supports. In order to give relief and lasting satisfaction it is imperative that the foot be restored to as normal a shape as possible. We have an extensive experience in the correction of flat-feet, broken down arches and other deformities of the feet, and are able to promise our clients comfort and relief in every case.

It is not necessary to wear clumsy shoes with our supports; on the contrary, we often restore daintiness of appearance to feet badly deformed and unsightly.

THE QUIRKS OF A

By Achmed Abdullah

THERE had been rain earlier in the afternoon, rain gusty and cool, washing the peaks and the valleys, the fallow and the sown. Now no speck of dust was on this fine, broad world, as clean as if it had been newly created by the Lord Allah. The land was sinking into the calm which evening ever brings to our hills, and so—with the day's work done, and well done—there was music and rejoicing and throaty laughter in the hujra, the communal hall of the Kara-Bayrak tribe of Afghans, that faced the simple village mosque with its pride of stout walls and sloping roof, freshly thatched, and massive, corbel-stepped gables.

Here they were gathered: the strong, ruddy, bearded peasants, with their wives and mothers, their daughters and sisters, women of the free north, thus unveiled, high-colored, wide-bosomed—and they drank tea flavored with wild herbs, and they munched dried sunflower seeds, and swapped news of the countryside, while Akbar Jan, perched in the nook of a window, shut his eyes as he played on his seven-stringed Tatar fiddle, pumping with ecstasy from the source of melody that aye bubbled in his heart.

Ancient Central Asian lilts he thrummed: "The Wind That Shakes the Fir Trees," and "Fly, Hawk, Fly!" and "Kandahar, the King's Town."

Then somebody hummed. Somebody raised a rough voice in song.

Soon they all were singing—singing the old songs—the songs of feud; the stirring songs of heroes; the songs of foray and raid and great loot; the songs of grim strife which might remind a gray-beard of former days when he had stalked about the world with naked dagger always on hip, and which, belike, might put his wife's mind on the bitter, black grief that people are born to—until Hamdi Gur Khan, the young chief of the Kara-Bayrak, clapped his hands and there was silence.

"Enough of such tunes!" he said, and his eyes sought those of red-haired Hirfa, who would not look his way. "Play us a dance, O fiddler."

"Yes, a dance!" came the chorus.

"A dance, O son of the world!"

"Give us 'The Miller of Samarkand!"

So "The Miller of Samarkand" it was—a melody with a twist to it and a cunning quirk that set feet to tapping and supple hips to swaying and silver anklets to ringing like bells . . . and no girl there was here around whom the lads flocked more thickly, like bees to the honey pot, asking for the favor of a dance, than Hirfa, the only daughter of Mehmet Yar, the mutton butcher—and, by the same token, no girl who gave more quick and curt refusal.

She was the prettiest hereabouts, with a slim, strong height like a young pine, her hair like waves of red copper rolling over the snow of her forehead, and a riddle in her gray eyes which gave the notion to a man to look again—and never to look away; and, as to the stiff haughtiness of her, saying,

"I do not wish to dance" to this and "I do not care to dance" to that—why, there was no reason for it at all to believe the grandmothers who squatted about the walls, talking in whispers.

"Wah," angrily asked one, "what does she think she is—she with her airs and graces? Yesterday, the telling goes, our chief offered her his hand in honorable marriage—offered her the pick of his fine cattle as a wedding portion."

"And she refused?"

"Indeed!"

"The Lord His mercy!"

Hamdi Gur Khan, the chief, was telling Hirfa in an undertone that her face was like a baffling, sweet melody floating on the current of a far wind, that all Allah's mountains must have stood around to shelter her birth, and that a glance of her gray eyes was like the sudden unsheathing of a bright sword blade.

Hirfa laughed.

"Blade?" she echoed mockingly. "Ah," with a sweeping, contemptuous gesture that included half a dozen of the younger men who were near—"what do you know of blades and the brave wielding of blades? You sing of war—the old songs—Oh, yes—so boldly. But you speak softly and turn tail when steel clanks and the drums beat!"

It was the truth.

It had been the truth since, almost half a century earlier, in the days when Hamdi Gur Khan's grandfather had been chief, a Persian dervish, a holy man, had gone through these northern hills, proclaiming the gospel of peace from village to village.

"Peace, O Moslems! Let us have peace!" had been his everlasting prayer.

"I bring the word of forgiveness, O brothers!" he had preached. "The word of gentle happiness! The word of Allah the King!"

At first the villagers had sneered at this amazing creed. They had said:

"Yours is a new Allah—a weak Allah—a sickly Allah wrapped in cotton. Ours is the Allah of hard daring. Be pleased to leave our hills, O creature!"

But the Persian had not left. He had continued to proclaim the blessings of peace, had done it so fervently and so convincingly that, presently, the tribesmen had ceased from their sneering and had at last been completely carried away by the man's eloquence until, literally, they had forged their broad scimitars into plowshares and their small dirks into spikes for their harrows.

And it was as if nature, these fifty years, had echoed the prayer for peace with a message of plenty—a plenty doubly brimming since fists that had once clutched weapon hilts were now busy with orderly tasks of husbandry. Somehow, it seemed, the winters grudged to come. Grassy season after grassy season, the valleys were thick with herds and crops. The orchards were a revelry of fruit. Wild birds swarmed in the heather; a man could dip his creel into any of a dozen pools and bring out salmon or trout rolling with fat; food piled richly at the poorest peasant's very door; and it was pleasant to see, in the evening, the smoke wreaths from clean, happy hearths linger on the quiet air—to hear, later at night, the villagers, gathered in the hujra, sing the ancient ballads of their clan.

Singing these same ballads, they were. No longer living them. Here Hirfa was right—and that she alone should be regretting the days when men had followed the sword trade was not altogether strange.

For her father, Mehmet Yar, was not of the Kara-Bayrak tribe. He was not even an Afghan, but a Tatar from the far northern steppes.

A good many years earlier he had been a freebooter who had slashed through the land with a tail of thirty men and thirty grand, crooked blades—demanding and obtaining tribute. Then misfortune had overtaken him. Thrown by his horse, he had smashed his right leg; and, with blood poisoning setting in, it had been amputated at the knee.

His followers had shrugged their shoulders. What good—they had demanded—was a one-legged man when it came to riding and raiding?

So they had left him behind; and—for the love of Allah the King and because of the pity in their souls—the Kara-Bayrak, the very people whom Mehmet Yar had robbed, had given him asylum. He had married a girl of the tribe; had become the village butcher.

Today he was bent and wizened, with hardly enough strength to wield his cleaver and quarter a sheep. Today he was quite as mild as the other peasants—though his lips would curl in a thin, hard smile when he heard his daughter jeering at peace and longing for strife, as she did tonight.

"Show me a man," she exclaimed, "who does not cringe and fawn and swallow insults! Show me a man who has a fidget in his scabbard and his sword arm!"

Again she turned to the young men.

So here he stood, as big and—let us admit it — as handsome a rogue as you might meet in seven years.

Again she mocked them; accused them—nor unjustly:

"Did you not eat dirt last month and pay gold on clicking gold when the Amir's tax-gatherers came and demanded twice what they had the right to demand? And when the black-bearded captain rode through our hills, recruiting, asking you to try a trip with the Amir's soldiery to the foreign wars—ah—was there a single one amongst you who listened to the red thump of the drums and rode along with him?"

Hamdi Gur Khan was honestly puzzled.

"Why should we listen to the drums," he demanded, "when we might listen to the song of the plow—the song of the harrow—the song of lowing cattle?"

"Cattle are bred to the yoke. And the plow squeaks. And the harrow grates on my ear . . ."

"And yet we are happy, Hirfa. We are content . . ."

"Because you are cowards!" she interrupted. "And you dare to speak of love—to me! Show me the lad who is fearless, the lad who can roar, the lad who can fight—and I'll trot, like a good hound, at the heel of him . . ."

Then, suddenly, she was silent, as a loud, guttural voice came from the door:

"Here—by the teeth of Mohammed the Redeemer—is such a lad, O moon of the world! For I am the one who picks his enemies as he goes along—wah—who slays them and eats them raw—without salt or pepper or pungent onion juice!"

And the villagers were startled.

They turned.

They saw a stranger on the threshold.

He was tall, six foot of bone and brawn, apple colored, hook-nosed, blue eyed. His clothes were of leather and rough, earth brown wool. His shaggy fur cap was immense and cocked arrogantly over his left ear. He was armed with a great, straight, naked sword which he held in both hands.

So here he stood, as big and—let us admit it—as handsome a rogue as you might meet in seven years, winking a brazen eye at Hirfa and saying to her in a heavy whisper that carried clear across the room:

"Presently, O rejoicer, I shall attend to the matter of your slender red lips!"

Then he faced the tribesmen.

"I want food—nor let it be scanty," he declared in a bullying sort of trumpet. "I want drink—and the best of it. I want a couch to rest on softly. And in the morning let me have two fine horses. One to carry this lusty man who is myself and the other to carry whatever trinkets and jewels I may decide to take away from you."

He took a step forward.

"By the honor of my nose!" he announced, swelling out his chest. "'Grab-the-Purse' is my title! 'Cut-the-Throat' was my father's title! 'Blood-and Bones' is my slogan! 'Hack-and-Hew' is my creed—and 'Spare-not-the-women-and-children' my evening prayer!"

Here were amazing words—though words even more amazing were yet to come.

For, laughing with full red lips that revealed his teeth gleaming white and square against his ruddy skin, he went on:

"Once, and only once, in all my life, was I angry—really angry. And on that memorable occasion—may Allah not grant me salvation if my tongue slips on the path of truth!—seven kings died of fright, while seventy-seven strong captains howled like dogs and became insane!"

He paused—then inquired:

"And how does that strike you, O ignoble and base-born cattle?"

Not that Terek Haylar—for such was his name, and he was a Turkoman by race and a bravo, a bully, a swashbuckler by trade—had improvised this neat little speech on the spur of the moment. On the contrary, these last few years, roaming his lawless way through the mountains and plains of central Asia, he had employed it frequently; and it had always resulted in a pleasant fight—often in pleasant loot—and occasionally in wounds to which various scars on his body bore witness.

"Come on!" he invited jovially. "Who is for a bit of a row—with steel—or fist, if you prefer?"

And he rolled up his sleeves; he flexed his hairy, muscle-packed arms; and he was utterly taken aback when, instead of yells of defiance and weapons leaping to eager hands, a clansman salaamed and their chief said:

"Welcome, O son of Adam! Roast mutton you shall have—and fruit—and no lack of milk . . . and, in the

Care of the Body

By Philip M. Lovell, N.D.

High Blood Pressure

In order for you to understand high blood pressure, I want you to think of the blood and its vessels.

There are three kinds of blood: Red blood, blue blood and white blood. Red blood flows through the arteries, blue through the veins and white through the lymph channels.

It is estimated that every individual has ten thousand miles of blood vessels ranging from the giant aorta to the tiny capillaries—one twenty-five-thousandth of an inch. The channels of the capillaries are so small they can be seen only through a microscope.

Blood vessels have three walls. The outside wall is a protective one of tough, fibrous substance. The inner wall is elastic, and when these elastic blood vessels become fibrous they, of course, harden. In other words, the vessels have lost their elasticity. The pulse is the contraction and expansion of a surface artery. Naturally, when the blood vessels lose their elasticity and become hard, they cannot contract and expand so readily.

The elastic tissues of the blood vessels become hardened, due to the infiltration of mineral salts. The poisons saturating the blood get into the elastic tissues and harden the artery wall.

Which foods deposit these acids and salts in the blood stream in such a form that they can be taken up by the blood vessels?

The foods that create high blood pressure are principally meats, fish, eggs, alcohol, all alcoholic by-products, refined starches, refined sugars and stimulant soft drinks. These are the principal diet habits which precede the disease.

Habits play a very important part, also age. It is not usual to find high blood pressure in the young. To have a blood pressure of two hundred is abnormal at any age. But there is a certain increase with age.

What are the habits usually found in an individual having high blood pressure?

A sedentary life, lack of activity, nervous tension, overeating, anger, insufficient sleep and sex abuses with its waste of internal secretions discharged again and again.

A woman having high blood pressure should, during the first and second day of menstruation, go on a complete fast or on a limited fruit diet. She should eat less than ever before for during the period of flow there is the greatest congestion.

The blood vessels have all that they can carry. Therefore, decrease the burden by a fast.

A simple analogy would be a reservoir filled to the brim. What would be the danger if more were added to it? It would overflow, or if confined, burst.

For women suffering from high blood pressure and who are still in the menstruation cycle, I invariably recommend a fast of two or three days per month during the period of flow.

When does apoplexy occur?

Apoplexy is the bursting of a blood vessel—usually a hemorrhage in the brain.

You will find this invariably occurs after a party, a large assemblage of some kind, an anniversary or some other form of excitement.

Life for the high blood pressure sufferer should be calm and quiet—peaceful and uneventful.

He should avoid extremes in temperature.

In addition, he should not live in a high altitude which might cause the ears, throat and nose to bleed. The best altitude is sea level with a nice cool climate such as anywhere along our coast.

Other precautions should include the conservation of vital resources—the nervous as well as the physical.

Other precautions which are just as important are shock from extreme heat or cold. There should be no cold baths.

There should be little exercise. In some cases there should be none at all.

The patient should "take it easy."

Tepid baths are advisable. Gradually the water may be made cooler but there should be absolutely no shocks of any kind.

Sun baths are very good provided, of course, the patient is gradually accustomed to them.

A state of pregnancy is undesirable where there is high blood pressure. The strain, shock, stress and exhaustion are dangerous and liable to cause eclampsia and convulsions.

I have a free leaflet on the subject which is available to any Times reader for a self-addressed, stamped envelope and a loose 2-cent stamp.

Arthritis in the Spine

Article No. 3

An inflammation affecting the joints between the vertebrae in the spinal column is called syondylitis.

For several reasons this particular type of arthritis desires special discussion.

It must be borne in mind that there are two kinds of articulations between the vertebrae. First, between the large masses that we call the body of the vertebrae there are articular fibro-elastic cartilages. These are just elastic cushions—something like pads. They are not to be thought of as joints in the ordinary sense of the word, since there is no sliding movement between the bones.

In addition to these there are, between what we call the articular processes, two joints, surfaces of bone covered by smooth elastic cartilage and lined with membrane to lubricate it with synovial fluid. There are two sliding joints similar to those found between bones in other parts of the body.

Inflammation attacks both kinds of articulations. Because the range of movement of these joints is considerably less than of most other joints in the body, the progress of inflammation, once started, is more rapid here than elsewhere.

Because of the entirely different texture of the bone itself, exostosis—that is, outgrowths of bone—occurs here very much more readily than in other parts of the body.

The first and most obvious result of ankylosis (immovability) of vertebrae is the limitation of body movement. The spinal column, which is elastic and flexible, becomes stiffened and the movements of the trunk are limited. The carriage and posture of the Individual be-

When All Else Fails, Simple Gland Operation REVITALIZES Body

Clayton E. Wheeler, M.D.
Former Stanford House Surgeon, San Francisco Hospital, Clinical Instructor Stanford University, Assistant Gynecologist, San Francisco Hospital.

As if by magic are the results had by many closely following the simple, knifeless gland operation as developed and applied by Dr. Clayton E. Wheeler, according to the report given by hundreds. Volumes of letters from former sufferers may be read at Dr. Wheeler's Los Angeles (2173 Wilshire Blvd.) and San Francisco offices.

San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Dr. Wheeler:

It isn't possible for me to put into words the marvelous results I have had from the gland transplantation at your hands. My improvement is one of the greatest satisfactions of my entire life. For years I have been a victim of insomnia due to an alarming nervous state. My heart was almost constantly in palpitation, and I would faint when excited a little more than usual.

Most of my life I have been aenemic and too many ills to mention, beset my days and nights. I am so thankful to be able to say that since my last treatment I have improved to a point where I expect to know very soon what is meant by normal health, something I know little about.

Should any one wish to see me, please do not hesitate to call. I feel it my duty to aid any sufferer who is suffering as I once did.

In gratitude,
(MRS.) J. A. NIELSON.

FEET HURT

Our method of making and adjusting arch supports and foot appliances has been endorsed by many prominent people of this and other states. This NEW SYSTEM of foot correction is years ahead of any other method that we know of, for it relieves foot pains in many instances almost instantly, and gives permanent relief. Our feather weight supports overcome fallen arches, swollen ankles, run-over heels, weak feet, flat foot, painful heels, pains in the knee, leg and back; prevents corns, bunions, etc. The following are extracts from a few of the many testimonials that we have received from grateful people.

May I express my appreciation of the success you have made in correcting my wife's foot trouble?
FRIEND W. RICHARDSON, Berkeley, Calif.
(Ex-Governor Richardson of Calif.)

You have done wonders for me. I cannot thank you sufficiently
DR. A. N. WARD, A.M., D.D., LL.D.
Pres. Western Maryland College.

It is a pleasure for me to thank you for the effective service you have given me. When I came to you my arches were completely broken down, walking was a torture. The whole system was badly affected by the condition of my feet. After the first visit I grew better, and have continued to improve. I realize that my case was of long standing and thus I am so much more confident of your method and arch supports. I consider it a duty to let sufferers know what he can do for them.
FATHER J. McDONALD,
St. Vincent Church, 621 Adams St., Los Angeles

Many of the inmates of the St. Joseph Hospital and St. Anne Academy have been relieved of their foot pains by his modern method of foot correction.
RIGHT REV. FATHER LETERME,
Bishops Palace, Victoria.

I take this opportunity of expressing my sincere appreciation for the instant relief obtained from the pair of arch supports recently secured from you. I wish to commend most highly your system to all foot sufferers.
ALAN S. PEARCE,
Secy. correspondence course, Bible Institute of Los Angeles.

Not only is instant relief given but also permanent correction is obtained.

WILD GIRL'S HEART

Daughter of a Tatar, Hirfa's Soul Revolted Against the Peace-Loving Nature of the Kara-Bayraks; Then the Rogue Terek, With His Handsome Face and Slick Tongue, Came to Carry Her Away morning, two horses of your own choosing!"

Terek did not believe his ears.

"You—" he stammered—"you mean it?"

—"Indeed!"

It was a new experience, a disagreeable experience—and it roused Terek worse than insults or taunts might have done. For, somehow, it took the fun out of the adventure, the high, keen thrill . . .

"Is there not one amongst you, not a single one," he asked, with a queer note of humility in his voice, "who will oblige me with a small fight?"

"No!" said Hamdi Gur Khan.

"No, no!" came the tribesmen's chorus, while the priest asserted sonorously: "We believe in peace—and praise the Lord's manyfold bounties!"

A reply which left Terek Haydar helpless and his sword unoccupied, since it was not in his simple, crude code to strike those who did not resist; and so he had to be satisfied with a final volley of salty abuse, winding up:

"Ah—all the curses of the black rocks on you—and the curses of the gray winds, O cowards!"

"Cowards!" echoed Hirfa, facing the Kara-Bayrak with blazing eyes. "Wah—your cowardice is a mock throughout Afghanistan and High Tatary . . ."

"Throughout the world!" chimed in Terek. "Almost it is in my mind to take my two feet away from here—to leave you to stew and bubble in the evil sauce of your disgrace. But," he sighed, "I have traveled the many miles. I am weary. Bring food and drink. And, after I have eaten my fill go away all of you except—" and he walked up to Hirfa —"you, O heart of three roses!"

He smiled at her.

"I like you," he declared. "I like you fire! Such a girl you are—with hair like red silk and eyes that shine and skin smooth as a trout's back."

His ill temper disappeared. For he saw Hirfa blush, saw her beautiful; and he continued:

"Did you not say that you would follow the fearless lad—the lad who can roar—the lad who can fight? By the Prophet —me you shall follow! Tomorrow you and I shall take the road together—and the sweet road it will be for me with your hand in mine!"

He took her in his arms. He was about to kiss her—when, suddenly, she tore herself free. She struck him across the face with her small, hard fist.

"I hate you!" she cried.

He rubbed his cheek.

"Do you indeed?" he demanded.

He caught her again. He held her, struggling, at arm's length.

"And yet I have the notion," he went on, "that some day you will be warm and friendly to the crook of my elbow—that some day you will be begging me for a kiss of my mouth!"

He let her go then. She sobbed.

"I hate you—hate you!" she repeated.

And she turned; she ran from the hjura, while Terek laughed carelessly.

So did the tribesmen laugh. Thin was their laughter and cruel.

For here was this haughty, willful girl, who had refused the best and richest of them and had called them cowards, being humbled in her turn. Allah—they thought—there was justice in the world . . . and they made the stranger welcome. They brought him meat and fruit, and milk and wheaten bread, and a bottle or two of treasured Persian wine; and, later on, they squatted in a circle and listened, while Terek, reclining at his ease, well fed and temporarily at peace with the world, told them tales.

Tales about himself and his prowess.

And some of these tales were true, and some—may the Lord forgive him his trespasses!—were not, although he preceded each and every one with a resounding, "May my right hand wither if I lie!" and a hard look around the group of clansmen as if to warn them:

"Who doubts my word, dies the death!"

Thus, if doubt they did, they said never a word, winked never an eye—not even when he related how he was the seventh son of a seventh son and, miraculously, had been born on the seventh day of the seventh moon; how, with his mother's milk not yet dry on his lips, he had tamed a stallion that had thrown five strong nomads and killed two; how, two months after his first tooth had come, he had handled sword and dagger with the skill of an expert; how, in all the proud cities he visited, silken ladders dropped from screened balconies and henna-stained fingers tossed roses at his feet; how, single-handed, he had gone into Persia, levying rowdy war and conquering the land between border and border; and how—a nickname which he invented on the spur of the moment—he was known from Delhi to Kandahar as "that bright disaster."

"Wah!" he declared, finishing the second bottle of Persian wine—"you might as well try and dam the waters of the seven seas when Terek is under way to slay and raid and loot! For battered I am and lusty—hard-bitten and tough —crafty in strife—never wearied in crimson adventure!"

Thus far into the night. Far into the night the villagers' applause drifting out of the hujra, while, in her father's house, Hirfa sobbed and sobbed, repeating to herself:

"I hate him!"

Ah—she thought—he had taken her in his arms; had offered her his kisses; had offered them, doubtless, for the coarse sport and jest of it—as he fought for the coarse sport and jest of it.

How cruel he was—and his arms so strong—and his hair so curly! And—for there were the strange quirks of a wild girl's heart—she wondered if his hair was soft to the touch.

Early the next day, leading two horses, Hamdi Gur Khan came to the hujra where Terek had slept.

"The finest beasts we have," he said.

But Terek replied:

"Take them back. I shall stay here."

"Oh? How long?"

"Maybe a day. Maybe a week. Unless," with a wolfish smile, "I am not welcome?"

"As welcome as rain after drought!" was the hasty rejoinder.

"Which is as it should be. By the way —that girl last night—what is her name?" —

"Hirfa."

"And she lives where?"

The chief was jealous. He was angry. But fear, as he looked at Terek's reckless sword, conquered both, and he answered:

"Over yonder—at the end of the village—the small gray house."

"Good!"

And Terek turned on his heel and, a few minutes later, bowed to Hirfa.

"You have changed your mind?" he asked.

"About what?"

"About this business of my kisses—and yours."

"Why should I kiss you?"

"No reason," was the calm reply, "except my desire."

She blushed, grew furious at him; more furious at herself for blushing.

She hated him—she thought—hated his great strength, his great height, his great boasting; hated the way he cocked his bonnet and the way he dragged his sword; hated his nose, his eyes, his curly hair. And yet his eyes—as he stared at her—how cloudy-blue they were, like rain on the glens and the wind blowing! And his hair—she wondered as she had wondered last night—was it soft to the touch?

Oh—soft as silk or hard as granite—what did she care? She hated him—hated him—and she said so in a loud voice:

"I hate you!"

"Why?"

"Because you—you are a ruffian—cruel, coarse, lawless . . ."

"And bold, and fearless! And did you not say yesterday that you would follow the bold, fearless lad?"

"Even in the matter of a bold, fearless lad a girl may have her choice."

"You cannot choose better than the best! You cannot choose better than myself, O delight!"

Again, as on the preceding evening, he took her in his arms. Again she struggled, freed herself, struck him across the face and cried:

"I hate you!"

She ran into the house; she slammed the door; and she would have been surprised had she peered through the window and taken a look at him.

For, just then, there was about him little of the tough man of the sword. Puzzled, he seemed, and hurt and unhappy and rather boyish as, swiftly, at that moment, the knowledge came to him that she was to him the treasure of all the women on earth . . . and morosely, he said to himself:

"I love her—but she does not love me. My heart burns with the flaming torches of passion—but her heart is as cold as clay. And there you have a bleak, bitter truth for a bleak, bitter day!"

Yet it was typical of him that his humility did not last long; that, almost at once, his cheerful mood returned and he thought:

"Wah—round and round this broad world, where is there my equal? I shall ask her again—this afternoon."

He did—to receive the same reply:

"I hate you!"

To ask the same question the next day and the next and the next until, exasperated, she shouted:

"Do you not understand our good Afghan language, O great buffalo? I hate you! Never my lips to yours! Never —never—never!"

He shrugged his shoulders. He said:

"Other girls have told me so in the past—and I taught them to love me—and I did not find the teaching unpleasant nor they the learning. Here, until you change your mind, must I remain—for which, I am sure, yours tribesmen will bless neither you nor me."

He was right.

It was not that the Kara-Bayrak grudged him food or drink or bed. What did worry them—what, at least, worried the chief, the priest, the older men and the women—was the fact that Terek's savage tales were beginning to find a certain echo in the hearts of the younger tribesmen when at night, in the hujra, he announced boastingly:

"It is easy to conquer. Easy to help yourself to the pick of the world. See me now"—standing up straight—"a desperate man if ever there lived one—and ready to build me an empire. And what do I need? No more than seven strong men to follow me."

"Only seven?" wonderingly.

"Aye! With seven men, on a fine, foggy night, surprising the garrison at the gate and putting it to the sword, I can take the town of Balkh, four days from here, and sweat gold out of the paunchy bazaar merchants and levy from their wives a toll of honeyed kisses. Being victorious, I shall gather there other warriors. Perhaps a hundred. Enough to attack Kandahar. Kandahar falls, I treat it generously, exacting no more than a thousand camel loads of jewels—and, out of gratitude and admiration, every proper male of that town will follow my banner. Seven hundred men then! At least seven hundred tall men riding to battle! And—ah"—his imagination grew wings; he threw his chin up and stamped with his foot—"I cross the border. India is before me. India trembles. I conquer Peshawar. I sweep Delhi and the splendid places of the south into my breeches. I confer titles

The Trail Blazer Seeks Solitude

Owner of Mullet Island in the Imperial Valley Has Added Valuable Data to California History in Reblazing Epochal Trails.

By Mary Timpe Smith

SPARE, taciturn, absorbed in his research work on Mullet Island, Capt. Charles E. Davis is a picturesque figure, six feet four, with the manner and bearing of a plainsman; a true westerner who wears easily, and with an air of distinction, the big hat, high boots and flannel shirt which mark the outdoor man. Building a dam, his boots caked with mud, his eyes half closed from months of squinting in the desert sun—writing a book, painting pictures, his is a colorful personality not soon forgotten.

A man who has contributed much to the historical research work of California, he has added to the annals of Utah, Nevada and Missouri as well in blazing anew and remarking the trail of the ill-fated Reed-Donner party and other early overland trails of the forty-niners who started for California in covered wagons. He was instrumental in having set aside for a historical landmark, the blacksmith shop at Independence, Mo., where many of the covered wagons were built.

Data and relics were discovered in Capt. Davis's trail marking that will change certain long-believed records and are of extreme importance to the history of the Donner party and to the history of California. Capt. Davis shows with pardonable pride the letters of acknowledgment for his services which have been written to him by the curator of the State Museum at Sacramento.

He is modest, almost reticent, about his experiences, and only by drawing him out can he be persuaded to show the series of photographs which show, step by step, the romantic fascination of reblazing the trails which were marked, alas, by sorrows and sufferings of the forty-niners. Photographs which show huge wagon wheels and the heads of faithful oxen where they perished—photographs which were perforce taken before any of the relics were touched, lest they crumble instantly. This precaution was always necessary in his trail work, for when these bleached, chalky bones were examined, they turned to dust and powder. Other photographs that show the ancient, deeply cut wagon tracks for miles, tracks which at times fade away and are lost altogether, and here is where the instinct and the skill of the trail-blazers were brought into play, in piecing together what was at best but a fragmentary record of the brave crossing of unknown country.

Capt. Davis has album after album of these remarkable pictures, the films of which were all donated to the State Museum, and the newspaper clippings of his activities fill another scrapbook easily.

He has owned Mullet Island since 1914, is its sole inhabitant save one, and lives there the year around with his assistant, Emile J. Cote, experimenting with the salt beds, the mineral mud baths, and the paints from the boiling Indian Paint Pots, writing a book of research on the history of Imperial Valley between times.

He keeps cool in summer in a screened room on the highest peak of the island, where his cot perched among the rocks catches any breeze that blows. He has the appearance of a man who would be little ruffled by changes in weather or any other hardships—hard as nails, a kindly, inscrutable hardness that asks odds of no man.

Small wonder that he is intrigued by his strange home in its setting of bubbling pools, sulphur and salt deposits, craters and mud geysers. Mullet Island is a tiny stranded promontory made up of slate-colored, shale-like rocks which stand on edge as if left there by some half-finished upheaval of Nature. It was formerly under the Salton Sea, but is now several miles from the water line, and finds itself no longer a true island. Its summit is 189 feet below sea level. Waters which surrounded it to the depth of forty feet as late as 1915, and made it inaccessible save by motor boats plying across six or seven miles of the Salton Sea, have evaporated and receded, leaving the island in the midst of land over which automobiles may pass, yet seeping in a manner to make one wonder what strange trick Nature intends to play here next.

Capt. Charles E. Davis

Capt. Davis's home on its summit contains a varied collection of relics. He has many of the weird-shaped rocks found on the west side of Imperial Valley near Kane Springs, also petrified wood found near Salton Sea, with the chopping marks plainly showing, made by a stone ax or implement of crude design. Iron oxides of various colors are among his specimens, containing highly colored pigments in yellow, red and maroon, which the Indians used for war paints. The oxides are obtained by heating and drying the yellow clay from Mullet Island in iron barrels. When dry, they are ready for use as a coloring for paint.

Capt. Davis is constantly experimenting with the salt beds which lie on one side of the island. The presence of salt is not so strange here, if one remembers that when the Colorado River broke into the Imperial Valley in 1904 and formed the beautiful Salton Sea, the Liverpool Salt Works were completely inundated. Geology tells us that an inland sea once covered a large portion of Imperial Valley, which is below sea level, and water marks along the hills which skirt the valley bear this out. Hence a deposit of salt said to have been already present on the land from ancient subterranean times, turned to brine the waters of the Colorado when it overflowed into the valley and formed this blue inland sea over forty miles long.

Capt. Davis received an inspiration for naming the island, from an incident which followed in the wake of these happenings. The fresh water fish had all died in the Salton Sea, whose waters were so different from those of the Colorado to which they had been accustomed. Then one day, he captured a fish of the species known as the mullet, which had evidently chosen for its mode of transportation from the nearest ocean waters the capacious bill of a pelican, which was caught the same day by Capt. Davis. This huge bird, as well as the first mullet caught off the shore of the island, has been preserved by taxidermy and may be seen in Capt. Davis's collection of rare objects. From that time on the fish existed in the Salton Sea's waters, growing to immense size, and the island was named in its honor.

The Indian Paint Pots at this spot furnish further mysterious cause for speculation. What causes them to boil and seethe and bubble as they lie, a series of pools of vividly colored red, yellow and blue muds, intensely hot and pigmented with colors so pure they can be mixed with any ordinary paint medium such as oil or water and used without further preparation as paint?

Mullet Island's diminutive area (it is less than a mile long and perhaps half that wide) contains more fascinating geological phenomena than the entire vast Imperial Valley in which it lies.

Its boiling mud geysers, history informs us, were encountered by Drake, Le Comte and Coronado centuries ago, and there are many unproven theories as to the cause of the steam and pressure which underline the island. What terrific force causes the entire island to be under a pressure of 1100 pounds per square inch at all times? Little is known of the geysers of mud and steam which are constantly changing in size and appearance and which are set amidst farming country to which they seem strangely alien, save that in ancient times the Indians, according to legend, pushed into them sorcerers and others whom they wished to put to a horrible death.

Capt. Davis has a collection of Indian relics at Exposition Park in this city. He has had an active and useful career but at the present time he is concerned not at all with anything save the developing of the natural resources on Mullet Island, to which he lends the added charm of a picturesque and hospitable owner.

Capt. Davis has converted his home into a museum for pictures and geological relics of Mullet Island.

GOOD SHORT STORIES

Compiled for The Times Sunday Magazine

Mistaken

One morning at the Breakfast Club, Mayor Porter of Los Angeles happened to make the very natural remark that it was a little chilly. The easterner at his side looked at the Mayor in amazement and said:

"My gracious! I thought you Californians believed you had perfect weather out here and yet I find you, the Mayor of the great city of Los Angeles, actually complaining."

"You're wrong," defended the Mayor. "Yes, you're as wrong as Father Patrick.

"Father Patrick, you know, had just presided at a funeral and when it was over, went to the home of the deceased's relatives to condole with them. After the usual commonplaces, he turned to Mike and asked:

"'Tell me, Mike, just what complaint was it that carried off your poor mother-in-law?'

"'Complaint, did yez say?' asked Mike in astonishment. 'Sure, now Father Pathrick, there was no complaint at all, at all. Sure, everyone was satisfied.'"

Etiquette

Frank Holborrow, the well-known Pacific Coast swimming master who expects to have a championship team in the coming Olympic games, was standing on the pier at Long Beach when a young woman out in the surf began calling for help. Frank was about to plunge into the sea and rescue here when he noted, not a yard away, a life guard nonchalantly smoking.

"That girl out there is drowning," yelled Frank. "Why don't you get busy and rescue her!"

"Well, to tell you the truth," said the life guard with an embarrassed cough, "It would hardly be good form. You see, I rescued her yesterday."

Disillusioned

Hollywood is having a great laugh over a certain actor who had acquired a very spiffy English accent in order to play good parts in the talkies.

Just a week or so ago, he listened in on one of the international broadcasts at which the Prince of Wales was the chief speaker. The Prince's accent was not in the least like the actors, and the actor himself was one of the first to notice it. He pondered for a moment and then asked anxiously:

"Bah Jove, I wondah if the Prince really meets the best people?"

Fussy

Oscar Vitt, manager of the Hollywood Baseball Club, which won the Coast League championship from Los Angeles, has been an ardent booster in the cause of winning the women to baseball. The attendance had been quite gratifying and thus it was with a certain degree of consternation that he overheard a young woman in the lobby of the Biltmore tell her girl friend that she preferred a matinee to a ball game.

"Pardon me for butting in," said Oscar, doffing his cap, "but I'm the manager of the Hollywood ball team. I overheard your remark and in the interests of baseball I venture to ask why you prefer a matinee to a ball game."

"That's easy," smiled the girl. "You see, at the matinee, I'm sure there'll be a happy ending."

Rebellion

It was during a domestic economy lesson in a Cleveland High School that the instructor remarked:

"Most men insist that the girls they marry must be good cooks."

"Well, that lets me out," snapped a girl in the back row, "because I don't intend to get married to any fellow who isn't able to hire a cook."

Helpless

"Eternal vigilance is the price of beauty," declares Fanny Ward, whose perpetual youth is the marvel of the feminine world. "And it's how you look, not what you say or do not say, that counts.

"Yet the world is filled with deluded women who think that by lying about their ages, they are deceiving anyone. One day, while taking tea at the Plaza, I heard an obviously middle-aged woman say:

"'You know, Bess never tells anyone her age.'

"'Yes, I've noticed that,' replied her friend, 'but her age is beginning to tell on her!'"

Holiday

It was just before the American Legion Convention in Boston that Al Sheehy, chairman of the insurance committee, had to appear before Judge David Dillon in the Superior Court only to find that the case was to be postponed for one week.

"But that will bring it right in the middle of the American Legion Convention," yelped Sheehy in consternation. "I ask Your Honor to postpone the case until after the convention is over."

"Request granted," declared Judge Dillon promptly and added:

"I will also state that this is the best reason for a postponement that has been advanced in my court for many months."

Baffled

The uproar that has been occasioned by the recent publication of a French Treaty emphasizes the fact that the province of a newspaper is to give the news—if it can get it, and recalls a story they tell about James W. Gerard, former German Ambassador and known as "the man who defied the Kaiser."

Gerard had come to town to speak in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan and as it was at the time when his book "My Four Years in Germany" was the talk of the country, pictures and interviews were essential to the local papers. But Gerard had eluded the reporters.

One newshound, however, stuck to the trail and was finally told by a friendly hotel clerk that it might be worth while to rap gently on the door of Parlor A.

In less time than it takes to tell it, Judge Gerard heard the faint tap tap and without opening the door asked: "Who is it?"

"Newspaper man," replied the reporter, pencil poised in hand.

"Oh, just put them under the door," said Gerard.

Useful

Fannie Hurst was speaking to a class of literary students on the topic of writing for a living and in skimming over the field, touched on the society page of the Sunday newspaper.

"I have never yet met a real society person who reads it," she said with a smile, "but on the other hand, the shop girl devours it avidly and the stenographer raves over it. Therefore, if you aspire to become a society editor, remember for whom you are writing.

"Of course," she added, "they tell me many a high pressure business man reads it too, in order to find out what his family is doing."

Hardship

"It is all nonsense to say that modern children, that is, the average modern child, is brought up with the same care as the child of a generation ago." Thus spoke Lady Astor, a transplanted American who has decided views on almost every subject.

"I was talking to a young matron of a very old English family. The topic was child training, and I remarked:

"'I suppose you keep up the custom of kissing the children goodnight.'

"'Gracious no!' gasped the young mother. 'I couldn't think of waiting up for them to come in!'"

Repentent

"Judges should not grant divorces for the trivial motives that they do," said Bishop Maguire. "It is nothing more nor less than an insult to the church which sanctioned and consecrated the marriage.

"Most of the quarrels that bring people into the divorce courts could be happily settled if the combatants, if I may so call them, were ordered to kiss and make up and go home and try to get along together.

"Too many of these matrimonial battlers are like Mrs. Black. Mrs. Black, you know, had had a petty quarrel with her husband and in a flood of tears stated that she was going back to mother and never, never coming home again.

"'All right,' cried the exasperated husband taking out his wallet, 'how much is the fare?'

"'W-w-well,' stammered the wife, 'that depends on whether you want to give me enough for the return trip or not.'"

Excused

President Aquilla Chamlee of the Bessie Tift College has finally come to the conclusion of Mr. Shakespeare, that there is nothing in a name and attributes his discovery to an amusing incident that occurred when he was visiting a boys' school.

"I had been putting some questions to one of the classes," he says, "and somehow my attention wandered again and again to a handsome little fellow with eager eyes and curly black hair. The little chap had that mysterious something which we have elected to call 'It.' So I nodded to him and asked:

"'Sonny, do you know the Ten Commandments?'

"'No, sir,' replied the boy promptly.

"'You mean to tell me you don't know the Ten Commandments?" I asked in astonishment. 'Why, you ought to know them as well as you know your own name! By the way, what is your name?'

"'Moses!' replied the lad, and I confess I had to join in the laughter that ensued."

Hampered

And now comes the story of the father who had asked his little daughter to go and get his slippers. To his intense surprise the little one looked him straight in the eye and said: "Daddy, I'm not going to do it."

The surprised father immediately took the rebellious one to task, lecturing her sternly on the iniquity of saying 'I won't do it,' to her parent. He thought he had made certain that she would not misunderstand him and repeat the offense. But when he had finished the little one looked at him with a puzzled frown and asked:

"Well, daddy, when I'm not going to do something, what must I say?"

Error

According to a Holland journalist, there is at least one person in Europe who is almost happy. It is the ex-Kaiser of Germany. According to the journalist, who interviewed the fallen monarch at the time he petitioned to have certain land holdings in Africa restored to his family, William not only reads the daily papers but takes keen interest in Germany's troubles with the Reds.

"Ah! It is like the husband and wife and the family friend," he chuckled. "These three, you know, were having a jolly party but eventually the husband and wife had a falling out which culminated when the husband hurled a heavy brass paperweight with good speed but no control. The flying missle therefore missed the wife and hit the family friend who had remained the innocent bystander during the quarrel.

"Instantly the husband was filled with contrition and concern and dropping on his knees beside the injured friend exclaimed:

"'Forgive me, forgive me! I have hurt you—and I only meant to kill my wife.'"

Characteristic

A. B. Conrad, in the memoirs of his father, the late Joseph Conrad, tells many amusing stories that concern an antiquated automobile that might almost be regarded as a family pet.

"His confidence in that dilapidated vehicle was sublime," writes A. B., "and he never doubted that it would take him anywhere he wished to go—and back again. It was one of the old, cranking variety, there being no self-starters at that time and on one occasion father exclaimed:

"Why, this darn thing acts so mulish as to be almost human."

Educate

Dr. Brougher, the Boston pastor who went to the Hub from Los Angeles, declared that education is the best cure for all ills, whether they be physical or mental, religious or commercial.

"Yes, education applies even to marriage," he added, "and should be a vital factor in the selection of a wife or husband. I believe much as did the American millionaire who had been approached by a young foreigner who boasted a title but no cash.

"'No,' said the millionaire, 'I have no personal objection to your marrying my daughter. It's strictly up to her, so go and ask her.

"'Frankly, you are not my idea of a son-in-law and I have a hunch you won't be, but as I said before, I won't interfere.

"'You see, I've given my daughter a good education and taught her to read the newspapers and if she doesn't know enough by this time to say 'No,' why, then, she doesn't deserve any better luck.'"

Caught

"It's a funny thing," remarked Stan Mitchell, secretary of the Auto Club of Southern California, "but most of the complaints we get about the crush of Sunday traffic come from people who do not need to drive on Sunday. Just why these people plunge into Sunday traffic when they are so fortunate as to have six less crowded days at their disposal, is beyond me.

"In one case, however, I know it was the wife. Her husband did not care for Sunday driving but she insisted, until the day came when he absolutely refused to go unless she did the driving. To this she agreed.

"They went to the beach, had lunch, went in bathing and all went well until, on the way home, wifey wilted under the traffic strain and pleaded for her husband to take the wheel.

"'Not on your life,' he grinned. 'In the first place it is just the lesson you need and in the second place, in order to be sure you learned it, I made it a point to leave my driver's license at home. Now and forever more, my motto is:

"'If you must go riding on Sunday you must also do the driving.'"

The Pace That Thrills

By Weare Holbrook

The headlong rush of city life—waiting for a red light to turn green.

TO ANYONE who spends the best part of each day waiting for a red light to turn green all this talk about the headlong rush of city life must sound rather spurious. The popular conception of a metropolitan street scene is a cinematographic swirl of action, a human stampede in which the weak are trampled or thrust aside. Actually it resembles the old game of "statues," in which the players dance around in a circle and then stop suddenly at an unexpected signal as if petrified by the glance of Medusa, rigidly maintaining grotesque attitudes until a second signal releases them. The progress of a pedestrian on Broadway is not even a slow-motion "movie." It is a series of magic-lantern slides.

Nevertheless, the belief that the city is a sort of mechanical madhouse persists. Psychologists gather appalling data concerning its effect upon the inhabitants, nerve specialists fatten on harassed office workers with buzzers on the brain, heavy-eyed executives boast of the height of their buildings and their blood pressure and playboys of the eastern world totter out of night clubs at 4 a.m. for a round of golf on artificial grass beneath a synthetic sun.

They are, in the words of the lady poet, burning their candles at both ends —not because they want to, but because it is expected of them. They realize that they are playing to an audience of millions of outlanders who have a preconceived idea that urban life is swift, strenuous and sinful. They may yawn behind their masks of nervous intensity and doze a little when they think no one is looking, but with all their stepping out they never step out of character.

The metropolis has always been regarded as an effervescent sink of iniquity by those who gaze at it from afar. Distant dives look deeper and the syndicated columns of Broadway gossip lend enchantment to the view. When Aunt Beulah and Uncle Angus arrived in New York to spend a few days with the Jessups Aunt Beulah's first question was, "Tell me, have they raided the Upidee Club yet?"

"The Upidee Club?" said Mr. Jessup, puzzled. "Where's that?"

"It's in Thirty-eighth street," Uncle Angus informed him. "You can get real absinthe there—better than any in Paris."

Mr. Jessup knew that Uncle Angus had never been in New York before, much less Paris. "Where did you find out about it?" he asked.

"In the Parkersburg Courier-Blade," Aunt Beulah explained. "They have a column called 'Manhattan Inch by Inch.' We always read it every day, but we missed it yesterday on account of being on the train. I wonder if Fifi McGonk won her suit! Did you see anything about her in the papers, today?"

"Why, no," said Mrs. Jessup. 'Who is she?"

"My dear, do you mean to say you have not heard of Fifi McGonk?" Aunt Beulah raised her hands in horror; the same gesture, Mrs. Jessup remembered, that she used to employ when discussing the new rector's wife back in Parkersburg. "Fifi is suing a big glue manufacturer for twenty grand," continued Aunt Beulah gently. "She claims he socked her on the button and then took it on the lam with a Harlem torso tosser who used to be the common-law wife of Herbert ('Sherbet') Gnatz, the snuff racketeer. He shot her at Saratoga and there was a lot about it in the papers. Don't you remember, Fanny?"

"No," said Mrs. Jessup, "I'm afraid I don't."

Aunt Beulah seemed disappointed. "Well," she sighed, "I suppose there's so much going on here that a thing like that really doesn't make much impression on you New Yorkers. You get blase."

Uncle Angus and Aunt Beulah spent three days in New York. On the first day the Jessups took them to the Metropolitan Museum, Old Trinity, the Aquarium and the Statue of Liberty. It was a strenuous expedition, and by 6 o'clock Mr Jessup was looking forward to the time when he could sit down on the edge of the bed and take off his shoes.

On their way up town from the Battery Uncle Angus said, "What show are we going to see tonight, Bert?"

"Well, I didn't get tickets for anything tonight," replied Mr. Jessup. "You see, Fanny and I thought you probably would want to turn in early and rest up a little after your trip."

"Now, see here, Bert," said Uncle Angus. "You and Fanny needn't give up your night life on our account. We won't be here long, but while we're here we intend to keep right up with the procession. Yes, siree! I was wondering if mebbe we might not take in 'The Pink Meadows,' but I suppose you folks wouldn't care about seeing it again."

"We haven't seen it yet ourselves," said Mrs. Jessup. "We tried to get tickets for it once, but they said they were sold out eight weeks in advance. It's very popular."

"You can always get tickets for any show if you know the ropes," said Uncle Angus. "I was reading about a place on Eighth avenue, back of a Greek restaurant, where they have tickets for everything."

Mr. Jesup took the hint and explored the lower reaches of Hell's Kitchen, where he secured four tickets for $26.40. It was not until they arrived at the theater at 8:45 that he discovered the tickets were for the following night. So he steered his little theater party to a motion picture cathedral. There they spent one hour waiting in line behind a plush covered rope and two hours hopping in and out of their seats in response to signals from the ushers.

The next day Mr. Jessup took Uncle Angus to see the Stock Exchange and Mrs. Jessup accompanied Aunt Beulah on a shopping expedition. Aunt Beulah had a lengthy list, but instead of making all her purchases in one large department store, as Mrs. Jessup was in the habit of doing, she scurried up and down Madison avenue in search of exclusive shops that she had read about.

At 5 o'clock, when Mrs. Jessup suggested wearily that perhaps they might buy their porcelain pigs in the same shop where they were buying their bridge napkins, Aunt Beulah was scandalized. "Nobody goes to Wambles's for porcelain pigs any more," she announced. "The place to get porcelain pigs is at Anne Louise Vandervert's Old Salem Gyfte Shoppe in East Fifty-seventh street. They cost more, but they're worth it." And so they set out for Fifty-seventh street, eleven blocks away.

The Jessups would have preferred to stay at home that evening and listen to the Goldman Band concert on the radio, but they had their tickets for "The Pink Meadows" bought and paid for, so they dressed up and escorted Aunt Beulah and Uncle Angus to the theater in a taxicab that went from Times Square to Forty-eighth street by way of Tenth Avenue, Columbus Circle and Sutton Place.

After the theater Aunt Beulah declared that she wahted to see Texas Guinan, and was amazed when Mr. Jessup admitted that he didn't know where Texas Guinan was performing. "Why, Bert!" she exclaimed. "She's at that Fifty-fourth street place that just opened last week. I read about it in the Parkersburg paper. It's very high class. We'll probably have to bring our own liquor."

"I—I'm afraid I don't know any bootleggers in this part of town," said Mr. Jessup apologetically. "Perhaps we'd better go home. I have some dandelion wine——"

"There's a bootlegger in every block," asserted Uncle Angus. "I'll find one." So the four of them went to a night club.

Next day they took Aunt Beulah and Uncle Angus to the Bronx Zoo, Coney Island and the grave of the Amiable Child. Mr. Jessup got tickets for a matinee that afternoon. The play was "Dishwater," a quiet, unexciting little domestic comedy, and Mr. Jessup thought that he might be able to take a nap between intermissions.

But Aunt Beulah announced that "Dishwater" was a waste of time. "I read a review of it in the Courier-Blade," she said. "It's not nearly as amusing as 'The Caloric Cutie.'" Mr. Jessup exchanged the tickets and they saw "The Caloric Cutie."

After the matinee Mrs. Jessup suggested dinner at a quiet tearoom in the Village, but Uncle Angus wanted music with his meals, so they went to a chop suey restaurant.

Aunt Beulah and Uncle Angus took the 10 o'clock train for Parkersburg that night and the Jessups staggered to the station to see them off. Aunt Beulah was wistful as she said good-by. "Only 10 o'clock!" she exclaimed. "I suppose the evening has just begun for you folks. My, how I envy you!"

But later, when she and Uncle Angus were alone in their compartment on the train, she sighed contentedly. "After all," she confided, "it seems good to be going back to Parkersburg. The city is all right for a few days, but I wouldn't care to live there. It must be an awful strain. Did you notice how tired Fanny and Bert looked?"

"Well, no wonder," reasoned Uncle Angus. "Look at the life they lead. It's hurry, hurry, hurry all day long and theaters and drinking and dancing all night long, with never a moment of rest. I declare, it's a mystery to me how these city folks stand the pace!"

Foundations of Roman buildings forming part of the military station of Margidumum were recently unearthed at Bingham, England.

The Quirks of a Wild Girl's Heart

and riches upon my faithful captains. More warriors enlist under my escutcheon until—by Allah and by Allah!—I have a host—with power over life and limb, over cities and plains—and the neighboring kings holding their very breath attendant upon my notions and whims. And then"—grandiosely—"I conquer China!"

"All of it?" thinly demanded Hamdi Gur Khan.

"Every single last square mile, O regrettable wart!" roared Terek, giving him a black look. "For that on which I, Emperor Terek, cast a favoring eye, must be mine—or Allah's! China—say I! And if those yellow heathens resist, let them burn in the flame of my wrath!"

He drew his sword.

"Who is with me?" he asked. "Who is for golden loot and red deeds?"

So he spoke—and the eyes of some of the younger tribesmen glittered with excitement; and it was as if, at this rough man's bidding, sixty years of tranquil happiness would be thrown to the winds; and an old grandmother, who remembered former days of strife, whispered:

"The Lord protect us! Here is an end to our white peace, our sweet peace . . . and once again it will be the fingering of steel—and the salt taste of a man's blood—the salt taste of a woman's tears . . ."

But, for a while at least, her fears seemed groundless. There was no riding to war, since Terek would not take the road without Hirfa—Hirfa who had ever the same answer to his pleading:

"I hate you!"

He wondered why it should be so.

He loved her—such was the sum total of his reasoning—so why did she not love him?

And then, one day, he told himself that he knew. She wanted marriage. Yes. That was it. For she was different from the lawless women he had known in the past.

He sighed a little.

Ah—he thought—marriage meant iron bonds; it meant an end to freedom; and hitherto, he had always trod a careless path, happening on many a jovial adventure, many a crimson mouth of kisses.

Still—marriage it must be . . . and, that afternoon, he told Hirfa:

"I have decided."

"What?"

"I shall marry you, O crusher of hearts. When shall we go before the priest?"

"Never!"

"Eh?"

"Never, never!"

"But—listen."

"I shall not listen! Ah—and were you the Arim of the Afghans himself in glory of emeralds and rich brocades I would still say to you: 'Leave me alone! I hate you!'"

Cold her words; contemptuous. They cut through him like a sword. He did not know that often when she was alone she would think of him; would think how she hated him; would wish savagely, "May he die before the mouth of tomorrow's morning!"—and then, since there were again the strange quirks of a wild girl's heart, she would whisper quickly:

"Dear God—let not my wish come true!" How her heart throbbed and ached—ached yet more as presently from end to end of the valley angry whispers were being heard that Terek, not content with his fame as a fighter, was adding thereto a reputation as a lover.

For Terek—had Hirfa known—was wondering if jealousy might not turn the trick with her.

Perhaps, he imagined, if she saw him courting other women—the brown-haired daughter of the blacksmith—or the priest's gray-eyed wife?

He made love to the latter one afternoon where she stood on the threshold of her husband's house, a tall, lean, handsome hillwoman.

"Decidedly," he declared, walking up to her with a heavy swagger, "I have seen lips less soft than yours and a bosom less pleasantly rounded. Aye—you are the one for my father's only son."

Only her hasty retreat into the house and a shower of earthen pots thrown by her two servant girls saved her from his rough embrace. He laughed. He strolled away. And later on, when the priest remonstrated with him, he said with calm arrogance:

"What can I do? It is a sending of fate. You see—I fall in love so readily.

Indeed it seemed so. And within the week—since Terek had a way with the women, a way that was the glint and fire in his eyes, the careless swing of his shoulders, and his soft voice that, belike, could hold a spice of cruelty at times—the forest might have whispered many a secret of golden words and red kisses. Thus scandal reared its ugly head. The Kara-Bayrak would have been glad to see Terek on his way—north, east, west—anywhere at all. And one day Hamdi Gur Khan, urged by the clansmen, broached the subject, mentioning discreetly, as he thought, that winter would soon come storming across the mountains and that south, in India, there was always warm, hearty summer.

Terek smiled at him as he might at a babbling child.

"I love cold weather," he replied, caressing his sword. "I love this valley. I love the men here and—may I be permitted to admit it?—the women. Here I shall live and here—may Allah grant it be not for many years!—I shall die."

He walked away, and meeting Hirfa near the mosque, he told her negligently over his shoulder:

"I cannot stay to pass the time of day with you, my darling, for up there"—pointing toward the forest—"a woman is waiting for me—and she has a sweet curve to her cheek the like of which is seldom seen."

Hirfa stared after him. Her heart ached.

She thought:

"I hate him!"

Then she made up her mind. She went to the house of the chief.

"You love me?" she asked straight out.

"I do," replied Hamdi Gur Khan, "and you know I do."

"And how would you prove your love?"

"I shall give you my fine cattle, my rich orchards, my late mother's jewels."

"Things, things!" she interrupted contemptuously. "I want deeds!"

"Deeds?"

"Yes!"

"But—what?"

"There is this Terek. He has brought unhappiness into our hills. He must go from here."

"I mentioned it to him. And—he refused."

"Use force! Kill him—if need be."

"No, no!" The chief paled. "I am a man of peace."

"A helpless, weak-spined man of peace!" she mocked.

"The Lord Allah will be my shield!"

"Not much of a shield against this steel-clanking ruffian! Wah—he eats the food of Kara-Bayrak—he drinks their drinks—he kisses their women—and they salaam and say: 'Be welcome!' Wah, wah—the hills are filled with laughter at your disgrace! It is as I told you before—you are cowards—all of you!"

"But what—what can we do?"

"You are many—and he is one!"

"He has his sword—the grand, ruthless fighter he is—and we are unarmed!"

"But at night—when he sleeps."

"I have looked at him when he sleeps—and he cuddles his blade to his side as if it were his bride. Ahee—if only his sword were out of the way."

"You mean it?" Hirfa cut in quickly. "If his sword were out of the way, you would—?"

"Yes!"

"Listen."

She spoke for quite a while and when she had finished Hamdi Gur Khan exclaimed triumphantly:

"I shall do it—for the sake of my love!"

. . . . . .

It was long past midnight when Terek, asleep on his couch, was startled by a noise on the threshold. He sat up, at once wide awake, sword ready in hand.

Dim in the moonlight he saw a girl. He heard her whisper.

"It is I—Hirfa!"

He walked up to her. He saw that she was in tears and he demanded:

"What has happened, my pigeon?"

Then, just as she had asked Hamdi Gur Khan on the preceding afternoon, she now asked Terek: "You love me?"—and when he swore a great oath that she was the heart of his heart and the soul of his soul, she told him, as she had told Hamdi Gur Khan:

"I want deeds!"

"Deeds!" he achoed. "My very slogan! Say the word and I shall spill a dozen kings red and bloody at your feet! Or should you have a notion in the way of proud castles you wish me to conquer for you I shall."

"I want neither kings nor castles."

"What do you want?"

"Revenge!"

"Revenge?"

"Yes!"

"On whom? Who has harmed you?"

"Hamdi Gur Khan."

"What has he done?"

"He came to my house a short time ago. He—he insulted me."

"Allah!" Terek gave a bellow of rage. "I shall skewer this same Hamdi Gur Khan as I would a bit of mutton!"

He strode to the door. He hurried down the street, blade in hand. But Hirfa, running at his heels, said:

"No! Give me the sword!"

Terek was amazed.

"But—I thought—you wanted revenge?"

"I do. I told Hamdi Gur Khan I would speak to you—and he laughed—he jeered."

"Eh?"

"He said it is easy for a weaponed man to attack one who has only his two hands."

"He said that, did he?"

"Yes. He is waiting for you behind the mosque—is daring you to fight him with bare fists."

"Bare fists will do!" cried Terek, surrendering his sword to her. "And—hai—the sweet, wee sound the breaking of his neck will be when I twist it—as I would a bird's!"

He walked on, Hirfa by his side. The moon hid behind a cloud; and it was dark when he reached the mosque and when, passing in back of it, he came to a narrow, arched entrance that led to a nest of alleys—when he saw there the dim figure of a man and heard Hamdi Gur Khan's voice:

"Is that you, Terek?"

"None else, O dead man."

Terek launched out with his fist. The other receded. He ran rapidly into the black nest of alleys, while Terek hurried after him, yelling:

"Stand up and fight, O coward!"

Thn suddenly, too late, he understood that here was ambush, here was conspiracy grim and tragic, here was trap baited by his own love and Hirfa's treachery—as, all at once, from everywhere, the tribesmen came rushing, bearing down upon him with cudgels and stones, belaboring him, shouting:

"Take this because you kissed my wife!"

"And this because you embraced my sister!"

"And this because you drank my best wine!"

"And this one for your nose—because I do not like its shape!"

Terek did all that a stout man could, ringed by so great a host. Planting himself against a wall, he used fists and feet and teeth, exclaiming that—by Allah—it was himself was the lad to like long odds in love and strife.

Odds, though, too long.

They surged about him like hounds pulling down a stag. There was a crowded moment of snorting and tussling and pushing and kicking; and it might have been the bitter night of grief for Terek Haydar if not just then—since, let us repeat, there were the strange quirks of a wild girl's heart—Hirfa had not cried:

"Ah! cowards, cowards! Fifty against one!"

And, with the moon at that moment coming from behind the cloudbank, Terek, looking up, saw her lift his sword. She tossed it over to him with all her young strength. It cut through the air like a streak of silver. He caught it—and out at the others with a clatter of iron—a great bellow:

"Come on, O sons of dogs! Wah—come on and be stabbed, cut, spitted, entirely killed, O most ignoble and dirt-fed hyenas!"

Years later Terek was heard to remark that far indeed had he wandered on the soles of his two feet, warring his own and other men's wars for the sport of it; but that the fight on that night was one the memory of which he would hug to his heart as a maiden hugs her first lover.

"One against fifty! Yes! But I had my sword! And there was Hirfa urging me on!"

For that's what she did.

"Power to your arm!" she shrilled. "Power to your arm, O hero!"

And power to his arm it was—and strength to his wrist—and his blade dancing a swishy, triumphant saraband—and, presently, the tribesmen running away, shrieking for mercy and, after a while, nobody left except a man and a woman.

"If you should love me the least bit," began the man.

"I have loved you, dear, since the day we met," said the woman. "Ah"—speaking the truth as she saw it—"my love was never farther away from you than the width of a passing thought."

They were silent.

Then Terek laughed.

"Tomorrow," he told her, "we shall ask the priest to make us man and wife. And then we shall ride away into the south, helping ourselves to two fine horses, perhaps three, because of the grand loot which we shall take away."

And he kissed her.

Father Time Poses for His Picture in Experiment at "Caltech" Which Is Nearing Completion and Which Is First Effort Ever Made to Test "Time" Element of Einstein Theory

How Time Behaves

IN A SMALL laboratory at the California Institute of Technology, Dr. Roy James Kennedy and Dr. Edward M. Thorndike are experimenting on time. As if time were a tangible thing, they place it under a microscope, check its behavior under varying conditions and photograph it, just as an entomologist would investigate some strange bug. Never before, so far as I am aware, has time been examined in this way. Cross-examined describes the effort better, because these young physicists are trying to make time—the "silent partner" in our space-time universe—reveal the workings of the partnership.

There is a background to the experiments which cannot be skipped, but a question will bring it into the picture. Is the earth drifting through an ocean of ether? If so, can the drift be determined? To find an answer to this question, Michelson and Morley conducted a series of brilliant experiments some years ago, which the former repeated at Mt. Wilson, the outcome being that no indications of an "ether drift" were detected. Shortly after Michelson and Morley's first experiment Einstein announced his theory of relativity, holding that space and time are blended together in a way which renders "drifting" impossible, or at least undetectable and meaningless. Later on, Dr. Dayton Miller made a series of experiments which opened the question again, because he found what he believed to be an ether drift of about six miles a second. That upset Einstein's universal framework, provided Dr. Miller was right.

At that time, Dr. Kennedy first appeared in the picture. Using different technique, he repeated Michelson's experiments and confirmed his conclusions beyond reasonable doubt—so far as space, or distance, measurements are concerned. But how about time measurements? No one had yet succeeded in proving anything respecting the time aspect of Einstein's space-time universe. Having found that distances behave according to Einstein's predictions, Kennedy now undertook to apply a similar test in terms of time.

As an outcome of the space experiments, it had been learned that anything in motion, exeept light, changes more and more as its velocity increases. The faster an object moves the shorter and heavier it becomes. When you throw a ball, it flattens out a little before it is caught, but the difference is next to nothing, because a tossed ball travels at a speed of only about ninety feet a second. Traveling at ninety thousand miles a second, the ball would become an ellipsoid, and at the velocity of light it would lose one of its dimensions and become a disk—unimaginably thin. All objects in motion, whether baseballs, planets or stars, would alike flatten into infinitely thin disks, if they traveled as fast as light. Those thin disks, however, would weigh much more than their original masses. These facts have been definitely established.

Although such statements sound startling, we know what they mean, because they refer to objects and their sizes, and with such ideas we are familiar. When told that a foot-long ruler, flying through space at, say, 161,000 miles a second, would be just six inches long, everybody understands what is meant, even though the reasons for the shrinkage are not understood. But when Einstein tells us that time also varies with velocity, the statement is hard to understand, because we have always thought of time as changeless—as if a good watch would tick off seconds of the same length everywhere. Is it any more surprising, however, that a moving watch should run more slowly, or lose time, than that a moving ruler should become shorter?

Now, in the same way that Michelson and Kennedy had proved that objects in space behave as Einstein calculated, Kennedy and Thorndike are trying to find out, not by means of mathematical formulas, but by actual measurements, whether time also behaves as Einstein has predicted.

"If we are living in an Einstein universe," Dr. Kennedy explained, "time would change with increasing velocity, just as the dimensions of matter change, but instead of shortening, time would lengthen. If a man were riding on one of Prof. Goddard's rockets at a velocity of 161,000 miles a second, his watch would shrink to half its size, and assuming it still would function, would lose twelve hours of time daily, which shows how intimately associated space and time really are. At the velocity of light, the watch would shrink to nothing and time would stand still."

"Before starting this experiment, I wanted to find the most reliable watch in the world, one that would divide an ordinary second into a million-billion-billion intervals. The clock finally selected consists entirely of mercury. When vaporized the mercury atoms radiate a characteristic light, presumably in the form of waves, and the frequency of the waves, or the time interval between the wave-tops, serves as well as pendulums to mark the flow of time. Instead of ticking off sound waves in air, such a clock ticks off ether waves," and he proceeded to show me how he uses his mercury clock.

In a darkened booth, at a corner of the laboratory, he lets out a line of light from the mercury, and splits the line into two separate rays, one of which is permitted to shoot straight ahead, while the other is detoured by means of mirrors over a round-about path. At the end of the journey, both rays are brought together again; but, as the detoured ray has traveled a longer distance than the other ray, they do not arrive at the same instant. What happens, therefore, will be easily understood by anyone who has watched water waves under similar conditions; when parted waves come together again, they do not coincide precisely, but interfere with each other. In Dr. Kennedy's interferometer, the interference of the light waves occurs in front of a very sensitive film, so the commingling waves photograph themselves. A series of the photographs is shown on this page.

To understand the photographs, we must understand the circumstances under which they were taken. Some were taken when the whole of Pasadena was moving much more rapidly than when others were taken. For, being on the earth, is like being on a merry-go-round aboard an ocean liner. At times the merry-go-round carries one in the same direction the ship is going, then the merry-go-round's speed is added to the speed of the ship. At other times, the merry-go-round carries one in an opposite direction to that of the ship, then its speed must be subtracted from the ship's speed.

Due to the rotation of the earth on its axis, Dr. Kennedy's clock was carried during a part of every day at a speed of about 1000 miles an hour in the direction traveled by the earth on its orbit, and during the rest of the day the clock was carried at the same speed in an opposite direction. When some of the photographs were taken, therefore, the camera was moving 2000 miles an hour faster than when others were taken. Hence, if time actually varies with velocity, the photographs of the waves ticked off by the mercury atoms should show variations, for they were taken day and night, and this experiment has been under way for the last three years.

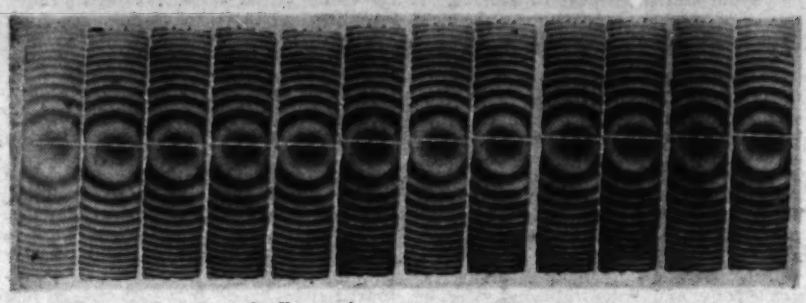
Other velocities were considered, such as the orbital movements of the earth at a speed of 67,000 miles an hour—in line with the sun's movements during certain seasons and oppositely during other seasons—but we have said enough to explain the principle underlying the experiment.

Asked if the photographs actually reveal any differences in time: "There are the photographs," Dr. Kennedy said, "so you can judge for yourself," which was his way of saying that he is not yet prepared to announce the results of the experiment. Meanwhile, he and Dr. Thorndike are studying and comparing the diameters of the interference fringes by means of microscopes and the most delicate instruments known to research science. If they find variations, we shall know more than Einstein now knows about the structure and framework of this space-time universe.

Dr. Kennedy is 33 years of age; he graduated from Cornell in 1921, from Johns Hopkins University in 1924, and has since been working in the California Institute as a research fellow of the Guggenheim Memorial Fund. Thorndike, a graduate of Wesleyan University, of Columbia University and of the California Institute of Technology, is only 25 years of age.

It is hard work Kennedy and Thorndike are doing—clocking time day and night, recording observations, testing the temperature of the interferometer and the voltage every few hours to see that everything is running right.

Dr. Eric C. Bell regards this experiment on time as one of the most important investigations going on anywhere. "In all probability," he told me, "it will be talked about a hundred years from now, when the work most other people are doing is forgotten."



Above—Dr. Roy J. Kennedy examining photographic plate made by mercury waves in experiment with time. Below—Photographic impression which will prove or disprove Einstein's space-time theory.

COMPLETELY mummified worms, millions of years older than the mummies of the Pharaohs, are on exhibit in the Field Museum. Gassing Pneumococci

A MIXTURE of oxygen and carbon dioxide gas was tried on 127 pneumonia cases, largely employees of the New York Edison Company, and eighty-five recovered quickly. The gas is inhaled. It has been recommended as a pneumonia remedy, under medical supervision, by the officials of the company and also by its proponent, Dr. Yandell Henderson of Yale University.

The Tape-Measure Test

An Episode in the Married Life of Helen and Warren

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

Creator of the "Helen and Warren" Characters

"DEAR, those window cushions aren't here yet," worried Helen. "And the Daltons come tomorrow for dinner."

"What of it?" Warren dissecting his broiled halibut. "Not serving 'em fricasseed window cushions, are you?"

"This is Thursday! And they promised them positively by Tuesday. Now the seats look so bare—it spoils the whole room."

"What happened to the old ones?" blinking at a deflected squeeze of lemon.

"I gave them to Mrs. O'Grady. I thought of course they'd come by—Oh, there's the bell!" eagerly "Could it be—Would they deliver so late?"

"Might." Exasperating indifference. "This is the darndest fish—all bones!"

"The man with them cushions, ma'am," Nora at the door. "Where d'you want them put?"

"In the library! Oh, I'm so glad!" starting up. "I was afraid—"

"You come back here and eat your dinner!" irately.

"But, dear, I just want to open them—to see if they're all right."

"Now, they'll keep! Where's that mustard fruit Martini sent us? No holding that out!"

"I didn't think you'd want it with fish," getting from the sideboard the fascinating can of "Mustarda Frutta."

"Why not?" digging out a cube of watermelon rind. "This stuff's great with anything. Here, you like cherries. Hold over your plate."

The exotic Italian condiment could not divert Helen's cushion-riveted anxiety.

Longing to fly in for a reassuring inspection. But he always resented her leaving the table. Dinner the all-important function on which nothing must intrude.

That shade of old rose—so hard to tell from the sample. If only she could have bought them ready made! Always the uncertainty of anything ordered.

Now conscious of a quizzical pause in his day-at-the-office monologue. Expecting some comment? Usually a murmured "Yes, of course, dear" covered all such exigencies. But not this time—

"Not listening to a word I say!" savagely spearing at his endive salad. "Worrying about those blooming cushions."

"I was listening—only just then—" Pushed disconcertion at her faux pas. "What was it? Dear, tell me!"

Not deigning to repeat. But his obstinate silence soon ameliorated by his favorite cocoanut custard.

Then the coffee. And at last into the library.

The friendly restful room always at its best in the evening. Low lamps by deep chairs, the gleam of Old-World mahogany.

And the casement windows with the seats beneath now nakedly cushionless!

Eagerly Helen darted to the long-pregnant package. On her knees untying the heavy cord.

"Oh, if they're only all right!"

"Why shouldn't they be," filling his pipe. "Why assume they're not?"

"I always dread having things made! If I could have a woman do them here—but anything done outside—Maybe they come out wrong because I always think they will."

"Rot! Lay off the introspecting and open 'em up," settling down with his paper.

Still struggling with the obdurate cord. Not cut it—her innate economy defeating her eagerness.

"No, wait till I get it off," as Pussy Purr-Mew pounced on the trailing end. "There!"

The first glimpse! A lustrous old rose.

Conflicting reactions. A lovely shade—but somehow different in the piece from the sample. Too vivid? But they would tone down. That bedroom paper had.

At the window now. Fitting in the cushions.

"Oh!" Her panicky cry.

"Now, what's wrong?" The rattle of his flung-down paper.

"Too short! Oh, they're ruined!"

"The devil they are!"

Beside her now scowling down at the abbreviated cushion. Hopelessly too short. At least six inches of ivory woodwork exposed.

"And they're all the same length! All three too short! Oh, what will we do?"

"Now pipe down," cutting her tearful tirade. "If they've made 'em wrong, it's up to them."

"But how—how could they?" tremulously. "You took the measurements. Don't you remember?"

"Well, if I took 'em—they're right!" explosively. "Kept a copy, didn't you?"

His pencilled figures—on her yellow desk pad. The upholsterer had copied them and she had brought back the slip.

A frantic, futile search of the spacious Sheraton desk.

"Why in blazes don't you have some system?" Warren contemptuously looking on. "If I kept my desk like that—"

"I know I put it somewhere," rummaging a crowded pigeon-hole. "I remember distinctly— And the sample pinned to it."

"No sense of order!" his disgusted grunt. "Why don't you have a file for such things? I'll send one up from the office."

"I suppose I should," contritely. "But I know it's here somewhere."

"Well, when you find it you're all right," callously returning to his paper.

Free from his disconcerting scrutiny, a less flustered search.

She must find it! Proof that it wasn't their fault. Those expensive cushions—the material four-fifty a yard besides the making.

Only another confirmation of her never-have-things-made-to-order complex.

"No, no, you can't lie there!" as Pussy Purr-Mew stretched luxuriously on the rose damask. "We're sending them back."

"Not if you've lost that slip," Warren's grim comment.

Searching on. That little drawer of odds and ends. It might be—

Oh, that dressmaker's card! She had looked for it everywhere. And that crumb cake recipe for Mrs. Drake. A lipstick Carrie had left. A theater program—why keep that?

Snatching at a yellow slip. Warren's writing! But only a scribbled phone number—2767. That heavy slanting stroke of all his sevens.

Swift visualization! That same seven on the lost slip—the last figure?

Seventeen? No, twenty-seven, of course!

"Found it?" Warren scraping out his pipe.

"No, but I remember now—the length was twenty-seven. I'm positive."

"Get your measure and we'll see."

Her held-breath suspense, as she measured the cushions. Twenty-seven exact and the window seat thirty-three!

"Dear, it was your mistake," sinking limply on the floor. "I'm sure of it now."

"You are, eh?" he snorted. "If you can't remember where you put that slip—how in blazes d'you know what's on it?"

Perhaps she was wrong, but still the haunting conviction that the last number had been seven.

That night she had asked him to hold the tape line, he had brushed her aside with a curt, "Here, I'll measure it, you're sure to get it wrong."

Now his mistake? The lamp light on his strong profile as he refilled his pipe. Masterful ability. Always so accurate. How could she doubt his exactness?

"Well, let it ride till morning." His dismissing shrug. "Where's that Craig Henchley book I got the other day?"

"Isn't it right there? Under those papers?"

Exhuming the green-jacketed volume on social economics.

"Huh, pages not cut," settled down. "Hand me a paper knife, will you?"

Another flustered search of the still disordered desk.

"Now what?" caustically. "Lost that too?"

"It was here just a moment ago," crimson embarrassment.

Under some circulars the bronze paper knife. And a heart-leaping glimpse of a yellow slip!

Yes, Warren's vigorous figures. Flauntingly plain!

Width—13¼
Length—27

"What's that?" at her stifled exclamation. "Found those measures?"

"Dear, it is twenty-seven!"

Snatching the slip from her. Glaring at the incriminating figures.

"Some mistake here," he blustered. "I never took that measure."

"Why, they're your figures."

"Then they must be right!" bellicosely illogical. "Where's that blooming tape?"

Tensely watching him remeasure. Always such implicit faith in his accuracy. Now this disillusioning—

"Well, I'll be doggoned!" disgustedly. "How in thunder did I get twenty-seven? That stumps me."

With a sudden intuition Helen caught up the double-faced tape line.

"Oh, here's what happened! Look, these numbers run both ways. You took the width from the right end—but for the length you turned it over!"

"What's that?" jerking it from her. "I'll be darned!"

A sixty inch line, reversible, but starting at opposite ends.

"Well, I was right," belligerently. "Knew I'd measured right. If you'd a decent yardstick instead of that trick tape! Rottenest tools 'round this joint. Your limit's the five-and-ten."

But Helen too distressed over the cushions to even notice his usual blame-her defense.

"Oh, I wonder if he can piece them?" still on her knees at the window.

"If he can't, scrap 'em and get new ones. What's that? Four-fifty a yard? Never mind the expense—I'll take care of that. And while you're at it get a yardstick. Pay enough to get a good one. Now drop it!" savagely, snatching up his book. "I'm fed up with those blasted cushions!"

odd, but certainly a sincere tribute.

In 1830 the poem was printed in Troy on a broadside that was distributed by the newspaper as a holiday gift to its subscribers and was now illustrated for the first time. The artist was Myron King, an engraver of Troy, and his sketch of Santa Claus in a sleigh drawn by eight tiny reindeer riding over the housetops is now quite as familiar to children as is the poem it illustrates.

Of Myron King's life very little is known. Indeed his name means nothing to the children of the world, though there are few who cannot instantly recognize the drawing that Dr. Moore's poem inspired. But of this we may feel sure—Myron King understood children and loved them.

It was not until 1838, sixteen years after its first public appearance, that Dr. Moore admitted the authorship of the verses, published at this time in the Troy Budget on Christmas Day. We cannot be certain, but no doubt Moore at last gave in to the friends who had continually insisted that he should publicly claim that which was his very own. Again, in 1844, they appeared definitely under his name in a little book entitled: "Poems by Clement C. Moore, L.L.D."

Unfortunately, the original of the world-famed poem has long been lost, but forty years after its creation Dr. Moore wrote an autographed copy of it which is safely preserved in the archives of the New York Historical Society. Dr. Moore died at Newport, Rhode Island, July 10, 1863, at the age of 84 and is buried in Trinity Churchyard, New York City. He was a deep, serious scholar, one of his writings being a "Hebrew and Greek Lexicon," the first of its kind in America, but while his profound essays have long been forgotten or supplanted, there remains in ever-increasing popularity the enchanting little poem that he felt so unworthy of publication—"'Twas the Night Before Christmas."

The House That Inspired the Immortal Poem

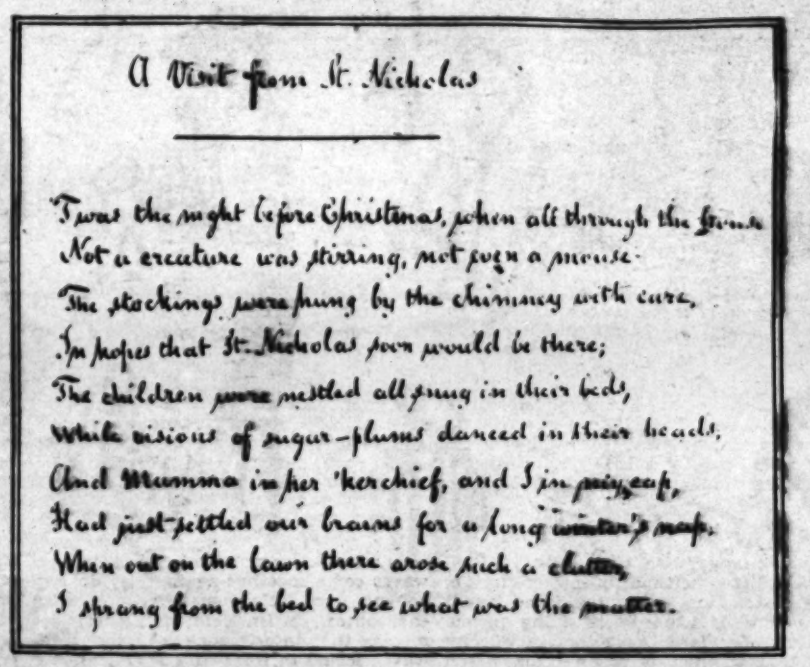
"'Twas the Night Before Christmas"

By Carl Coolidge

WHILE the last year has witnessed the passing, in the heart of New York City, of the house in which was written the most noted and best beloved Christmas poem ever conceived—"A Visit From Saint Nicholas"—better known, however, by its opening line, "'Twas the Night Before Christmas," there still stands at Elmhurst, Long Island, the old homestead that is known to have been the inspiration of Clement Clark Moore's world-famous verses. But it is not, as some have supposed, the poet's birthplace. The homestead was owned by his grandparents and in all these years has never left the possession of the Moore family.

Erected in 1661, it is one of the most ancient houses in New York State. A rambling structure of typical Colonial days, it has withstood the ravages of the elements for more than two hundred and fifty years, and with but slight alterations and repairs is the same comfortable home that Clement Clark Moore loved to visit. A curious well sweep adorns the lawn, one of the few such relics of our Revolutionary forefathers. On the farm that surrounded it in Colonial times were first grown the famed Newtown "pippin" apples that even two hundred years ago sold in England for $20 a barrel. If for no other reason that here these now world-famed apples were originated, the Moore homestead must be included in our list of national shrines. Then, too, it is situated on a historic highway. There was bloody fighting all about it during the Revolutionary War. George Washington must have traveled by its very door more than once—perhaps even visited it, though no tradition remains of this. A great oak tree nearby was the open air church of John Fox, the noted Quaker. Not many miles away the beloved Nathan Hale was captured by the British, and en route to his doom in New York City may have passed this way.

As a lad, Clement Clark Moore spent many happy week-ends visiting his grandparents, no doubt on cold nights warming himself before the great hearth that was later to serve in his imagination as the means of a visit from Saint Nicholas. And somewhere in the neighborhood there had lived a fat, jovial Dutchman who the poet afterward said was the original of his Saint Nick. But alas, this portly character's name is unknown, perhaps for the reason that the authorship of the poem was kept from the public for years, its creator thinking so little of it that it was at first published without his consent and knowledge.



A Visit from St. Nicholas

'Twas the night before Christmas, when all through the house
Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse.
The stockings were hung by the chimney with care,
In hopes that St. Nicholas soon would be there;
The children were nestled all snug in their beds,
While visions of sugar-plums danced in their heads,
And Mamma in her 'kerchief, and I in my cap,
Had just settled our brains for a long winter's nap.
When out on the lawn there arose such a clatter,
I sprang from the bed to see what was the matter.

Clement Clark Moore was born in New York City, July 15, 1779, the son of Bishop Benjamin Moore. Of his early life we know but little, except that he was of a retiring and studious nature. He graduated from Columbia University in 1798, prepared and educated for the ministry but was never ordained. Instead, he chose to be a teacher, in time becoming professor of Oriental and Greek literature in the General Theological Seminary.

In 1822, when he was 43, the now famed lines were dashed off hastily and given to his two little daughters as a Christmas present. We may surmise that he had lately been visiting the Moore homestead on Long Island, and that revived boyhood impressions of his own Saint Nicholas became the inspiration of the poem which appears to have written itself, rather than to have been any enforced attempt at writing. Some weeks later, a visitor to the Moore family, Miss Harriet Butler, of Troy, N. Y., admired the catchy, jingly rhythm of the verses and requested, and was given permission, to copy them in her scrap book.

Fortunately for us the quaint lines of the poem had found a worthy custodian in the person of Miss Butler and as the following Christmas approached, she sent a draft of it to the editor of the Troy Sentinel, who on December 23, 1823, gave it its first appearance in print, thanking the unknown sender and complimenting the unknown author. It is recorded that its publication caused Dr. Moore considerable regret and chagrin, as he did not deem it worthy of public inspection. But what Dr. Moore thought and others felt about the poem was quite different. Though originally printed in a somewhat obscure newspaper, its success was immediate. Year after year it grew in popularity, each holiday season seeing it more widely printed than before. Yet Dr. Moore continued to feel it unworthy and though urged by friends, refused to acknowledge its authorship.

Seven years later, reprinted and copied the world over, its creator was still undisclosed, though now the Troy Sentinel announced that he belonged "by birth and residence to the City of New York and that he is a gentleman of more merit as a scholar and a writer than many of more noisy pretensions." A somewhat world who think of helping the other fellow, Graham McNamee was becoming the inspiration of hundreds of thousands of people. In one hour he reached more persons than she could appeal to in a decade.

If she could inspire him so that he would give of the very best in him to those unseen millions—that would be well worth while.

Old-fashioned idea? Sure, as old-fashioned as love itself—and as eternal.

Were you at the opening of the ball season this year in the Yankee Stadium, New York? You recall that it was a long, long session. And McNamee had a long, long time at the mike. Just as he signed off he said something like this:

"And now, folks, the tired larynx of Graham McNamee is going to take a rest."

That said, he fought through that milling mob to reach a telephone. A moment later he was asking her:

"How was the job? Voice all right?"

"Excellent work, Graham—everything fine. It was a good job. We'll talk it over when you get home."

Sitting together later that evening, talking it all over, she asked:

"Graham, what do you think America was most interested in today—the opening baseball game or the tired larynx of Graham McNamee?"

Like a flash he saw her point—and laughed.

"Thanks," he told her. "I'll never make that mistake again."

That, mind you, was the world's greatest radio announcer speaking.

Do you recall the Tunney-Heeney fight at the Yankee Stadium? Of course you do. And you know of Ziegfeld, of course. If you know him well, you recall this: he seldom, if ever, says words of praise. Perhaps because there are few superlative things in life to commend, and the world's greatest showman is not interested in the commonplace.

Now Ziegfeld is not a fight fan. His interests lie more in the field of pure and practical art. On the night of the fight he sat in his country home, trying to fish some good music out of the radio. A vibrant, colorful voice, giving a dramatic presentation of something—of a fight.

Ziegfeld's hand dropped from the dials. He forgot all about music. In the midst of that fight-detail he seized a sheet of paper and dispatched this telegram:

Graham McNamee,
Radio Announcer,
Ringside,

Yankee Stadium:

You have given championships a vast new interest and color on the air by your radio technique and personality, and you project these colossal shows into millions of homes with vivid description and exciting drama, and as a showman myself, I heartily congratulate you.

FLORENZ ZIEGFELD.

That telegram was delivered to him as the tenth round was about to begin. The highest praise that a showman could receive. The highest? Well, for McNamee, the highest with one exception.

The minute that fight was over he fought his way—as always—to a telephone booth.

"Say! Ziegfeld telegraphed me congratulations—but, what do you say about the job tonight?" he asked his wife.

"Ziegfeld was right—it was a superlative work of colorful reporting," she told him.

"Then tell me the rest when I get home," he begged her. "And I'm coming home right now to hear it."

That night he sat opposite her—as pleased as a child—holding Ziegfeld's telegram in one hand and listening eagerly to her criticism.

Wasn't it Balzac who said, "In every genius there's a bit of the child?"

By any chance were you on upper Broadway a few weeks ago, about three in the afternoon? Remember that aviator who continued to fly around a certain tall apartment—who did an Immelmann turn over the Hudson, a barrel-roll above Columbus avenue, and then circled that apartment again and again?

You wondered what it was all about, didn't you? Well, here's the tale:

On that day McNamee went to Pennsylvania to broadcast over a local station. Since she wouldn't hear him—that station wasn't tuned in nationally—she went out to a picnic.

It was late twilight when she returned home. A few moments later Graham McNamee came in. There was an intense look of disappointment on his face.

"Why didn't you wave at me?"

"Wave at you? Why, Graham, what do you mean?" she asked.

"Didn't you see me this afternoon?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"After that airport opened I got lonesome—wanted to see you. So, instead of taking the train, as I planned, I got a crack aviator to fly me in. We landed at Mineola, but before crossing to Long Island I asked him to fly around the house—wanted to see you. But you didn't wave a handkerchief at me."

That, mind you, after nine years of married life!

Nowadays, no matter how far from home he goes, she stays by the fireside until he returns.

summit by an electric scenic line. Aside from the general view from Mt. Lowe, this ride atop of the world offers some beautiful and impressive mountain vistas of peak, ridge and canyon clothed in highland verdure or stark rocky cliffs of mighty proportions.

One of the very popular and best high points hereabouts so situated that it commands a fairly close-up view of the western section of the city is Lookout Mountain, one of the higher upthrusts of the Santa Monica range, just back of Hollywood and Beverly Hills. This point offers a keen sense of elevation as the declivities fall away so abruptly as to add to the thrill of the view, while various ridges jut outward on the points of which the effect of altitude is enhanced. From Lookout Mountain one may literally gaze down into boulevards and streets of Hollywood, where the elevation invests the moving automobiles with the qualities of crawling insects. To the south, east and west the view embraces virtually all of the city and its suburbs and from this vantage point as perhaps from no other is it possible to piece city sections, buildings and thoroughfares in their proper relations.

If one thinks he knows his city a view from this close-up eminence usually reveals misconceptions of localities, comparative sizes of areas and structures, and brings a general rearrangement of the mental map. The spot is easily reached, as it is at the end of the left branch of the Laurel Canyon road, paved clear to the top and of ample width for safe travel. The canyon itself is beautiful and well worth the trip for its own sake. Laurel Canyon is entered from the west end of Hollywood Boulevard.

Between Pasadena and Los Angeles, Flintridge offers several points of advantage to the scene-gazer, affording panoramas of the entire San Gabriel Valley, the eastern section of the larger city, general views of the San Fernando Valley and a wonderful vista of the serried ranks of the mountain ranges. It is reached from either side, the Los Angeles approaches being by the way of Chevy Chase drive or through Glen Oaks Park, Glendale; and from the east over the Devil's Gate Dam or Linda Vista avenue, while a very beautiful approach is from Colorado Boulevard, just west of the Pasadena bridge, north through Annandale Heights.

One of the lower viewing points closer in, is Mt. Washington, which commands vistas of the terrain lying between the Lower Arroyo Seco and the Los Angeles River. It is reached from the junction of Dayton and Pasadena avenues, by the way of Marmion Way to Washington drive.

In addition to Lookout Mountain, the Santa Monica range offers several points from which inspiring views may be had. A notable one which is easily reached is near the ocean, a paved road turning off Beverly Boulevard near the Coast Highway and entering the hills, mounting through beautiful scenery to the crest of the ridge. From this eminence long stretches of beach and breakers are to be seen, rolling hills, part of the western section of the city and the beach cities stretching down the coast as well as the bosom of the Pacific to the horizon.

A lookout point worthy of notice is that offered by the ridge of hills rising from the plain to the northwest of Los Angeles, the Verdugo Hills, immortalized by John McGroarty and commanding views of the cities of Glendale, Burbank, Van Nuys, Lankershim and others, as well as a broad vista of the San Fernando Valley and of the range flanking it. This vantage viewing point may be reached from the city by way of the San Fernando Road or from the Pasadena side by Devil's Gate Dam or Linda Vista routes.

On the lesser but worth while eminences offering easy access and splendid close-up views, Baldwin Hills and Angeles Mesa, both forming a ridge which separates the western valley of Los Angeles from the southern part of the city, are splendid points for the scene-gazer to include in his itinerary. Baldwin Hills dominates the western valley and everything south of the Santa Monica range as well as affording an inspiring panorama of the western part of the city. Angeles Mesa commands a vista embracing the southern section of Los Angeles and her environs stretching away toward the harbor.

Farther to the southwest the Palos Verdes Hills offer views of the Santa Monica Bay region as well as a sweeping panorama of the entire country south of Los Angeles—suburbs, rolling hills and plains.

In the midst of a bustling city one scarcely expects to encounter a high point affording broad vision, but Barnsdall Park, the entrance to which is at the corner of Vermont avenue and Hollywood, is such a one. The eminence, also known as Mount Olive, is topped by the home of the California Art Club. From the windows and the terraces of the structure wonderful views of Hollywood, the city proper and the mountains are obtainable, while at night the outlook is especially effective.

It is easy to succumb to the lure of vista-gazing and, if one really enjoys inspiring panoramas, the means are available on every hand in this land where Nature provides convenient lookouts to suit every taste and desire.

In the Garden

by L. A. Grant, Landscape Architect with Armstrong Nurseries

At this season of the year, or perhaps a little earlier, if you chance to drive through Arizona and are in the vicinity of Flagstaff, drive up into the mountains to Mormon Lake. There is a grove of Aspens, through which the road passes, that fully repays for the time spent in driving to the lake. You will drive along admiring the clumps of Sumac, as they spread like beds of brilliant summer flowers along the roadside, when suddenly you see before you a group of pure white stalks, crowned by heads of matchless golden-yellow, set in a background of dark Pines. It is a sight that Californians rarely see, for we have but few native trees that take on the autumnal hues that are to be seen in cooler altitudes.

This trip, or a trip to any section where the forest trees glow in the brilliance of autumn, will arouse your interest in trees and shrubs for fall color and you will long for a tree of autumn hues in your garden. In your search, let me suggest that you look at the handsome specimen of Maidenhair Tree (Ginkgo biloba) in front of Pomona High School on Holt Avenue in Pomona. It stands in the lawn against a large Redwood and the red brick of the school building, its cloak of yellow streaming down from the sharp peak and spreading like gold pieces on the grass beneath it. Or if you prefer reds, pinks and coppers, Claremont has a street lined with Sweet Gum (Liquidambar styraciflua) that produces a color effect not to be excelled. The maple-like leaves and brilliant colors will call to the minds of former Southerners the old slaves' song of eulogy to the tree:

"Da's a good time comin', 'tis almost heah
Hit's bin long, long on de way;
Run 'n tell 'Lija t' hurry up, Pomp'
Meet us at de Gum tree down in de swamp
Wake Nicodemus today."

While we are thinking of seeds and fruit, let us not forget the Persimmon with its colorful and luscious fruit and leaves that glow like the embers of a hardwood log, gleaming scarlet with undertones of bluish-green and bronze, making a study in color harmony.

The Red Oak (Quercus rubra) is another shade tree that has been somewhat overlooked in Southern California. The glossy leaves turn to a brilliant combination of red and bronze in fall, and its dense shade makes it a pleasure in summer.

The Berried Shrubs

The shrubs producing berries of red and orange form one of the most dependable sources of autumn color and there is a type for every spot in the garden. In the rockery and around the pool the trailing and prostrate forms of Cotoneaster add color at this season. Cotoneaster horizantalis, with its branches spreading like fans studded with bright red beads, and its more evergreen but irregular growing brothers—Cotoneaster prostrata, Cotoneaster microphylla and Cotoneaster buxifolia—are among the best for this purpose. In the shrubbery mass the larger forms of this family can be used, and we can get away from the rather common types by using some of the more recent introductions, the Willow-leaved Cotoneaster (Cotoneaster salicifolia) and its low-growing form, the Trailing Willow-leaved Cotoneaster (Cotoneaster floccosa), as well as such varieties as Cotoneaster humafusa, Cotoneaster acuminata, and others. The Firethorns also open a field that produce brilliant colors in the fall and their number is being increased as new varieties are introduced from the orient. One of the best that has come to our shores and which is still uncommon is the Formosa Firethorn (Pyracantha formosana.) So covered with berries that the leaves are hidden from view, it is without a rival in the field of berried shrubs. It is not a flame—it is a conflagration.

A Christmas Holly at Last

The lack of real Holly for Christmas has long been lamented in the Southern end of our State, but, according to the word of the Plant Introduction Department, we now have a Holly not unlike the English or Eastern Holly that will grow in full sun and bear myriads of red berries. It is reputed to grow on exposed slopes in limestone soil in its native land. It requires no more water than the ordinary shrubs used in the average home garden. The common name of Chinese Holly has been given it, but it pricks up its horns and its shiny face beams as if to say, "that's me," when called by its botanical name "Ilex cornuta," cornuta meaning, having horns which it has on every leaf.

FARM and GARDEN

COMMENT AND OPINION

Farm and Garden

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of agricultural production are gladly received. Address all letters to editorial department, Farm and Garden Magazine.

That New Road

THE observations made in the following communication to Farm and Garden interestingly supplement those in the recent article by O. A. Fitzgerald of the University of Idaho on the economic interrelationship of coastal and interior areas of the West. T. S. Shuttleworth, executive secretary of the organization known as the Allied Counties of Nevada, is the writer.

"Construction of an improved highway, from Caliente to a connection with the Arrowhead Trail, and via the Pahranagat Valley," says Mr. Shuttleworth, "would complete a most important link of United States Highway No. 93, a transcontinental route from Banff, Canada, south through Eastern Nevada. It would provide tourists with an alternative route to or from scenic Southern Utah, enabling them also to visit such Eastern Nevada attractions as Cathedral Gorge, the great copper pit at Ruth, and the famous Lehman Caves, and it would connect probably the finest potential agricultural district in the State with the natural markets for its products, Los Angeles and the other large centers of population in Southern California.

"Pahranagat Valley, handicapped by forty-five miles of desert road from Caliente, its nearest railroad shipping point, has water, soil and climate. Its development will provide from 300 to 500 profitable farm homes. Pahranagat can provide feed and pasture for 15,000 money-making dairy cows, or it can produce feed for more than a million laying hens.

"The soil is productive and bumper crops have been grown each year for a generation, with no noticeable decrease in fertility. It is the kind of soil in which garden crops or grains flourish.

"Nestling amid rock-ribbed hills, Pahranagat extends to the tourist an invitation to tarry. There is shade by the wayside. There are natural bathing pools, heated by nature to blood temperature. The region is out in the desert, but great springs, crystal clear, bubble by the roadside. There are brooks, ponds and lakes, with water that never varies, with the seasons, or with the year. There are deer in the hills, there are wild ducks and geese innumerable on the ponds and lakes. There are fish in the streams; quail are found everywhere.

"Pahranagat needs this hard-surfaced road, a truck road that will carry heavy loads. All markets are enticing, but Los Angeles is the great objective. It can absorb in quantity what Pahranagat can produce, and for untold years to come. Pahranagat waits expectant, for the highway, which after years of work and effort, now appears certain of early construction."

"Pointing" Steers

IT IS the custom of football coaches to "point" their teams for certain crucial games—to fit their men and drill them to meet certain other teams which they are anxious to beat. At the conclusion of the live-stock show which closed its doors about a week ago, hundreds of stockmen, young and old, saw what can be done in the way of breeding and fitting steers not only for the show ring but also for the butcher's block—full where the meat is choicest, mellow all over, with a maximum of beef and a minimum of waste in dressing out.

It is to be hoped that these are "pointing" their herds for the Los Angeles market, studying their own conditions and their own stock in order to present them in better condition than ever before, so that when they are "weighed in the balance," they will not be "found wanting" in any of the particulars sought for by the buyers and packers.

The old days, when it was sufficient to have some cows and any old bull and turn them out on the range till they were big enough and then send them to market, are fading out of the picture. As Los Angeles and other Southwest cities grow larger, they become more particular in their tastes. They are not content with any sort of meat. Maybe this is a sign of degeneracy in teeth. Maybe it is just too bad that our citizenry aren't satisfied with grass steers, tough old cows and bull meat.

The fact remains, however, that we want tender, high-flavored meat nowadays and are willing to pay for it. There's more money for the producer in good beef breeds and proper feeding, even though it does entail more initial cost for stock and more work in caring for the animals.

An era of better beef is dawning. There are good ones coming into the stockyards right along, but not enough—not near enough. Try and buy a good steak! We look forward with hope to that time when it will be possible to get the sort of meat we crave in the markets of Los Angeles at any time. It hasn't come yet, but it's nearer than it was before this year's great show.

Problem for Science

WE OF the Southwest are still in an experimental stage so far as our ultimate development is concerned. Time sufficient to prove the enduring quality of our civilization has not passed. Thinking men say so. There are some rather ominous facts to consider in this connection.

There are great areas in the world where civilizations have been built, one on top of another, for many centuries, all founded on a rich and fertile land, with favoring climate and an agriculture which has never failed. In our own Southwest we have signs of the past to indicate that civilizations existed and then disappeared. And no civilization in all history ever built as rapidly, or revealed such evidence of continuity in advancement of population as ours.

"It is possible," says Dr. H. J. Webber of the Citrus Experiment Station at Riverside, "that the reason for the vanishing of past peoples in the Southwest was the failure of water. We are on trial, ourselves, and we have yet to prove that we are able to found an enduring culture here. It is a matter of enough water."

Our engineering ability has enabled us to bring water for considerable distances to provide for our present domestic irrigation needs. That is well, but some people already vision a day when all we can secure may be insufficient. There won't be enough for all the needs of our teeming millions, even if we can depend upon interior areas to feed us, as O. A. Fitzgerald predicted they will have to, in his interesting article in Farm and Garden last week.

Urging people to economize on the water we have is good as far as it goes, but the most rigid economy will not supply us when we begin to expand to the limit of our lands, when the underground resources are all tapped and in use, when the farthest reach of our conduits has been attained.

Where'll we get more water? It's quite a problem. Can we divert it from lands much farther away than the Colorado River, say from the Columbia River, without disturbing the welfare of the people there? When the Southwest is fully settled, when the lands unfit for agriculture are largely utilized for homes (as who can doubt they will be?) the water problem is going to be the greatest of all for us.

And yet we have water at our doors. The Pacific Ocean stretches from our borders, immeasurably in breadth and depth—"water, water everywhere, nor any drop to drink," in the words of the Ancient Mariner. There it is, cool, sparkling, inviting, in unlimited quantities—and briny. It offers an eternal challenge to our chemists and scientists to find some cheap and satisfactory way of extracting the salts and giving us what's left for our greatest need.

The salts can be extracted—we have done it. The problem is to extract it cheaply enough and in quantities. We don't know how it is going to be done, but we have a certain abiding faith in the ingenuity of the present civilization that it will be accomplished. To our lay mind it does not seem to be beyond the limits of scientific, chemical and engineering abilities.

And how it would solve our difficulties! We wouldn't have to build pipes across mountains, valleys and deserts to bring water to us. Instead, we would have water to distribute—plenty of it.

Just what we will do with the salt after we take it out of the water is something else again. But we can wait for its disposal when we find the economic method of getting it out.

Walnuts Inspected

A special inspector from the Los Angeles County Agricultural Commissioner's office has been detailed to protect roadside walnut purchasers this season, and is paying particular attention to sacked walnuts prepared ready for mailing to the east during the holidays. The present crop is even shorter than was anticipated earlier in the season, and this has been responsible for a brisk demand and a great deal of mixing of inferior nuts with those of good grade. Although there is a 20 per cent tolerance, five dozens already have been cited and fined, the penalty approximating $250 in each case.

Why Vista Sales Lead All Other Orchard Lands

THE famous Vista district leads all Southland orchard-income land areas in development and sales. As one of many examples of growth ...carlot shipments out of Vista increased from 18 in 1926 to over 300 in 1929.

More than 400 purchasers to date include many successful citrus and avocado orchardists, former farm land advisors, and agricultural college graduates, bankers, lawyers, directors, and business men and women of practically every vocation. They came to Vista from California and many outside states and foreign countries.

These purchasers found at Vista a climate made both for maximum personal comfort the year round, and for ideal growing conditions for avocados, citrus fruits and subtropicals generally. (Even bananas have been grown successfully out of doors here.)

They found a convenient location, just 100 miles south of Los Angeles, 50 miles north of San Diego, on the paved Inland Highway...7 miles from the Coast Highway, at Oceanside, with Santa Fe Railway and daily bus service at Vista.

They found a dependable water supply in Lake Henshaw, largest impounding reservoir in Southern California. And they found fertile soil, as the remarkable growth of present orchards testifies.

Lost Little Fruit

Wind Blew High Percentage of Leaves From Trees

Many citrus growers report but slight damage from the recent high winds. The wind in many cases caused the loss of poor fruit only. This has created optimism among the growers, according to W. H. Williams, assistant farm adviser of Los Angeles county.

The wind tore some leaves off the trees, instead of removing them at the abcission layer as would have been the case had the leaves been dried out by a more steady wind. The violent removal of leaves is more of a shock than is the more natural way a tree has of getting rid of transpiration surface that it cannot keep supplied with moisture. Some lemon groves have been observed which appear to have lost fully 50 per cent of their leaves, but they have the greater part of their lemons still hanging. Some of this fruit is bruised or blemished, but no extensive injury is evident in these cases.

The trees must repair the injuries made by torn-off leaves and then grow a new crop of foliage from reserve stores to cover the more or less denuded branches, says Mr. Williams. Added to this is the necessity for maturing a normal crop of fruit with, in many cases, only half of the food-manufacturing leaf surface remaining. It would have been better for the future of the tree if the same proportion of leaves and crop had been removed to maintain a proper balance.

All plant food for root growth, for branch and leaf growth, as well as for flowering, setting and sizing of fruit, it is pointed out, is manufactured in the leaves. If the leaf surface is large, there is a great amount of plant food manufactured, and if the leaf surface is small the reverse is true, all other conditions being equal. To assist the trees in recovering from severe wind injury, the grower should assure himself by digging down into the root zone, that there is an abundance of moisture and that the trees do not get dry at any time during the winter. In the case of lemons where there may be more fruit than leaves, the larger fruits should be removed if they are at all marketable. The first leaves to come on after wind injury are usually mottled and small, but if the trees are properly taken care of the next cycle of leaves will be normal in color and size.

It's No Problem

plants to allow for their ultimate growth, and setting out some choice mesembryanthemums which were intended for ground-cover, he considered the job completed. To his horror, he found, on a trip he made very shortly afterward to see how the plants were coming along, that a zealous gardener had set snapdragon and stock plants in the bare spots! Needless to add, that was lost labor on the gardener's part.

Mr. Adams stressed the fact that we do not use mesembryanthemums and other creeping forms of such succulents as sedums enough in this sort of plantings. He implored us, incidentally, to use some of the varieties of "mesems" which have soft, rich-toned flowers, in apricots, burnt-orange, lavenders, yellows and the like and thereby to get away from the variety so commonly used which gives us that harsh, trying shade of pink which simply refuses to blend with anything.

In speaking of rock gardens, Mr. Adams voiced a plea for appreciation of the genuine beauty that lies in natural rock—and especially the kind that has the soft gray and brownish tones that harmonize with all natural surroundings. As he points out, there is an ample supply of such rock in this State and so there's little excuse for using the harsh and uglier types. There is no excuse at all, he says (and I'm glad he said it!) for anyone to create artificial rock out of cement. To say nothing of artificial logs, and the like. He certainly drove home the undisputed point that nothing bogus is art. But he placed the crown for bad taste on those who dab colored paint on the rocks that they use around their gardens—rocks that are already tinted by a Master Artist to fit into such a picture—a sin only equaled by those who are so blind to real beauty that they painstakingly scrape the moss and lichens off a rock, destroying the very thing which would make a discriminating person pay a fancy price for it. As he said, if we take time to observe how these things look in natural rock gardens we find in our mountains and hills,

Help for Grain Men

Grain probably is more dependent upon world conditions than is any other agricultural commodity. This is because grain is grown in practically every civilized country of the world. Grain prices and conditions are constantly changing, depending upon the entire world's supply and demand. While local conditions may seem important in one area, they often have little bearing on prices.

For example, harvests may be large in California but comparatively high prices may be secured. Small crops in other sections may more than offset the local surplus. On the other hand, small supplies in California may bring only low prices, due to huge surpluses elsewhere.

It is important for California grain growers to know what market conditions are in outside sections. The organization of which the Federal-State Market News Service is a part is so set up as to make this possible. The San Francisco and Los Angeles markets are merely links in a large national chain. The United States Bureau of Agricultural Economics maintains offices in all the important grain markets of the United States, securing information as to prices and conditions. It also has correspondents in the principal foreign grain-growing and consuming countries outside the United States, who send information on conditions in those areas. All this news is sent to the Washington office by telegraph and cable, and compiled. Then, by means of a leased wire system which embraces 10,000 miles of territory, this news is distributed throughout the country to growers and dealers who are interested. The news is sent over the radio and my means of bulletins and reviews through the mail and newspapers. It is in this way that knowledge of grain conditions in far distant points on the globe is made available in a comparatively short time to each local community throughout the United States.

Phoenix Dairymen Decide What

Phoenix Dairymen Decide What Their Cows Shall Eat

PHOENIX.—Dairymen of Salt River Valley are through buying someone else's idea of what is good feed ration for their cows, if the plans of the Arizona Milk Producers' Association and J. A. Waldron, assistant county agricultural agent, go through. Instead, they have worked out three standard feed rations and have secured the promise of co-operation of three feed mills in the valley in mixing the feeds according to their formulas.

The feed rations, according to Mr. Waldron, who was formerly herd specialist for the Fred Harvey Del Rio farm, are based on the necessities of meeting three general pasturage conditions, good alfalfa, alfalfa and Johnson grass mixed and even poorer feed, such as Johnson grass, grain and barley, maize or hegari, mixed with a little molasses or bran, is recommended. If the cow is pastured on Johnson grass and alfalfa, more of the ground barley, maize or hegari is required, plus bran, cottonseed meal and molasses. In the case of the poorest grazing conditions, the cottonseed meal and molasses are increased in the ration and oil meal is added. Dairymen trying out the new rations have given enthusiastic reports as to the response in milk from their cows.

Mr. Waldron is also conducting a campaign aimed to get every cow owner to weigh his milk daily and keep an accurate record of just what his cows are doing. He says that the porducer will make far more in the course of a year by this practice than he will ever gain by arguing with the distributors over the price he should receive for his milk.

A recent survey for walnut husk fly in the mountainous regions of Los Angeles county, with special attention to wild walnuts and other known host plants, failed to locate any new infestations in those districts, it is reported by K. L. Wolf, deputy county agricultural commissioner.

Orchard Patriarchs of Yosemite Planted Long Before the World Knew of Valley's Scenic Grandeur

By A. D. Shamel and C. S. Pomeroy

[Here is an interesting bit of California horticultural history, the offering of two distinguished scientists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Dr. Shamel and Dr. Pomeroy, both veterans of the Bureau of Plant Industry, are now carrying on important investigational work at Riverside.—Ed.]

MOST of us who visit the Yosemite Valley are overwhelmed by the incomparable beauty if its sublime scenery. While the valley is of relatively small size, only eight square miles as compared with the 1126 square miles of the Yosemite National Park as a whole, it contains a superabundance of sheer beauty and several visits are required in order that one may appreciate its many interesting and delightful attractions.

The writers have visited the valley a number of times during the past twenty years, but it was not until a trip made on Sunday, August 3, this year, in company with Dr. W. A. Taylor and C. G. Woodbury that we became interested in an old apple orchard near Curry's Camp. On this occasion Dr. Taylor, with a background of a lifelong interest in horticulture, was the first of our party to recognize the apple trees and to call our attention to them. Later in the day, Dr. Taylor inquired at the information desk in the park museum as to the history of the apple orchard and was referred to the Park Service librarian, Mrs. H. J. Taylor. As that was on Sunday and the library was closed, further information was not available at the time.

On election day, August 26, the writers visited the valley again in response to Dr. Taylor's suggestion that further information concerning the apple planting be obtained at some convenient opportunity. We were fortunate this time in meeting Mrs. Taylor, the librarian, and, through her deep interest in the history of the valley, to obtain reliable information as to the apple plantings therein.

The Yosemite Valley was discovered in 1851 in connection with the settlement of Indian problems in that region. Dr. L. H. Bunnel, a member of the expedition, suggested the name after the aborigines who lived there. The first house, later known as Black's hotel, was built in 1855. In 1859, J. C. Lamon, from Virginia, pre-empted a claim to 160 acres in that part of the valley, approximately, where Curry's Camp is now located. On this claim he built a cabin and he is reported to have been the first white man to live in the valley through an entire year, having spent the years of 1862 and 1863 alone there.

Mr. Lamon was greatly respected and loved by those who knew him. He was a bachelor and lived alone in his cabin, the first in the valley. He prepared to plant his land to fruit trees, vegetable and other crops and arranged to irrigate the fields with water from springs under the Arch Rocks, near by.

A message of the Governor of California transmitting the report of the Yosemite Commissioners for 1870 and a memorial of James C. Lamon dated December 4, 1869, contains the statement that there were over 1000 apple, pear, peach, plum, nectarine and almond trees living at that time and just beginning to bear abundantly, together with a very fine garden consisting of large patches of various kinds of berries, such as strawberries, blackberries and others. The fruit trees were planted in two large orchards, one of which is near the present site of Curry's Camp and the other a mile or so away and near the present stables of the park saddle-horse service.

Real Old-Timers

Mr. Lamon states in his memorial that "the fruit trees are of the very choicest selections of grafted fruit and the orchards are cultivated with the greatest care and labor, in thoroughly and deeply preparing the ground, and constant cultivation." While the exact date of these plantings is unknown, it was probably during the early or middle 'sixties. At the present time about 400 trees survive in the Curry Camp orchard and about the same number near the saddle-horse service stables. This means that the present trees are in the neighborhood of 65 years old, a very respectable age as apple tree orchards go on the Pacific Slope.

The State of California paid Mr. Lamon $12,000 for his claim in 1874. He arranged to continue to live on it, but died in May, 1875, and is buried in the little cemetery near the foot of Yosemite Falls. His grave is marked by a tombstone on which is engraved the date of his birth, 1817, and of his death in 1875, and the tribute—"The pioneer settler of Yosemite Valley."

A third orchard was planted, probably a little later than the Lamon plantings, near the present site of Yosemite Lodge by another pioneer settler, J. M. Hutchings. Originally about 300 apple trees and a few peach and pear trees, with at least one cherry tree, were planted in this orchard on the claim taken up by Mr. Hutchings, of which about 125 trees now survive. The Hutchings' apple trees were grown from seed sent to him by a friend in Waltham, Mass., and the seedlings were later budded to selected varieties. The Hutchings claim was also purchased by the State, along with the Lamon claim and two others, $24,000 being paid for it. The property included a hotel built in 1859.

An attempt was made to determine the varieties of fruits represented in the three orchards, but most of the trees were entirely barren at the season we were there, due, we were told, to spring frosts. One of the Park Service, who had previously had agricultural training, stated that he had recognized the following varieties; Baldwin, Rhode Island Greening, Ben Davis, Maiden Blush, Grimes Golden and probably Snow apples, together with Seckel and Winter Nelis pears.

For some years little or no care seems to have been given these fruit trees. They are evidently suffering from a lack of intelligent pruning, spraying, soil fertilization and irrigation. In spite of this fact, the testimony of old-timers in the valley indicates that the trees bear abundantly under normal climatic conditions.

We were told by Yosemite Valley residents that the bears shake down the luscious fruits and eat a few of them, the deer eating what they leave. One of the residents told us that his share last year after the bear and deer had had their portion was seven boxes of delicious apples. A visitor recalled a previous trip to the valley, late in the summer of 1917, and told us that the abundance of fine eating apples there at the time stood out clearly in his memory.

Worth Preserving

Other visitors and residents were unanimous in their high praise of the beauty of the apple trees during their blooming in the springtime. With their unparalleled setting, it does not take much of an imagination to comprehend the inspiring spectacle of the Yosemite apple trees in full bloom.

The writers believe and urge that the remaining apple trees in the Yosemite Valley orchards should be preserved on account of their historic value, their intrinsic beauty and their food value to the bear, deer and other Yosemite denizens, as well as for the human population. We suggest that steps be taken to prune the trees, thinning out the deadwood and interfering growth; that the trees be sprayed at the proper times in order to protect them and preserve their fruits from insect attack and disease, and that some fertilizer, such as calcium nitrate, sulphate of ammonia or stable manure, be spread on the soil around them. It would also be highly desirable, if practicable, to irrigate these orchards at least two or three times during the long, comparitively rainless summer season and, with the abundance of water in the valley, this plan should not be impracticable. The Yosemite is richly endowed with a great variety of striking and interesting flowers, shrubs and trees. The native flowers often occur in masses of heavenly color, entrancing to the eyes of all who are fortunate enough to be in the region during their blooming.

The asparagus fields of Imperial Valley put on husky tops twice a year with the new method of double cutting, making an extra crop of stalks also. The desert is said to be the only place where this is done.

An Autumn Delicacy

ASPARAGUS TWICE A YEAR FROM DESERT

By Iva M. McFadden

TO THE family, particularly the eastern family, wanting something different from the usual fall menu, the new asparagus season inaugurated in Imperial Valley is calculated to prove of interest. It is so interesting to many, in fact, that they have been willing to pay perfectly good money in this year of all years when cash is supposed to have evaporated from the earth, just for the privilege of having their "grass" all fresh and luscious at a new time of year. Needless to say, this has not been hard for the growers to take.

The expansion in asparagus culture, which is slowly making its way in the desert, is probably due to this new side of the picture. The desert is the only place where a double cutting of asparagus has proven possible. Even there the idea seemed radical, at first, but in 1926, Jack Brothers and McBurney experimented with 200 crates of late stuff and found that the trade was eager to absorb it. Marketing "grass" in October and November just hadn't been done before. The expansion went from there to 2000 crates in 1927, to 10,000 in '28, and to 30,000 in '29. This season, it is believed, the final returns will show at least 50,000 crates. The prices throughout have been quite satisfactory.

Just what Nature herself was going to say about trying to grow two crops on roots that were intended for one, nobody exactly knew in the beginning, but now the possibilities are quite well determined. The quality is not influenced, but the quantity is. That is to say, the total annual cutting both in spring and fall does not equal what once was cut in the spring. But the returns are greater, and after all, it is that end of the game that interests us most.

This is due to the fact that Imperial Valley has the whole market in the fall. There is no competition, and it is a time of year when summer vegetables are about gone and nobody is very eager to settle down to our hardy less tempting vegetables of the winter. It is true enough that the very first of the spring asparagus from the desert has a way of dipping up a big spoon of "cream" from that market, but other districts enter the field too soon to let this condition last very long. When prices sag to a low point distant producing areas such as ours must retire from the market. But with a combination of both spring and fall crops, the desert seems to have a very nice thing of it in asparagus.

Cheap Freight Helps

Another thing which has helped the "grass" grower is a less expensive method of shipping. It used to be considered necessary to send asparagus by express, but now, with an advance precooling, it is perfectly feasible to freight the cars. Two or three days of subjecting the tips to cold will deliver them to markets two weeks away by freight in better condition than they used to be when arriving after five or six days by express and without precooling.

Of course this does not change the usual

The Poultry Yard

A Quality Show

Encinitas Man Winner of Cup at Midwinter

Much crowing in the chicken section made up for the silence of the rabbit department and the quiet sounds that emanated from the pigeons at the annual Los Angeles midwinter poultry show, held this year in Shrine Auditorium.

Henry Scherruble of Encinitas, with a Buff Orpington cockerel, won the Farm and Garden Magazine trophy for best bird in the show. Best cock was exhibited by P. J. Peltier of Los Angeles, and was a Rhode Island Red. The champion hen was a White Orpington shown by Thomas P. Endicott of Granada. Scholl & Scholl of Long Beach took champion pullet with an exhibition Barred Rock. Best pen, four hens and a male, went to Mr. Peltier for his Reds. The champion baby chick was a White Leghorn entered by W. C. Childers of Santa Ana, who also had the best entry of Buff Orpington baby chicks. Hewitt Hatchery of Van Nuys had the best entry of baby chicks, consisting of Barred Rocks and Reds.

The big basement room of the auditorium was comfortably filled with coops and lined with commercial booths, and proved quite a favorable site for a show which has become a classic in Southern California.

Six hundred of the finest chickens in the land were on exhibit, well varied as to breed, high as to quality. The outstanding breed from point of numbers was the Barred Plymouth Rock, of which there must have been close to 130 specimens on display.

The judges were C. P. Scott of Peoria, Ill., president of the Rhode Island Red Club of America; A. C. Smith of Minneapolis, Minn., professor of poultry husbandry at the University of Minnesota and editor of the Standard of Perfection, by which all exhibition fowls are judged; M. A. Schofield of Vista, who judged the baby chicks, a novelty at the show which attracted much attention, and Frank W. Newburg of Santa Barbara, who judged the eggs, another feature which was an innovation at the show.

These competent judges found the running so close that they consumed several days in placing the ribbons.

The show manager was Robert T. Lyans, secretary-treasurer of the Greater Southern California Poultry Association; the superintendent was the veteran poultryman and showman, E. I. Hammond of Riverside.

The show is sponsored annually by the association, of which J. Will Blackman of Los Angeles is president, and Arthur E. Huskins of North Los Angeles and George C. England of Inglewood, vice-presidents. Directors are George L. Ashton, Los Angeles; Paul E. Kennedy, Pomona; Albert George Sly and Andrew Stodel, Los Angeles, and Fritz Thott, Pasadena.

The rabbit show, well-attended and popular with the crowds, included 150 blue-blooded animals, and the pigeons numbered 1200, their coops taking up a large floor space.

Although New York pays a premium for white-shelled eggs, and Boston is willing to pay more for brown-shelled, the United States government declares that there is no difference in quality, provided brown and white eggs are of equal freshness and produced under equally favorable conditions.

The "brooder in an office." F. H. Allen of Russell Poultry Yards, Van Nuys, looks over his display.

Notes From the Field

About 2000 Tulare county turkeys were shipped in the first pool of the Tulare county unit of the California Turkey Growers' Association for the Thanksgiving market. Although the pool had been organised but a short time before, better prices were expected by growers under the arrangement than were being offered by independent buyers at the ranch. Over 9000 birds are represented in the Tulare county branch of the State organization. Another pool will be conducted about ten days before Christmas for the Yuletide trade, with yet another in January or February to clear up remaining birds. Headquarters of the Tulare county unit are at the Tulare Co-operative Poultry Association plant. Lawrence Jones, manager of the Tulare co-operative, is also State director for the county unit. The birds are sold f.o.b. Tulare by the carload.

A Barred Plymouth Rock hen from the Dryden Poultry Breeding farm at Modesto, brought honors to California in the 1929-30 egg-laying contest at Storrs, Connecticut, with a record of 334 eggs in fifty-two weeks. Member of a pen of Rocks which averaged 240.8 eggs per hen, this particular bird, designated as No. 24, beat all hens of any breed in the contest. It also made the highest record for a Barred Rock in nineteen years at the contest, which has trapped some 20,000 hens in that time. Its record was exceeded only once in the nineteen years, and that by a Leghorn hen which laid two eggs more. It made the highest record for any hen of a heavy breed in all contests in the United States during the year, and was only exceeded by one Leghorn hen. Its mark this year was the highest United States contest record ever made for its breed.

Nevada turkey growers for the second time report top pool prices for their product if the figures gathered from other pools by the Nevada Agricultural Extension Service are correct. Although the 33 and 31-cent prices for prime and choice toms and hens were slightly lower than last year's, the smaller cost of feed just about offset the loss. After the Nevada birds were sold, offers two cents higher were received. Eight an one-half carloads were disposed of by the pool, going to commission houses in Los Angeles, Pasadena and San Francisco.

• • •

George England of Inglewood, well-known breeder of White Leghorns, while not entering pens in California egg-laying contests this year, is the only out-of-State entrant in the Arizona contest at Tucson. Mr. England, on learning that for the first time, Arizona was permitting the entry of outside pens, secured the only remaining reservation and sent his birds along. At the end of the first month, his pen was standing second to G. S. Stover's Leghorns from Tucson. Liggett-Mishler's Reds from Phoenix were third.

Some of the large poultry interests of the nation, including the International Baby Chick Association, with headquarters in Kansas City, have initiated a campaign to increase the use of eggs by cooks and housewives. The first step in what promises to be quite an extensive advertising campaign was the opening, on November 9, of broadcasting over three big eastern radio chains. Famous home economists and chefs are making the talks.

• • •

The newly-elected officers of the Seven Southern Counties Poultry Department, M. F. Donahae of San Diego, president, and Roland Flaherty, Santa Ana, secretary, are rounding the year's program into shape. They were named to office at the last meeting, held in Riverside.

One hundred hens, laying heavily, will transpire three to four gallons of water as vapor in a day, says a poultry authority. The nonlayers will give off only half as much.

"Parlor Furniture"

Battery Brooders Clean Enough for Business Office

You've doubtless seen a farmer's incubator in his kitchen, where the "missus" can control the temperature and look after airing and turning right handily. But baby chicks have always been a "horse of another color," and the brooder has always had to be outside the home. But nowadays, what with the new battery brooders, chicks are just as clean and neat in the house as is the incubator.

One Southland hatchery, the Russell Poultry Yards, Van Nuys, to exemplify this advantage, as well as to keep a display of stock-in-trade—namely, chicks—right out where prospective customers can see them, has battery brooders right in the main office. They're as clean and neat as can be, and without detectable odor. They make a businesslike addition to the place.

F. H. Allen, manager of the hatchery, has kept some figures on these electrically-heated brooders which may prove of interest. He found that the power consumption at the hatchery the first month after the brooders were installed increased $35. Since there were nine brooders, the power cost per brooder, roughly, would be $4 per month, $1 per week, 14 cents per day.

It should be borne in mind, Mr. Allen says, that the brooders are operating in a nonheated room, or rather, in a room kept only at ordinary room temperature.

Beginner Succeeds

How a Nevadan without previous experience made a greater success at poultry raising than the average professional by applying plenty of ambition coupled with approved methods of chicken culture has been reported to Prof. V. E. Scott of the Nevada Agricultural Extension Service.

Arthur Dickinson is the man, and his ranch is a five-acre plot near Steamboat Springs in Truckee meadows. He did not devote his entire time to the poultry work. Keeping only an average of 250 hens and never more than 350, the Washoe county man in the year ending last spring had made a gross income of $5.03 per hen.

To get an early start in poultry raising, he bought some baby chicks and some "seconds" pullets from a neighboring flock at a cost of $102.93. Feed for them and miscellaneous expenditures during the year cost him $642.03. While the pullets did not prove to be good layers, they brought a fair price for meat, and the total income from the sale of cull hens and cockerels, including those eaten at home and given away, was $114.79.

The pullets began laying in September, 1929, and total receipts until the end of the project year were $784, making a total income of $898.76. With the hens on hand at the end of the project year worth $172, Mr. Dickenson had made a grand total of $1070 during the year.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF AGRICULTURAL ACTIVITIES IN THE SOUTHWEST

Hemet The first shipment of oranges from Hemet for the season was a car sent to Kansas City on November 24 by the Hemet Orange Growers' Association. The fruit was picked from the Samuel Jewell grove and consisted of Thompson Improved navels. This is the first shipment of the season from Riverside county by an exchange house and is one of the earliest orange shipments ever made by the local association. The Hemet orange groves suffered but very little loss in the windstorm of November 22. No fruit was blown from the trees and what little damage was done consisted of the bruising of wind-whipped oranges. Horticultural Inspector H. A. Richardson reports that the loss will be very small. Hemet expects to send several carloads of oranges East for the Christmas market.

Walnut harvest season in the Hemet district comes to a close December 15, that being the last date on which deliveries for inclusion in the second 1930 pool will be received at the packing-house of the Hemet Walnut Growers' Association. . The total receipts at the local packing-house for the season will approximate 365 tons, as against last year's record-breaking total of 625 tons. Checks for approximately 70 per cent of the gross value of the first 1930 pool deliveries, excepting culls, were distributed to members of the local association the first week of this month. Further payments will be made to growers by the local association upon receipt of money from the California Growers' Association when sales are made of the remainder of the crop, which is at present moving slowly. "Emerald" grade walnuts brought local growers prices ranging from 18 to 22 cents a pound, with 15 cents for "Babies." "California" grade nuts brought 16½ to 17½ cents per pound.

Brawley A trainload of Imperial Valley hay billed for midwestern markets has left for El Paso. As far as El Paso this has gone in separate installments, but at that point advance cars have been held so that the entire train of twenty-two cars may go together as far as San Antonio. Imperial Valley has joined with Antelope and San Fernando valleys in forming a cooperative known as the "Federated Hay Growers of Southern California." This is not a sales organization, but is a means of "getting together" to strengthen the hay situation for Southern California. Scott B. Foulds, secretary-treasurer, and S. E. Robinson, president of the Imperial Valley Farm Bureau, represented Imperial Valley in Los Angeles, where the organization was formed. It was the consensus of opinion that Imperial Valley should ship hay to the Midwest by train while the other districts could best make use of boats east via Panama.

That Imperial Valley has been busy shipping vegetables is shown by the fact that 634 cars of these perishables left during the first eighteen days in November. Of these, 512 were peas. Melons, grapefruit, asparagus and cucumbers as well as mixed cars made up the rest.

Strathmore The greater portion of California's output of pomegranates comes from Tulare county. Of the 1600 acres in production this season, 1320 lie in Tulare county, according to Cesar Hemphill, county agricultural commissioner. The greater portion of this acreage is found in the east-side belt of the county. Most of the fruit is shipped out of the State or to Los Angeles and San Francisco.

El Monte The Los Angeles County Farm Bureau truck crop growers' department held its annual meeting at El Monte on December 5. Roy Campbell of the United States Bureau of Entomology discussed the control of insect pests on truck crops, and the program of work for 1931 was outlined. A large and representative group of vegetable growers was present.

There's a reason why this young lady is out in the artichoke patch. She is Miss Linda del Chiarro of Castroville and she can trace her lineage back for 500 years, during which time her forbears have been growing artichokes. Many of the families of Castroville are Italians whose ancestors have handed down the science and art of "choke" growing through the centuries.

Yuma, Ariz. The Yuma Valley Pecan Growers' Association, at its annual meeting held here recently, made a field tour of plantings in the district, studying cultural methods at first hand. Several Californians were present. One grower, after experiments with a number of varieties, declared that he had settled upon Halmerts, Success, Kincaid and Burketts as the most desirable kinds for the district. Another recommended the flooding process for irrigating the trees, and urged the use of cover crops to fertilize the orchard. Still another grower had headed his trees off to four or five feet, making a bushy effect and facilitating picking. Planting should be done between December and March, he suggested. Dr. P. F. Burgess, University of Arizona, talked on fertilization practices. F. R. Ketcherside, secretary of the growers' association, was in charge of arrangements for the meeting. Dr. W. J. Dickson is president of the organization and A. T. Fitch is vice-president.

San Bernardino Plans for the twenty-first annual National Orange Show, to be held February 19 to March 1, 1931, in this city, were laid at the show management's duck dinner which has also become an annual institution, and which was held at the Hotel California, this city, November 19. The orange show is always a gorgeous event, and next year's, which will be part of California's "gala year" of continuous entertainment and activity, will surpass all former events, it was promised. The theme motif for the decorations will be Persian, and present plans call for the expenditure of $100,000 on the show. The duck dinner was attended by representatives of the growers' organizations, civic groups, chambers of commerce and the press.

Vista Local residents under the leadership of Fred Burns, formerly of Los Angeles are planting a total of thirty-five acres to edible passion fruit. Experimental plantings here have indicated, they feel, that the Vista district is well adapted to this plant, now widely grown in Australia as a crop of commercial importance. Passiflora edulis is a climbing vine and requires a trellis if a considerable crop is expected. A co-operative factory is talked of here to turn the fruit into marketable products, juices and jellies.

Tulare "A corking good selling organization" is the way C. C. Selden of Los Angeles, recently appointed manager of the California unit of the American Cotton Co-operative Association, described the national organization. The remark featured his address to the cotton growers of this section of the San Joaquin Valley at Tulare Union High School late in November. "The government is giving such a 'break' as never before equaled," he said; "giving more in an immediate full cash settlement than could be gotten in any other way, giving the most economical means of holding cotton, with the most liberal advance and the least risk when it is desirable to hold the cotton." Mr. Selden declared he had been working for the past ten years to convince people that California cotton is the best in the world, and that it ought to bring a price at least equal to any. He characterized the co-operative method as one which "cuts out a lot of the bridges." While disavowing any intention of forecasting the market's future trend, he said he hoped there would be no large advance made before March, since that would mean a big acreage next year.

A top price of $9.65 per hundredweight was reached both in the feeder and fat hog sales in Tulare, at the biweekly hog auction conducted by the Tulare County Farm Bureau on November 25. Three carloads of hogs, plus odds and ends, comprised the shipment, according to R. L. Shore, auctioneer. Heavy sows went at from $4.30 to $8.80, while small pigs went from $5.50 to $7.25.

A carload of cattle was shipped to market from Tulare November 24, under the auspices of the Tulare County Farm Bureau. Another carload shipment was also made from Hanford. The local consignment consisted of ten calves and twenty-nine cows, many of them low producers, weeded out of high-grade herds for beef.

Redlands Now that the usual big windstorm, which comes almost every fall and threatens to do damage to the citrus crop, is out of the way, with less than 5 per cent of the fruit on the trees damaged by the wind, the growers are keeping their anxious eyes on the thermometers. For from now until the last of January there is always danger that Jack Frost will sneak in behind his interference and make a touchdown on the citrus crop. The greatest danger is during the next month, for only a small percentage of the crop will be picked before the first of the year. With the elaborate precautions that have been taken, it does not seem possible that cold can do any damage. There are thermometers all over the district that are carefully watched, the government experts can predict to within a degree of the minimum temperature, and there are thousands of heaters to raise the temperatures in the orchards in case the mercury does get too low. But the growers will feel a lot more comfortable after they have shipped some of their fruit or after the real danger of frost is over.

Riverside Grain test plots, including several varieties of wheat, barley and oats, have been planted in Palo Verde Valley near Blythe by M. M. Winslow, Riverside county farm adviser, and his assistant, N. L. McFarlane. The two made a special trip to the valley, attending the recent annual Palo Verde Valley fair and rodeo. A fine display of cereals grown in that section was entered by Louis Favret. The ranchers of the Blythe district are asking that a special assistant farm adviser be stationed in the desert valley, to aid in the diversification of crops. This way of widening the scope of crop production is the only means of reaching permanent prosperity, they feel.

Mrs. K. P. M.—It is difficult to even hazard a guess as to the reason why your Coreopsis lanceolata plants have not all bloomed. As you set them out in March, them as a change of diet. Bone meal is good as a frequent top dressing, sparingly used. A garden needs to be kept growing constantly and it needs a rich soil. However, if your soil is stiff, mix in some sharp sand. While the plant wants a moist soil at all times, it doesn't want it soggy. It helps to keep the soil sweet if charcoal is mixed in about the roots. The plant should be sprayed with the hose frequently, using

Rhubarb Interesting Crop Specialty in Gardens of Southland

ONE of the readers of this page has expressed interest in rhubarb culture, both as a home garden vegetable and an incidental crop income on a small acreage place in Soutnern California. Rhubarb has been one of our interesting crop specialties in this section for many years and several commercial growers have made many improvements in existing strains and have even developed new ones. It is particularly adapted to small farm and intercrop planting, and several developments of this kind have been profitable.

A perennial, rhubarb should be given a place in the garden where it will remain undisturbed for several years. Generally, gardeners segregate all their perennial vegetable plantings, such as asparagus, rhubarb and artichokes, confining them to one part of their plots. This is a good idea, for the culture, irrigation and seasonal care of those vegetables are somewhat the same.

As in the case of other perennials, one should prepare the soil carefully for planting. Rhubarb does best on a rich, well-drained soil, preferably one of medium texture. It is a heavy producer of vegetative matter—under good care the yield of stalks is tremendous. Therefore, it should be given the best in land and in plant food. One must remember that with perennial plantings, the initial preparation of the soil means even more than it does with annuals, as the crop remains in the soil for several years.

In the preparation for planting, provision should be made for irrigation, as this plant requires ample amounts of water, particularly during the harvesting season. The leaves of rhubarb are very large and give off large quantities of water by transpiration; the stalks are chiefly water. Rhubarb will do well under a soil moisture situation which would damage many other types of vegetables.

Although the planting season extends from the middle of October to spring, late fall planting is most desirable, as this gives the plants a chance to establish a rooting system during the winter months and to become ready for the spring "urge" in producing stalks. However, the first year, one should not attempt to take too many stalks from the plant, and at no time during the life of the plantings should all the leaves be taken at once. Remember, that as a perennial, the plant should go through its complete cycle to maintain the strength of the roots for production the following season.

Rhubarb is established by means of plants, or "roots," taken from established clumps of known varieties. It will not come true to seed.

There are several things that must be watched in planting so that a full stand is assured. Perhaps the most important is the placing of the plants in the soil. This should be done by hand and carefully watched.

For the home garden, only half a dozen or a dozen plants will be needed; with small farm plantings, mark out rows, making them six feet across. Then "spot" the placing of the plants. These should be set about four feet apart in the rows.

In planting, dig a hole about six inches across and deep enough so that when it is set and firmed down, the crown of the plant will be just level with the surface of the ground. Place the roots of the plant in this hole and firm the soil very carefully around it, leaving a basin at the top, about an inch deep, for the initial application of water. The idea is to keep soil from covering the crowns, as this is not conducive to best development. After the plants are set, additional water may be run down small furrows, drawn on either side of the row, about twelve inches from the plants.

As soon as they seem well established, subsequent applications of water should be given between the rows. Perhaps the best method, and one which encourages normal rooting, is to divide the space between rows into two wide, shallow furrows with a twelve-inch border between. In these furrows water can be run and all cultivation performed. Here, too, is the place for additional applications of fertilisers, particularly desirable when the planting is in heavy production.

We might discuss fertilization of the crop at this point. One large grower, who has several acres planted, recommends the scattering of ten pounds of manure per plant between rows, just before cultivation, two or three times during the year. He also uses some nitrogenous fertiliser immediately after each cutting, at the rate of one pound to every ten plants.

During the first year, the planting should be gone over with a hoe every few weeks, to keep down weeds which choke out the developing plants. Cultivation should be regular, too, with enough water given the plants to keep them in a thrifty-growing condition.

As to varieties, there is a wide range of opinion, and any specific recommendation made here will not be met with favor by every grower of rhubarb. The Cherry rhubarb seems to have made quite a "hit" with commercial growers during the past few years, and it is most commonly seen on the local markets and packed for shipment east.

Thinning Lettuce

Another request for information covers the handling of head lettuce, a request that comes up for answer on this page at least three or four times a year.

Newcomers from the Middle West and East, unaccustomed to the production of head lettuce, have a habit of sowing it in rows, then allowing it to develop without thinning. Obviously, no heads form; the plants produce excellent quality leaf lettuce.

When head lettuce is about two inches high, the plants should be thinned out to about eleven or twelve inches apart in the rows. If germination has been poor in some part of the plot, plants may be reset, and will do well. However, it is a good idea to cut back the foliage a bit before transplanting.

Vegetable Plantings

What can be planted now, as the colder season approaches?

Most newcomers believe that the planting season, as far as vegetables are concerned, is closed. This is far from true—many vegetables can and should go in at this time.

These include all of the so-called root crops—turnips, carrots, beets and radishes, and most of the leaf crops, such as lettuce, spinach and mustard. Both cauliflower and cabbage can be planted, and although a bit late, a planting of green onions can be made. It is the time for setting out all perennial vegetables, and as we have pointed out recently in these columns, a good time to establish a berry planting.

So there is much to do in the garden while waiting for Santa Claus to come.

These Monterey cypress border trees on Marshall Breeden's hillside site have often been topped. They average eight feet in height.

Small Farm Homes

Interest in the small farm home movement in Southern California is keen, according to the agricultural department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce. This department acts in an advisory way to newcomers who are interested in settling on lands in this section, as a part of its regular activity.

During the past two months, an increasing number of inquiries as to possibilities on small acreages have been before the organization, largely placed by those seeking such places as homes, while on employment elsewhere. Many of the requests for information came from elderly people in retirement, people who recognize the advantages of the small farm as a home place.

As a feature of the service of the agricultural department, several booklets, forming its "What the Newcomer Should Know" series, have been compiled for distribution on request. The latest of these, issued December 1, was a revision of the booklet on "Poultry and Pet Stock in Southern California." In a condensed and readable form, and presented in a conservative way, this pamphlet answers the many questions which confront the newcomer who plans to take up poultry raising, either as a business, as a source of incidental income, or, as is very often the case, as a hobby.

"Poultry and Pet Stock in Southern California" may be secured, free of charge, by addressing the agricultural department, Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, 1151 South Broadway, Los Angeles.

Cans filled with vegetables and prints when these are in season will not only reduce the grocery bill later, but help to maintain the family's health.

Treat 'Em Right

Healthy Garden-Planted Trees Want Only Proper Care

By Marshall Breeden

It is a mathematical certainty. If healthy cypress trees are garden-planted they will grow. If they are fertilized, irrigated and trimmed they will grow swifter. Thus it was with our border of more than 350 evergreen trees.

The soil in our hill-side yard is of heavy adobe. That is a splendid place for growing after things get established. It is hard, however, to get them going. Adobe, to be fertile, requires constant cultivation and ample irrigation. Our soil received both, that is why the trees have grown so rapidly we have had to top them several times.

The trees were planted in September, 1927. They came in flats and averaged twelve inches in height. With the exception of two Italian cypress, they are all Monterey. To make a Monterey be efficient it is wise to nip its top often for the first year or so. This nipping tends to make the tree spread out and grow bushy. After the first year nothing was done to the tops for several months. It was then necessary to clip about three feet from each tree; otherwise they would apparently have tried to reach the moon. From then on it became wise to saw them off every few months, yet always at a higher point. The results show abundantly.

Our trees have demonstrated that, properly planted and attended, they will grow most satisfactorily. This is just as true as is the fact that two times two equals four, not once but always, and it is true of other growing things also.

Oil Sprays Classified

A classification of citrus oil sprays is being made by the division of chemistry of the State Department of Agriculture for the convenience of grove owners and others interested in pest control. Oil sprays used in Southern California, the division declares, fall into five distinct groups according to their distillation tests, and these groups probably will be designated as light, light medium, medium, medium heavy, and heavy. The distillation test indicates more closely than others the actual effect the material has on insects. Confusion resulting from determining the quality of a spray by its chemical analysis will be avoided by this means, it is hoped.

Puncture Vine Attacked

One of the largest jobs of puncture vine eradication carried on in Los Angeles county this season was at Ross Field, Arcadia, which is expected to be the site of the equestrian section of the 1932 Olympic Games. Owing to the complicated control of the property, which is owned by the Federal government and used by the California National Guard and Arcadia Golf Club, it has been difficult to obtain proper authorization for the work, with the result that the puncture vine has flourished. Through co-operation of the National Guard, the county agricultural commissioner's office was able to function there this year, with excellent results.

Where Seeds Come From

THE SALINAS VALLEY FILLS MANY A SACK AND PRETTY PACKET

By Ross H. Gast

ONLY a few regions of the earth appear to be favorably situated for the production of crops of seed plants. Elements of climate and soil are very important in the cultivation of a crop where the factor of virility is all-important, and only rarely are these elements found in close enough harmony to allow the prosecution of this most profitable and necessary form to agriculture.

The coastal valleys of California have long been noted for their ability to produce seeds of high quality, crops that receive world distribution. Just as the delta lands of the little kingdom of the Netherlands are famous for their production of bulbs, so are our own lands noted for their crops of flower and vegetable seeds. Although seeds are cultivated up and down the coast between San Francisco and the Mexican border, at no point is the industry more centralized than at Salinas in Salinas Valley. Several of the nation's largest seed growers have extensive breeding grounds and trial plots there, as well as extensive acreages planted to the various crops. Gilroy, not far northeast of Salinas, is also an important section for seed production.

The Ferry-Morse Seed Company breeding grounds and trial gardens at Salinas are well known throughout the State for the important work conducted there toward the improvement of many of our domestic vegetables and flowers. Extending over a tract of more than seventy acres of intensively cultivated land, the scope of the company's operations may be judged when it is known that almost 10,000 different items of both flowers and vegetables are under investigation this year. This concern's growing operations on the coast and on the Delta cover hundreds of acres. Careful records are kept at the trial garden of every item, as to its purity, appearance and type, and the conditions under which it was grown. Every kind of vegetable and flower is represented.

Of particular interest is the organization's work in developing varieties of vegetables suitable for use by the shipping trade of the Southwest. Although the program has its selfish side, yet incalculable good has been done to California and Arizona trade through improved strains and varieties.

It's a machine age, but when it comes to picking out off-colored and otherwise objectionable seed, these girls get a job. Scene in the picking room of the Associated Seed Growers, Inc., plant at Salinas.

Another large seed-growing establishment at Salinas is that of the Associated Seed Growers, Inc., formerly the Everett B. Clark Seed Company. This company has a modern seed processing factory equipped with power-driven machinery. There are also forty-eight hand-picking mills, operated by as many women, where off-colored seeds from peas, beans and other plants are removed by what is known as the hand-picking process.

Waldo Rohnert of Gilroy grows 200 acres of seed lettuce of the New York type annually. From this acreage he harvests a crop of approximately 200,000 pounds. Regarding the seed business in California, he says:

"As to this New York type lettuce, the trade in the eastern States, Europe and Australia is increasing rapidly. In those distant lands the old New York special type is still the favorite strain used. Entirely different strains are used here on the Coast."

Cultural practices by which seeds are grown demand a large number of skilled handworkers and careful treatment to preserve purity. It is not the business of an amateur, as repeated trials have proven, for proficiency in growing high quality products only comes with years of experience. Reputations in the seed business are guarded with the care of a treasure, for a seedsman's stock in trade is made up, in large part, of the reputation he has with his customers. It is impossible to fake seed quality, for the good or bad seed is perceptible immediately in the growth of the succeeding crop. Growers and dealers have found, therefore, that high standards in their business pay dividends, and that economic loss is the reward for careless practices.

Seed growing is also conducted as a side line by many general farmers throughout the districts where the industry is successful. Often a crop of flower or vegetable seed can be harvested from the land before a fall crop of market lettuce is planted. By the judicious use of fertilizer in combination with this practice, it is possible to produce two crops.

WATER CONSERVATION PROJECT COMPLETE

By Edwin F. Lindenberger

REDLANDS.—Dedication ceremonies, late in November, of the diversion weir in the upper Santa Ana canyon marked the completion of a project to which the Water Conservation Association has looked forward for many years. It is one of the first steps toward the giant water conservation program for the Santa Ana basin, for which State aid has been contributed in a detailed survey, with recommendations for development.

The upper Santa Ana canyon is that part of the river in the San Bernardino mountains, its mouth being above East Highlands, near Redlands. Here the Southern California Edison has important power plants. In fact, the first plant of the company is at the site of the weir. The plant is still using the original dynamo, No. 1, installed by a Redlands group of men in the pioneer days of the use of electricity in this section. That group grew into the Southern California Edison Company in later years.

The new weir, financed by the combined fund from the counties of San Bernardino, Riverside and Orange, is a submerged type.

Mrs. K. F. M.—It is difficult to even hazzard a guess as to the reason why your Coreopsis lanceolata plants have not all bloomed. As you set them out in March, they ought to have bloomed last season. They like plenty of sun, which you say yours have had. They do best in a rich and dampish soil. Perhaps you did not give them sufficient moisture. And you might have been too generous with your fertilizer, overstimulating the growth of the plant and thereby taking away from bloom development. If you are going to try transplanting them, do it now. These flowers are such easy things to grow and so rampant in blooming that it is all the more strange you should get but two flowering plants out of a dozen. Second-year plants, especially here in California, tend to get woody and seldom bloom very well. I really think I'd just discard the plants you have and try a new lot.

L. K.—Since you have no facilities for a compost pit, it will do no harm to work in the dead leaves from your trees and shrubs, as these will serve to put humus into the soil after a fashion, and help aerate the ground about your plants. When leaves and other refuse from plants are ripened in a compost pit, the beneficial elements are much more readily available to plant life. There is a difference, as you suspect, between the various types of leaf-mold. Some trees produce a leaf-mold that is sharply acid in nature, some mold is subacid and some actually alkaline. It is well to know what type your plant requires. Begonias, camellias and gardenias, for instance, thrive on the acid type of soil. It is possible to buy the sort of leaf mold you need and it is cheap. This would be the simplest way of handling your problem.

As for fertilizer for your gardenia, nothing is better than well rotted cow-manure, with some commercial fertilizer now and then. Use a handful of the latter to a bushel of the manure. Gardenias need to be kept growing constantly and it needs a rich soil. However, if your soil is stiff, mix in some sharp sand. While the plant wants a moist soil at all times, it doesn't want it soggy. It helps to keep the soil sweet if charcoal is mixed in about the roots. The plant should be sprayed with the hose frequently, using the finest spray possible to the nozzle. This helps keep it free from the insect pests that it inclines to harbor.

I. K. V.—Your question, "What can be done to prevent camellias from dropping their buds before coming into full flower, or to keep the buds from turning brown" is one that many people ask. I've put this question to some of the nurserymen who grow these plants most successfully, yet have these troubles, too. They answer that it is either a case of too much water or not enough; too much plant food or not enough; or, as one suggested, Nature's own method of restraining a plant from overdoing the matter of bloom. This is not very helpful, I'll admit. I believe that it is highly important to water a camellia plant very thoroughly, several times a week, during the dry season and particularly in the hot summer months. Even if the plant is in shade, it feels the heat. It is also imperative to keep it well nourished—cow manure and bone meal, used as suggested in the case of gardenias. If the plant has sufficient vigor, built up through this careful watering and feeding program, it will be much less likely to drop its buds excessively. Cultivate frequently, at all seasons.

May is about the best month in the year for setting out gardenia plants. They should have time to establish themselves during the warm spring days, before the real heat comes on. Their buds will form then in time to give you bloom the first season. Plant in sunny location. For cultural suggestions see reply to L. K. Cinerarias should be set out at once, if you haven't them already in. I spoke of planting them for spring blooming several issues back.

Holiday Suggestions

helpful sketches, and a chapter on propagation. Incidentally, there are some tips on the subject of cutting roses from the bushes properly that will, I venture to say, surprise most gardeners. There is a right and a wrong way to cut the blooms, if one considers the future of the plant.

As for the cultural methods set forth, they are far better adapted to other portions of this country. We have a set of conditions that have to be given special consideration. The experienced California rose gardener, however, can take this book and winnow many a helpful idea even from the material which he must largely disregard. But aside from the chapter on culture, the book is one which will help anyone to know roses better and to grow them more effectively.

As for the book, "Cactus," I asked Howard Kegley of The Times staff, who has been following this hobby for several years, how the book impressed him, and he turned in the following opinion:

"One of the charming things about Dr. Houghton's book is that he is able to submerge the scientist's usual tendency to be technical, to the end that he actually has produced a cactus book for the beginner. Although few men know the scientific terms better than Dr. Houghton, we find him using them only where it is absolutely necessary, and in such a way that anyone with a sixth-grade education can understand every word in the book.

"He tells the beginner how to identify the various plants, how to collect, trade, plant and tend. He explains why the Old Man of The Desert cannot thrive in the cactus garden without a certain amount of lime, and how it helps another plant to slip a trowelful of clay down beside it. He explains why certain desert plants like the sun while others prefer shade, and gives us many helpful hints as to rooting and planting.

"Progressing to the matter of grafting, he points out that certain root stocks are the best, and tells what to graft upon them, and how to force them for early and prolific bloom. Valuable general instructions are given as to the proper way to establish a rock garden, large or small. Among other things, he warns the uninitiates of the pitfalls which frequently lurk in the "gift" succulent pot or bowl, explaining that most of them lack exterior drainage because they are in glazed containers, while others lack interior drainage, and some have been dipped in shellac to provide luster. He warns the public in friendly spirit that eventually the plants which have been so abused will die, the investment will be lost, and the recipient will be greatly disappointed.

"The book is a friendly, sympathetic and helpful treatise on a complicated phase of botany. The writer has come nearer reducing cactus culture to kindergarden terms than any modern writer on the subject."

It seems, from Mr. Kegley's reactions, as though the book should have a real value to established cactus "fans." Speaking from the standpoint of an out-and-out beginner in the cult, it is like manna from heaven to me. It clarifies so many things that have rather staggered me as regards cactus lore. Dr. Houghton gets a hearty vote of thanks from me for giving us this book.

These three books are new, but there are some others that, while off the press for some little time, are by no means old, and which are of great value and interest to flower lovers. These, too, might well be included in a gift list. There's that fascinating book by Dr. David Fairchild, "Exploring for Plants," which would charm anyone who is interested in travel, adventure and the manners and customs of other nations, to say nothing of the plant information it contains. I can't resist another mention of Ellison Hawk's, "Pioneers of Plant Study," just filled with interest from cover to cover. And there is a host of books written by recognized leaders in their line, on the culture of individual kinds of flowers, such as irises, gladioli, bulbs, dahlias and the like. If you have a friend with a hobby for one of these flowers, why not a book on that subject?

provided, of course, they are suitable to the particular garden they are intended for. There is a wonderful field to select from, surely, and at prices to meet any requirement.

Using Succulents Right

At the November meeting of the Cactus and Succulent Society, held in the public library at Pasadena, Charles Gibbs Adams, landscape architect, gave a talk on handling these plants suitably in creating garden effects that was filled with usable information. He also gave some delightfully humorous criticisms of our worst faults along these lines. This talk was particularly pertinent, for there is an ever-increasing use of cactus and other succulent plants and it is all too seldom that they are placed properly. It hardly seems credible, but Mr. Adams reminded us that the wonderful collection of these plants in the Huntington Gardens at San Marino was once set around the margin of the lake! That was, I hardly add, before the gardens came under the supervision of the eminent William Hertrich.

Commenting on one of his own experiences, Mr. Adams spoke of the aloe garden that he had made on the Kellogg estate near Pomona. After carefully spacing the Nature spaced the "trees" in this grove widely apart and anybody who is familiar with them would heartily approve of the idea of giving them plenty of room. This is Cereus giganteus, a giant cactus growing near Bard on the farm of Bert Maller, who stands beside the husky specimen.

Giants in the Land
California, Like Arizona, Has Its Great Cacti

By George B. Bowers

Californians have been a bit envious of Arizona for her groves of giant cacti, Cereus giganteus, or suguaro, but they need not be, for there exists in California a grove with several specimens quite as tall and handsome as some of those admired in Arizona.

It is with some misgivings that its location is revealed, but in view of the fact that in its midst lives a desert-dweller, Bert Maller, who appreciates its worth and zealously guards it from vandals, it now seems safe to say that it is nine miles north of the Laguna dam. The road leads through Bard north over the railroad bridge at the intake of the Imperial Valley canal. It joins the Yuma-El Centro Boulevard and is in fair condition for automobile travel.

The grove surrounding Mr. Maller's home is widely scattered and contains more than 100 plants. Notwithstanding his vigilance, vandals are appearing now and then. Only last month, some unknown sightseers cut one of the finest. In view of the fact that the number of the giants is so small, it has been suggested that the authorities of Imperial county should make provisions for their protection.

Good Blood Tells

FIVE GENERATIONS OF COWS PROVE IT

By H. H. Bolthoff

Good Rice Harvest

Prices Favorable for Profits to Wasco Growers

WASCO.—Harvesting the rice crop on the 1000-acre tract, thirteen miles north of Wasco, operated by Crawford and Naftzger of Los Angeles, is now well toward completion although it is evident the job is big enough to keep the large binders and threshing machines busy for sometime in December. George E. Miller, who is superintending the operations, and Roy L. McCabe, expert rice man in charge, say that the task will be completed before the holidays.

Between twenty-five and thirty bags of approximately 100 pounds each is the estimated yield per acre, according to Mr. McCabe. With the prices as they are, a nice profit will be realized by the owners. Besides threshing machines, six combination binders are in operation on the tract.

After draining the rice fields, which had been kept under water while the crop was maturing for 150 days, the harvesting commenced. The soil was then dried out enough so that the heavy machinery would not bog down. The combination binder cuts and binds the sheaves, which are stacked by hand in upright piles, five or six bunches to a shock. When thoroughly dried out, which requires about a week's time, the grain is threshed and the paddy rice is shipped to Sacramento, where it is milled.

Short grain rice of the Colora variety, No. 1 and No. 2 grade, propagated in California, is the kind grown on the Crawford-Naftzger ranch. Eight acres is producing the long-grain variety as an experiment although it is supposed to require a much hotter climate than is found in this valley. If sixty pounds of head rice are obtained from 100 pounds of paddy, the rice is graded as No. 1, while if only forty or fifty pounds result, it is graded No. 2.

Rice culture demands an abundance of water and rich mud which the plants may root. It also requires a clayey soil beneath to hold the water. California soil adapts itself readily to the culture of rice and the average production is larger here than in other States. More than 3,000,000 bags will be produced in California this year, it is estimated. California rice is shipped to twenty-seven countries more than 50 per cent going to Honolulu.

The by-product, rice straw, is baled on the ranch and sold to potteries for packing purposes. It has the advantage over other straws in that it does not break and crumble. It is also used in making paper. It brings $1 a ton.

At present the Pacific Coast Pulp and Paper Corporation has under construction a $5,000,000 rice straw paper factory at Richvale which will be ready for operation in March according to an announcement made by D. M. Thompson, president of the corporation. It is declared that rice straw paper is 20 per cent stronger than that made from wood pulp. It is used largely for wrapping.

An "Autumn Delicacy"

method of packing. The sloping-sided crate is still used and the bunches are packed in wet moss to keep the stems fresh in transit, but reducing the field heat down to where the temperature is about 40 to 45 degrees before going into the cars turns the trick in preserving them for a long journey ahead. The usual Pacific Express cars are used, with ice-filled bunkers.

Two companies, Jack Brothers and McBurney and the H. C. Weaver Company, are still after a number of years doing the merchandising for Imperial's growers.

The manner of growing for two crops does not differ from that for one, except that the tops are cut twice a year. Even so, between the two growing periods, strong and healthy plumes develop each time. These are never burned, as once was done, but are disked into the ground to make additional plant food. In fact, this disking to cut off the tops, and then to work them into the ground, is so thorough that one is surprised any plant survives. But just as soon as the furrows are made between the rows and the water gets to the crowns, they at once come to life and send up the fresh green shoots which we like so much to eat.

Rice-harvesting scenes on Crawford-Naftzger ranch, Wasco.

Cut by Hand

Cutting is all done by hand with a special curved knife, and the "grass" is hauled to the packing sheds on the individual ranches, where it is carefully gone over, graded as to size and tied in two-pound bunches, such as we see on the market. Standards are carefully set before each season, and growers are desirous of keeping to them because the "Imperial Long Green," as it is called, has made an enviable name for itself in the market.

The season usually begins about October 1 and runs at least until mid-November. This year with the warm fall weather, it lasted a little longer. Even so, though most of us in California may not have had it for our Thanksgiving dinner, the East, with its longer time of transit, was still seeing it in the market on turkey day. All of which is really turning seasons topsy-turvy; for asparagus used to be considered the very first spring crop. But we Americans enjoy the unusual, and the desert is making it its business to give us what we want.

Federal Expert Visits

J. R. Magnus, principal horticulturist in charge of fruit production work for the United States Department of Agriculture, recently visited the college of agriculture at Davis. He conferred with Prof. W. P. Tufts and others concerning possible means of co-operation between the university men and the Federal men, of whom twenty are working under Mr. Magnus's direction in California.

An Active County

Annual Riverside Report Shows Unique Features

RIVERSIDE.—The annual report of A. E. Bottel, Riverside county agricultural commissioner, stressed the fact that this county not only produces all crops grown in other parts of California but, in addition, has the largest commercial date planting in the New World, is the home of pure Acala cotton, and is the largest cherry-growing section in Southern California. The report includes the fact that citrus returns to Riverside county growers for the year ending November 1, 1930, totaled $11,625,-534, f.o.b.

That apiaries of the county, through burning of diseased materials, have been well cleaned up in combating infection, was shown by the report of C. A. Wurth, bee inspector. The percentage of infection among the apiaries from January 1 to October 31, 1930, is but 10, as against nearly 40 per cent in 1927.

Production of orange honey for the county totaled about 450,000 pounds, and that of sage and buckwheat honey, 2,700,000 pounds. A considerable amount of honey from desert plants, including mesquite, arrowweed, cotton and alfalfa, was produced in addition.

E. G. Tuthill, superintendent of rodent and pest control, reported 242,000 cryptolaemus ladybirds released from the county insectary during the year, for the biological control of mealy bug in citrus groves. The cost was $3074.34, or about 4-5 of a cent for each of the ladybirds. Because of the lessening menace from the citrus pest, it is planned to cut down production next year. Much work in the control of gophers, squirrels and other rodents was accomplished in the past year.

Alex Hansen, deputy commissioner, presented figures for the past nine years, showing fumigation of 5484 groves during that period for scale pests. The area covered included 68,695 acres, or 891,080 trees, on which 2,183,132 pounds of hydrocyanic gas were used. Expenditure for the nine years totaled $2,349,076.

Fumigation for citrus pests and diseases is the standard method in Riverside county, although some spraying is done as well.

Interstate shipments of trees and similar materials required inspection of 610,611 lots. Intercounty shipments inspected for the year were 1,393,561. Riverside county shipped out 1,961,294 lots during the year.

California First

There are in the United States 152 Holstein cows which have made 1000 or more pounds of butter fat in a year. While they are widely scattered, it is worthy of note that California leads other States with twenty-two. Minnesota comes second with sixteen, while Washington stands a close third, with fifteen.

Fair Shows Resources

Palo Verde Valley Surprises by Variety of Exhibits

BLYTHE.—Palo Verde Valley's second annual midwinter fair is over and hundreds of visitors have learned that this isolated desert oasis is important for many things in California's agricultural category. Despite the extremely bad weather over Southern California, more than 4000 persons visited the fair and the annual rodeo on November 20, 21, 22 and 24.

Outstanding in the exposition this year was the agricultural and grains display under the supervision of Louis Favret, former exhibit expert for the colonization department of the Canadian government. More than fifty important grains and grasses grown in this valley were used to form giant patterns that illustrated the rotation of crops. A field of milo maize was reconstructed on the floor of this exhibit by the ingenious Mr. Favret.

Riverside County Agricultural Commissioner A. E. Bottel said that the grain and hay exhibit was the best of its kind he had seen at any fair in California. Mrs. A. Sherman Hoyt, famed desert conservation champion, who has exhibited desert gardens at London, Boston and New York, asked that the grain exhibit be used in Los Angeles and Pasadena flower shows.

More than 3500 items were entered in the fair this year, and 750 premiums were distributed. Among the outstanding first prizes were; for cotton, H. M. Pope; alfalfa seed, hairy Peruvian, Henry Waggoner; baled alfalfa hay (dairy) Walter Freeman; dates, W. E. Mulkey; pecans, B. DeMeyer; grapefruit, Steve Ragsdale; best tom turkey in show, Mrs. L. E. Speer; best pen of chickens in show, Emil Neipp. First prize for threshed wheat went to Walter Scott; first for barley, to the Palo Verde Commercial Company; first for milo and hegira, to G. A. Harshman, and first for rye to Hartzell & Raab.

In the live-stock department, outstanding exhibits were found in the dairy cattle and hog sections. First-prize winners are as follows; heifers, Rene DuBreucq; cows, C. DeMeyer; bulls, Pete Hopman; calves, C. DeMeyer; Durocs with pigs, Pete Hopman; shoats, B. DeMeyer; Chester Whites, C. DeMeyer.

The fair departments included the agricultural building, with Louis Favret in charge; the women's building, under the management of Mrs. E. J. Smith and Mrs. S. C. Reames; poultry managed by S. M. Giddings and A. E. Campbell; a cotton display by V. C. Collier, and live stock under the supervision of C. DeMeyer. Tom Coughlin was chairman of the rodeo committee and J. J. Buller was arena director. Prizes aggregating $750 were awarded in the two-day rodeo.

Visitors to the fair learned that little Palo Verde Valley leads the State in plantings of paper-shell pecans with 250 acres; that it had a production of alfalfa seed amounting to 800,000 pounds harvested this year, and that it produced 11,000 bales of cotton in 1930 on 16,000 acres.

Music at the fair and rodeo this year was furnished by a Mexican orchestra. A cowboy parade preceded the rodeo and more than fifty visiting cowboys took part in the riding contests.

It's No Problem to Find Christmas Gifts for Garden Lovers

THERE are people for whom it is certainly difficult to select a suitable Christmas gift, but I can't see how anyone at all interested in gardens could come within that class. It seems to me, the main difficulty would be to arrive at a selection from among the great range of possibilities. If you've any friends who have a garden, or who love flowers—even if they have no place to garden in—there is something you can give them that fits in with this particular enthusiasm. And at prices that will fit into any budget.

It seems a very definite indication of the national character of our interest in gardens when manufacturers and artisans turn so much attention toward the production of so many things that carry this appeal. Just glance around the hardware stores and those shops that carry a line of garden seeds, commercial fertilizers, insecticides and the like, and you will see an array of familiar and new-fangled garden tools that will surprise you. There are devices for carrying on every phase of garden cultivation, and some of the newer ideas are extremely good. Many of them make for efficiency and labor-saving. Some of them are designed to save the gardener's back a bit. While entirely practical in aspect, these things do make very welcome gifts.

How about taking a peek into some of the wrought-iron studios where they make the most alluring wall-brackets for holding one or more potted plants, ornaments that add a charming touch to patio, garden wall and many another spot? They have ferneries, benches and other garden adjuncts that would bring joy to any gardener's heart. And then the pottery that is offered on every hand—glazed pots and jars and bowls in the most alluring shapes and colors, and the unglazed terra-cotta receptacles that are far more suitable to some types of plants, and usually much more merciful to the plants placed in them. Of course, bird baths, reflecting balls, benches and sundials all properly belong in the garden list.

Don't overlook the art and craft shops which offer these artistic and ever-so-convenient baskets which one carries into the garden when cutting flowers for household decoration. There are large ones, small ones and intermediate ones, those that are swung on the arm and those that are attached to a sharp, stout stake that can be thrust into the ground to bring the basket into the most convenient position possible. Any woman would delight in one of these. And those adorable garden stakes with brilliant, painted songsters perched atop them. Thrust into the flower beds here and there, they make a picturesque touch. And this by no means exhausts the possibilities offered in such shops. You can fill a long list there and not duplicate your purchases—and prices are astonishingly moderate.

Of course there is no end to the novelty plant containers offered with and without plants for the holiday season. Some of them are lovely and some of them look pretty awful to me. It is variety in taste, however, that makes this world interesting, and there ought to be something to meet anybody's idea of what is beautiful. One thing I noticed in a flower-shop window was a group of fine cyclamen plants loaded with rich red flowers placed in unusually handsome pots with matching saucers. They were glazed in soft dark tones of most pleasing design that blended with foliage effectively. The nice thing about this sort of present lies in the fact that the pot is a most usable gift which will remain after the plant has lived out its beauty. And it is a welcome change from the fancy mats that we've had swathed around gift plants for so many years.

Last, but by no means least, I want to remind you that plants for setting into the garden are always a joy to a garden lover.

Illumination through cleverly placed electric lights has made a sort of enchanted spot of Frank Lewin's garden in Hawthorne after dark.

Beautiful Garden

Careful Placing a Secret of One Man's Success

As an example of what intense cultivation can produce in the way of a garden on a small property, Frank Lewin's artistic creation at his Hawthorne home is one worth seeing. With only a good-sized city lot, he has created a spot filled with floral beauty at all seasons of the year, a place of luxuriant plant growth. By carefully placing his roses and selecting climbers, hedge types and bedding varieties, he has managed liberally to indulge his love for these particular flowers. At the same time, he has skillfully managed to handle a wide variety of plants, so that his graden knows no off season.

One thing Mr. Lewin believes in most heartily is that a California garden is meant to be practically lived in. Not satisfied with being able to enjoy his plants during daylight hours, he has cleverly placed electric lights so that they do not intrude on the eye but do illumine the garden, and much of his pleasure is had from being able to see his plants at night and to entertain his friends in this very lovely setting.

To adequately explain how Mr. Lewin has utilized every available space, it would take a carefully drawn diagram, with each plant numbered and a key to accompany it. The main thing is—it can be done.

Uncle Ab says that contentment is in the mind and not in the purse; but that a full purse helps.

More Suggestions on the Eternal Gift Problem of the Holidays

JUST in time to solve the gift problem for us in some instances, come some new books on horticultural subjects from the press of the Macmillan Company. These include a volume entitled "Hortus," by Dr. Liberty Hyde Bailey; "Roses," by F. F. Rockwell, an addition to the other garden handbooks by this author; and "Cactus," by Dr. A. D. Houghton, a book for the beginner in this field.

This new volume of Dr. Bailey's will prove a godsend to all those who work with plants, to the professional and amateur gardener, to nursery, landscape architect and student, for it is a dictionary of terms and names, a reference work in which the essence of botany, of culture and propagation is contained. It is as valuable in its particular sphere as is the Standard Dictionary, but it does not take the place of Dr. Bailey's Cyclopedia of Horticulture any more than the dictionary takes that of an encyclopedia. Since it has come into my hands I'm wondering how in the world I managed without it. This would be a gift par excellence for any friend who had an interest in horticulture.

F. F. Rockwell is too well known as a writer of delightfully readable and soundly informative books for the amateur gardener to need any commendation from me. His book dealing with roses is full of the very things you want to know, and home gardeners who find it confusing to differentiate between the various classes of roses, their distinctive growth habits, and their fitness for particular uses in the garden, will find this book a great help for, in addition to text that is clear and concise, there are sketches that supplement the explanations on these points. The chapters on soils and fertilizers are exceedingly valuable, and the necessary chemical terms are so handled as to create no difficulties on that score for any of us. There are the usual chapters on pruning and on insect and disease control, with more of those

FIVE GENERATIONS OF COWS PROVE IT

By H. H. Bushnell

SCHOOLMEN have been inclined to argue that environment is more important in life than heredity, but they find it hard to convince any live-stock breeder. Most of these have proofs to the contrary. Give the best of care and feeding to a scrub and you don't get much; but once you have great blood and breeding, you've got something to build on that makes a superstructure more valuable than your foundation.

Carl Williams, manager for the Pottenger Sanatorium farm at Monrovia, hasn't been interviewed on the matter of heredity versus environment, but he's operating on the heredity principle all right. He has had five generations of Mechthildes on the place. Mechthilde, for the sake of the uninformed in dairy nomenclature, is a family name of the Holstein breed.

In times past, one of the foundation cows of the Pottenger establishment proved to be an exceptional milker, and was selected for blood intensification. She was a Mechthilde. Her daughter produced 966 pounds of butter in a year of work; this second cow's daughter turned out 1008 pounds of butter as a 3-year-old and 1256 pounds of butter as a 4-year-old. The next animal in the line of descent had her beauty spoiled early in life through an accident. Her nose humps up and down to such an extent that she hardly looks like her family at all. However, without plastic surgery or face lifting, she produced 945 pounds of butter when she was two years of age and 1072 pounds as a 3-year-old. And she has a daughter that is coming along at a remarkable rate. As a 2-year-old heifer, she has 530 pounds of butter to her credit, and it looks as though this youngster will surpass the work of her forbears, give her enough time.

He's Proved It

Try and tell Carl Williams that heredity means nothing. Probably he would look pityingly at you and say nothing, on the assumption that words would be wasted on anybody who, in the face of the records of performance on the Pottenger farm, can't understand how absurd and ridiculous such a theory is. Five generations of Mechthildes, each one a little better than the one behind, and the result of scientific breeding for production through blood lines that are aimed at greater production, cinches the heredity argument so far as the Pottenger Holsteins are concerned.

Good work has been and is being done on the Pottenger farm. The Holsteins there have turned in six world's records in Class B, which amounts to all but one of the Class-B records that have been made in California.

And the farm doesn't specialize in a few good cows, to the exclusion of the rest. They're all pure-breds, all are emphasizing the same blood lines and all are producers. The herd average is 470 pounds; the 5-year average is 550 pounds. There are fifty-five cows in the herd, about forty of them being milked.

Most of the milk is utilized at the sanatorium itself, for Dr. F. M. Pottenger is one of the strongest advocates of milk in the diet that you can find in a day's journey. He regards milk as an essential—something for which there is no substitute and in place of which there's nothing "just as good." For the sick and for infants Dr. Pottenger is inclined to favor Holstein milk, because the fat globules are smaller and, he thinks, more easily assimilated. However, he isn't hidebound on breeds—it is, in his opinion largely a matter of personal preference.

It isn't to be assumed that Pottenger farm desn't believe in proper environment for cows. Good blood is the first essential, but it isn't all, by any means. You have to feed good cows and feed 'em right. You have to see that they are cared for and looked after. They have to have their vitamines and all the other things that human beings need to protect their health.

Naturally, there aren't any sick cows on a sanatorium farm. The herd is accredited for tuberculosis and blood tested for abortion. A germ isn't tolerated on the place. The best production blood, the most careful scrutiny to prevent disease from creeping in, and the best of feeding and care have combined to produce one of the really great herds of dairy cattle not only in Los Angeles county, but in the State—and you can go farther than that—take in still more territory—and not be wrong.

Pretty is as pretty does. This Holstein cow's real name is Mechthilde Pontiac Piebe, but she's known on the Pottenger Sanatorium Farm at Monrovia as "Pretty." Her nose was broken when she was a baby, but she produced 862 pounds of butter fat as a three-year-old, Class B, just the same, and she was the third in this herd to make a record of over 1000 pounds of butter in that class.

Picking a Sire

"Those who would like to know what should be considered in determining a good dairy herd sire will be interested in the words of I. W. Rubel and A. J. Cramer as set down in a recent University of Wisconsin circular. "Consider," they say, "the following: The breed, which should be the same as the cow herd's, since cross-breeding is difficult to carry on; type and individuality, which determine the sales value of both pure-breds and grades; pedigree, with special emphasis on production records; cost, which should not be stinted, even to paying twice the value of the best cow in the herd, since the sire is half of the future herd; progeny, which constitute the final and conclusive test of the sire."

Only $279 Per Acre DOWN

Will Set your Feet on this Pleasant Path to Peace, Prosperity and Contentment

IT IS a pleasing picture, isn't it? Yet it is just a typical Fontana back yard in a producing citrus grove . . . and only $279 per acre down will set your feet on this pleasant path to peace, prosperity and contentment, as a citrus grower.

Only $279 down and $9.70 per month, per acre, will buy a Marsh Seedless Grapefruit Grove, to be planted next Spring in Fontana's best Grapefruit Belt. You may buy as little as 2½ acres at this price, or as much acreage as you wish. These moderate payments cover water, fertilizer and cultural care for three years. Until your grove is ready to begin bearing, you have no other expense or responsibility. The fourth season may see a substantial yield of fruit. From the fifth year your grove should pay you a profit. In full production, well-managed Fontana Grapefruit Groves have grossed upwards of $800 per acre. Production costs should not exceed $150 per acre.

Buy Now; Build Later; Have a Home and a Living to Retire to Buy now, on easy payments. When your grove is in commercial production, caring for all overhead costs, buying itself, and paying you a profit beside, begin to think about building. Before a new decade rolls round, have a home and a delightful living to retire to. Say good-bye to the daily grind. Enjoy a life of leisure and freedom with no fears for the future.

Fontana is an established community, 25 years old. Grapefruit is Fontana's most profitable citrus crop, with more than twelve years' satisfactory experience back of it. Fontana is an ideal community in which to live. With the wholesome freedom of the country it combines all the advantages of the city. People of unlimited means select Fontana as a home-place purely because of its beauty and advantages of location and climate . . . and because there are no finer neighbors anywhere than in Fontana.

Let us figure with you on a grove that will meet your future income needs. Let us send you the attractive Fontana booklets that have furnished so many with a pleasing solution for their future problems. Mail the coupon below; or drive out to Fontana . . . a pleasant two hours' ride through the orange groves . . . and visit us at The Tower.

An Acre Partnership

WOMEN SUCCESSFULLY TACKLE BIG JOB

By Charles Barrett

TO take a rocky acre and make a successful small farm of it would tax the ingenuity of a strong man. When two little women undertake such a job and "get away with it," it is a matter for the worshipful attention of those who only wish for rural life, and never take the leap.

Ten years ago Miss Marie Frish and Miss Anna Souto, friends of two years' standing, became partners in adventure. Their acre was at Tujunga, they themselves were at Santa Barbara. A contractor cleared just a big enough space for their house, and built it. The rest of the land, when they came to take possession, was just rocks and brush, pristine California wilderness.

The Misses Frish and Souto fell to, and cleared the place by their own labor. They built most of the poultry houses themselves. Miss Frish became the poultryman of the partnership, Miss Souto the gardener and mason.

Miss Frish is the poultry expert.

Masonry has played a big part in the development of the place, for every year there is a new crop of rocks. The poultry yards are especially productive of these. They just seem to grow out of the surface, and have to be removed. The land lies on a slope. Rock walls have been judiciously placed as retainers of terraces. Miss Souto now is engaged in building thick dry rock walls along each border of the acre. The small rocks she carries in her hands, the larger ones are rolled into place. The walls are true and straight, and attractive in their solidity and strength.

The house is embowered in native shrubs, which require little care and water, the latter being rather expensive in Tujunga. The poultry yards are shaded by wild tobacco and trees. All the latter were put out by the owners of the place. Grapes and fruit trees bear abundantly, and Miss Souto has in the course of constrcuction an arbor for the grapes, which will add attractiveness to the back yard.

The head of the "poultry department," Miss Frish, is an expert, and this is on no less an authority than the word of David Lowe of San Fernando, well-known breeder of White Leghorns. She has to be an expert to make a go of poultry on an acre. The State university rather frowns on the use of places so small for hens. Yet she keeps 1000 birds in good condition on the little place, and has done so for ten years. She admits that the average place would probably encounter trouble. But in this connection her rocky porous hillside is a positive advantage, since it has good drainage and does not get muddy in winter.

Miss Frish buys chicks and keeps records on them as a group. These records show the percentage of lay from October 1 of the first year to the end of September of the second. The second year they are kept in the laying house without record, and their productive life is limited to two years. The owner, through the record kept during the pullet year, determines the source of her next batch of chicks to her own satisfaction, and declares that the information received from that source is well worth the slight extra effort necessary. The chicks are raised in gas-heated brooders.

A few birds of mixed lineage, Silver Gray Dorking and Rhode Island Red, are kept for table use. The Dorking blood makes for fine-grained meat, Miss Frish says.

The Leghorn layers are "pampered," and are expected to show an excellent return as a result. Sprouted barley, wet and dry mashes, and other edifying repasts are supplied. Lights are turned on at 4:30 a.m. during the season of shorter days. The lay is thus kept up, even in moulting time frequently averaging 40 per cent.

The vegetable garden goes a long way toward supplying the table, also. It is in Miss Souto's care, and produces abundantly.

The writer recalls that one set of books on good business spends considerable effort in stressing the "dangers and pitfalls" of partnerships, a form of business organization which has a tendency to fall apart in a mass of squabbles and litigation. Yet this feminine co-partnership goes serenely on, a little "commune" which has for its basis equality of effort and equality of return. Perhaps it is due to the common aim, an unselfish desire to succeed as a firm or group no matter what individual effort be involved.

Each of the little ladies dresses for the life of a farmer and shoulders her own part of the load. Each takes pleasure in her work. Miss Souto considers her rock wall making as recreation, a real pleasure created out of seeing the edifice rise and form where only scattered rocks rested before. Each one refers to the other as "my partner."

It is to be supposed that this kind of partnership is actually a better arrangement than would be two solitary souls each unsupported by the other, trying to make "ranches" of unpromising bits of hilly ground.

Although the Frish-Souto farm is attractive, especially when one knows of the unaided effort which has created it, its owners look into the future, to the time when it will be complete, with its arbor and rock walls and terraces. But it is likely that completion, to these two industrious ones, will always be just over the high hills, and that the finishing of one bit of work, one arbor or rock wall or whatever is on the program, will only bring more dreams of perfection, put into process of fulfillment by practical hard work.

Miss Souto is the mason of the Frish-Souto partnership. Here is some of her handiwork.

REBELS PAY WITH LIVES

Spain Executes Two Leaders

Firing Squad Called On for First Death Sentence of Kind in Half-Century

Foe to Twenty More Under Shadow, But Women Plead With King

MADRID (Spain) Dec. 14. (AP)—Two of the leaders of the Jaca revolt against the Spanish government were executed this morning and condemned to death by a military court were shot by a firing squad today.

The two rebels executed were Fermin Galan and Garcia Hernandez, both of whom had been given sentences for some time and were tried in an attempted revolt against the dictatorship of Primo De Rivera.

Two were former officers of the Spanish army but had been cashiered because of their activities. It was thus an officers' revolt, in which the civilians who were executed.

KILLED BY SQUAD

The executions were carried out shortly after 5 o'clock this morning when a squad of soldiers marched to the prison where the two were confined by order of the court-martial and after each volley of rifle fire had been given the coup de grace with a revolver.

OTHERS DOOMED

Twenty more rebels are under sentence of death, but it is not known whether they will actually be executed. It is believed that the sentences of many of those condemned to death will be commuted to imprisonment for life. Appeals have been pouring in from all parts of Spain from prominent individuals, from groups of individuals and from municipalities, asking that the lives of the condemned men be spared.

Catholic priest was present at the confession of Fermin Galan before the execution. It was the only request of the men for the ministrations of the priest. Gen. Salinas, Chief of the General Staff, Gen. Saliquet, Minister of War, and Gen. Berenguer, Minister of Marine, were present at the executions.

It is said that the Queen Mother has appealed to the King to pardon the rebels. Many appeals have been received from the Basques, the Catalonians and from the Socialists.
